CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND APPENDIX.

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

PART VI.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND APPENDIX.

[From June 15, 1874, to June 23, 1874.]

late captain Tenth United States Cavalry, an honorable discharge, to date the 7th day of June, 1870, having been received by the President on the 28th of May and not having been returned within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution had become a law without his approval.

The message also announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 384) for the benefit of the Louisville and Bardstown Turnpike Company.

THE BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That section 49 of said act be amended by striking out after the word "the," in line 5, the words "supreme courts," and inserting in lieu thereof "district courts;" and in line 6, after the word "States," inserting the words "subject to the general superintendence and jurisdiction conferred upon circuit courts by section 2 of said act."

And that the numbering of the sections be changed so as to correspond with the forgoing amendment.

And the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
GEO. G. WRIGHT,
A. G. THURMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
LYMAN TREMAIN,
BENJ. F. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like the chairman to explain how this report affects the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state that in substance, aside from mere verbal amendments of detail, the bill is as it passed the Senate with a modification as to voluntary bankruptcy, which I will state. As the bill passed the Senate, the voluntary bankrupt in order to obtain his discharge must pay 33 per cent. of the debts proved against him or have the assent of a majority of his creditors. Now it provides that the voluntary bankrupt, if he be otherwise entitled by honesty and fair dealing to be discharged at all, may obtain that discharge upon the payment of 30 per cent. of his debts or upon the assent of one-fourth in number and one-third in value of his creditors. This is the only substantial change.

The report was concurred in.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

CLOTHING FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. WEST. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to enable me to call up a bill that was laid over on Saturday in answer to an inquiry of mine in reference to the amount of clothing that was needed in the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. The chairman of the Military Committee not being able to answer my inquiry at that moment, I have since informed myself that there are four thousand soldiers in these homes, and very great injury may be done them by not passing the bill which has been passed by the House. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2359) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to reserve from sale ten thousand suits of old and disused Army uniform clothing, now in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and to transfer the same to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEST. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will my friend give way?

Mr. WEST. When the bill is once taken up, I shall be willing to give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. SCOTT. I gave notice that I would move to take up the bill to which I referred for the payment of awards made by the claims commissioners; but under the assurance given by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and with a desire to avoid a waste of time in a conflict about the order of business, I yield and hope the appropriation bill will be taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that immediately after the passage of the post-office bill I shall antagonize the river and harbor bill against any other bill proposed in this body.

Mr. WEST. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDERSON & WHITE.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask leave of the Senate to take up a little bill that I wanted to take up yesterday. It is the bill (S. No. 657) for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White. I have been away for a month, and I only ask a small indulgence in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read and the amendment of the Committee on Claims, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White, the sum of $6,385.54, in full of all claims of said Anderson & White, or either of them, against the Government of the United States, for cotton belonging to said firm, impressed for, and appropriated by, the authority of the Government of the United States to the defenses of Nashville, in August and September, 1862.

Mr. CONKLING. This was cotton used in the defenses of Nashville. How?

Mr. STEVENSON. Just taken and put in the fortifications.

Mr. CONKLING. Used as barricades, or in the fortifications, or used as armor on transports?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will state to the Senator that Mr. Anderson had so much cotton there, and the Government took so much of his cotton rendering him a receipt and promising to deliver it to him at a certain date. A board of commissioners was appointed to assess the damages, called by General Rousseau, and they assessed him this amount for his cotton, which was less than it cost him. The Committee on Claims, after duly investigating the subject, unanimously reported the bill reducing his claim to less than he paid for the cotton. If ever there was a claim of deserved merit, it seems to me this is one.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no member of this body whose request would make it more disagreeable to me than does the request of the Senator from Kentucky, to object to this or any other bill; but certainly the bill cannot pass without discussion, without explanation, without the reading of the report which I see accompanies the bill; and when the report shall be read, and the bill explained, it seems to me it will be a marvel yet, within all the precedents of the Senate, if cotton taken in the theater of war and used on the spot as fortifications, barricades, breast-works, barriers against shots actually flying in belligerent operations, is to be paid for by the Government of the United States or by the people of the United States because the armies of the United States thus stood behind this cotton, utilizing it as a barricade or fortification. I know of no principle announced in the Senate yet which has ever received the sanction of an understood vote which goes as far as that.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. CONKLING. A Senator near me wishes to be informed whether the cotton was sold afterward, and the money went into the Treasury.

Mr. STEVENSON. No; this cotton was entirely destroyed. The Government of the United States took a large quantity of cotton from this gentleman. He had a permit from the President of the United States, being a prominent administration man in Kentucky, to go and buy cotton. He went to Alabama and he bought cotton which was his property and paid for it, the bill of sale of which was before this committee, at thirty-nine cents per pound. In addition to that he undertook to transport it from Huntsville to Nashville on its way to New York. At Nashville an invasion of the city was apprehended, and the commanding general took his and other cotton for the use and object of making temporary barricades, giving to him a paper stating that he had taken his individual private cotton, and that he would return it to him. He did return a good deal of it, but fifty-odd bales were destroyed.

Mr. PRATT. Will my friend from Kentucky allow me to read the very stipulation which General Rousseau gave to the warehouseman in whose warehouse this cotton was taken at the time?

Captain Morton, of the Engineer Corps, is hereby authorized to take possession of it, (the cotton.) The proper receipts will be given for the cotton, and it will be restored at as early a day as possible. The owners are guaranteed against all losses except those which depend upon the fortunes of war.

Mr. CONKLING. How was this cotton destroyed if not by the fortunes of war?

Mr. PRATT. I will state that a large number of bales, three hundred I think, were taken at the time, and what this bill compensates Anderson and White for is the number of bales that were not restored to them. I do not remember just the exact number, but they were in the fortifications for some two months, and this is the deficit of cotton that was not restored to the owners.

Mr. CONKLING. The residue were rendered back under the stipulation.

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The more I hear of this the more I must object to the bill on its merits. If it is taken up now with the understanding that there is to be a discussion of the bill, the regard I have for my honorable friend from Kentucky will prevent my objecting to that; but the oath which rests upon me will prevent me ever assenting to the passage of this bill or any other involving this principle, until I am undeceived if indeed I be laboring under a delusion.

I recollect one time on the hustings, in a debate when a motion had been put forward in this direction, saying, and saying with a good deal of feeling, (and comments made upon it fastened it in my attention,) that the time would come when Jefferson Davis or some other man would claim of the United States compensation for cotton used by Grant as armor for his gun-boats when he ran the batteries at Vicksburgh; and it was regarded, addressed to a northern audience, as the very extravaganza of illustration. Now, as I understand, we have before us the case not of Jefferson Davis but of another claimant, as to whom personally I say nothing, who comes here presenting a stipulation under which a quantity of cotton was taken from a store-house, the title to the cotton being in him, the stipulation agreeing that that cotton should be rendered back to him except so far as it should be destroyed by the fortunes of war. Being used as a barricade, being used as a barrier between death in war and the soldiers who stood behind it, so many bales of it perished, were destroyed in the actual conflict of war, in the crash of battle as I think I heard some Senator say the other day; and now because all the cotton was rendered back save only that which by the fortunes of war (to which by the terms of the stipulation it was subject) was destroyed, this claimant comes in and asks the people of the United States to pay to him all that he found this cotton minus, owing to the fortunes of war.

I say, Mr. President, that upon the principle of this bill, not only may occur just as well what I supposed in the case referred to, but every man whose cord-wood, whose fence-rails were used as barricades, every man behind whose buildings and erections a company or an army of the United States ever stood shielded from the bullets that were flying, might come here as well as this claimant comes and say "We want compensation;" and when they came they would not fall, as it seems to me this gentleman falls, on the wrong side of that line drawn by a receipt or stipulation which expressly exempted the United States from liability for so much of this cotton as should perish by the casualties of war. I must therefore object to the consideration of this bill now, unless it is to be taken up with the understanding that a thorough discussion will be allowed upon it.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, it is now nearly half past five o'clock and I am satisfied this bill will not pass to-night. I ask the indulgence of the Senate—and I wish to say here that it is seldom I ask the indulgence of the Senate—to pass a bill which is No. 707 in the order of business.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am sorry to object, but as my bill is up I want it to fall, if it is to fall, by a direct vote.

Mr. SPENCER. I am satisfied that the bill I refer to will elicit no discussion. I am satisfied everybody in the Senate will see the great propriety of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has in substance moved that the post-office appropriation bill be laid aside informally for the purpose of considering the bill indicated by him. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. If that motion should not prevail the motion of the Senator from Alabama would be in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 21.

Mr. CHANDLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Pending that motion, as I see no time is to be saved and all is to be lost to-day if we go on with this bill, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York. Before submitting the motion to the Senate the Chair will ask indulgence of the Senate to dispose of business on his table.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the appropriation bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being by unanimous consent authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, Messrs. SARGENT, PRATT, and STOCKTON were appointed.

ANDERSON & WRIGHT.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a question of order. Was not the bill moved by me taken up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not.

Mr. STEVENSON. What was the vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by division was 25 in the affirmative and 21 in the negative. Thereupon the yeas and nays were demanded, and pending the call of the roll the Senator from New York moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and thereupon the Chair asked indulgence to dispose of the business on his table.

Mr. STEVENSON. What will be the condition of this bill if the Senate should go into executive session now?

Mr. CONKLING. It would be like every other bill on the Calendar.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now I ask the Senate as a matter of courtesy to me (and I have never refused it to anybody) not to let a measure in which one of my constituents is personally interested be killed by indirection. I have no objection to any Senator debating it; but when he has debated it and put it to a vote and failed, I object to his attempting to kill it by indirection. Whether this bill is killed or not is a matter of no moment to me compared with the respect which I think I have a right to ask. I surely ought not to be treated in this style. I therefore hope——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the Senate as a personal favor to me will allow the vote to be taken whether this bill shall be taken up or not.

Mr. CONKLING. I withdraw the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business. I do it in part because I see my honorable friend from Kentucky has some feeling on this subject and in part because he has placed me in a very false position, and I want to be allowed to occupy a moment in relieving myself.

The Senator speaks as if my motion to go into executive session was in some sort a device or contrivance by which the Senator himself or the bill to which his motion relates was to be put in a worse position than it was before. Not at all. The bill stands upon the Calendar. The Senator moves to take it up. That motion is in order to-morrow morning; it is in order every moment when the Senate is in session just as much as it is now. Inasmuch as we have reached now half after five o'clock the Senate will adjourn very soon, and it is obvious that the bill will be debated, so that it will go over in any event. I did not understand until my honorable friend made the remark he did that I was inflicting any injury upon him or upon his bill by asking the Senate to dispose of some executive matters which are on the table to-day, knowing that even if he succeeded in having the bill taken up it would go over until to-morrow and he would then be compelled to try the issue as he will be in any event. However, I have too much regard for the Senator from Kentucky to be willing, whether I see the reasonableness of his position or not, to seem to refuse any request which he makes of me; and therefore, although I am opposed to taking up the bill and although I shall insist upon discussing it after it is taken up and shall vote against it unless I misunderstand the nature of the case, I withdraw the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WEST. In yielding to the Senator from Kentucky to bring the bill in question before the Senate, I was apprised and understood from him that it would provoke no debate whatever. Now I shall be under the necessity, under the usage of the Senate, to insist upon the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill for the reason that if the Senator's bill goes over until to-morrow the post-office appropriation bill will be again shut out. Now, if the Senate is willing to sit here to-night and finish this bill I cannot object; but in case of an adjournment, on the proposition to adjourn I shall again be obliged to insist on taking up the post-office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana can, before the adjournment, call for the regular order, which will place the post-office appropriation bill before the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understood the Senator from Louisiana did not propose to take up the post-office bill this evening.

Mr. WEST. The bill is up, but I yielded to the Senator temporarily to allow him to bring up a bill that I understood would not provoke debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky to allow me to call up a bill in order to keep alive some appropriations made for public buildings and grounds.

Mr. STEVENSON. Just let the roll-call proceed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 26.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 31, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Boreman, Buckingham, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Pratt, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Tipton, Wadleigh, and Windom—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Spencer, Washburn, and Wright—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Brownlow, Cameron, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Ramsey, Robertson, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, Thurman, and West—30.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 657) for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for a reading of the report in that case.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would suggest now since the bill is taken up that we go into executive session.

Mr. STEVENSON. No; let the report be read; it is not very long.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WEST. Before that motion is put I shall insist on recalling the post-office appropriation bill. I cannot consent to have a regular appropriation bill shut out by a proposition to interject a bill that it was understood would not take any time.

Mr. STEVENSON. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations told me that he did not propose to go on with the appropriation bill to-night. He left here telling me it would not be done, and I shall not interfere with the Senator to-morrow.

Mr. WEST. Then it is understood that whatever may be the action of the Senate in this case this evening, it will not interfere with the appropriation bill to morrow.

Mr. STEVENSON. It will not.

Mr. WEST. All right.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall only ask the Senate and my friend to give me a fair chance on this bill. If a majority of the Senate is opposed to it, I yield of course; but I do ask them, whether opposed to it or not, to give me a fair vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks that there may be unanimous consent that at the expiration of the morning hour to-morrow the post-office appropriation bill shall be considered as the unfinished business. The Chair makes this statement having as he fears led the Senator from Louisiana into a mistake by saying that he could call up the appropriation bill at any time before the adjournment. The Chair is of the opinion that after the vote by yeas and nays taking up this bill the post-office bill is postponed. Is there objection to unanimous consent that the post-office appropriation bill be considered the unfinished business for to-morrow? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. GOLDTHWAITE, from the Committee on Claims, on the 3d of April last. After the reading had proceeded for twenty-five minutes,

Mr. CONKLING. Having called for the reading of this report which I did in the hope of its coming to the knowledge of the Senate, not to impose upon the Secretary a labor and not to occupy time, I call attention to the fact that, as I anticipated when the Senator from Kentucky insisted at twenty minutes to six o'clock upon going on with this bill, we now having reached five or ten minutes after the dinner hour of nearly every Senator here, we have no quorum and nothing like a quorum in the Chamber. I submit to the Senator from Kentucky whether it is worth while to compel those of us to stay who do not feel at liberty to go away, to proceed with a bill which whenever it comes to be acted upon favorably, if it shall, will certainly first be considered in the presence of a quorum of the Senate? The Secretary is performing a labor which is comparatively of no use, and we are sitting here losing our dinners, which would be a very small matter if we were accomplishing any purpose; and I submit to the Senator from Kentucky that to stay here himself and keep us here, if as I think he does not advance one step, one inch in the consideration of his bill, is rather a needless piece of martyrdom. I call attention to it in order that the Senator from Kentucky may take notice of it, and also in order that he may take notice that under the rules of the Senate business cannot proceed without a quorum; and I think that if the Presiding Officer will look about he will see that dinner has prevailed against even my honorable friend from Kentucky whom I regard as one of the most enticing not to say one of the most seductive men I ever met, but even in the presence of his appeal men who have had nothing to eat since breakfast have gone off to get their dinners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Kentucky insist upon concluding the reading of the report?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not insist upon anything. I am learning something every day. I have seen courtesies extended again and again, and I know they are looked for. Now, while I thank the Senate for taking up this bill—and I do not mean to thank them without feeling a deep and grateful sense of the kindness shown to me, a courtesy which I hope I never shall deny to any Senator, but which has been so rudely on some sides denied to me to-day—I now yield. My friend from New York has accomplished the purpose he desires. While I am thankful to all the Senators who have remained, I now withdraw my request and let the case go over.

Mr. ALCORN. Do I understand that there is not a quorum present? I have not seen that developed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing has taken place to show that there is not a quorum. The reading of the report will be proceeded with if no motion be made.

Mr. CONKLING. In view of the last remark of the Senator from Kentucky, as he seems, despite of all the ineffectual efforts I have made to oblige him——

Mr. ALCORN. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I rise to a question of order. My point of order is that there is no quorum present in the Senate and I ask the Presiding Officer under the rule to ascertain that fact to the end that we may proceed or not, as the case may be. I thought I understood something about courtesy; but I do not feel bound to stay here when I have had no food since early morning, unless it is going to be of some use to somebody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under the rules of the Senate business cannot commence in the morning until the Chair has ascertained in some way satisfactory to himself that there is a quorum present; but after business has commenced a quorum is presumed to be here until some proceeding is taken which shows the contrary. The Senator from New York can ask for a call of the Senate which will disclose the fact.

Mr. CONKLING. I can object to the further consideration of the report, move that it be dispensed with, and call for a division on that question. If put to that, I will do it.

Mr. ALCORN. I rise to a point of order. I having the floor I insist that that is not a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York rose to state a point of order, and was in order in doing so. The Senator from Mississippi now has the floor.

Mr. ALCORN. And upon that announcement I desire to trespass upon the patience of the Senate with the suggestion that although we may not have had our dinners—and I am sure I am in that category—still we owe it perhaps to the people that we should exercise on occasions like this some patience with the men who clamor for what they conceive to be their right in making a demand on the Government for that which they declare to be due them for spoliations of their property made while the war was going on. As I see this bill is to be debated, I desire to offer a remark on the subject——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the Senator from Mississippi raises a point of order he is out of order. The pending business is the reading of the report.

Mr. ALCORN. I moved that the reading be dispensed with, and I understood I had the consent of the Senate that that should be done, and that I had the floor upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may have got some consent from his fellows, but the Chair has heard nothing about it. Does the Senator make a motion that the further reading be dispensed with?

Mr. ALCORN. I did make that motion.

Mr. CONKLING. On that motion I demand a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. ALCORN. That motion to dispense with the further reading is debatable, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the motion made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. ALCORN. Upon that I desire to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The Senate has ordered the reading of this report. The reading has proceeded for some time. The Senator can now move to dispense with it, but that question must be decided without debate.

Mr. ALCORN. I make that motion.

Mr. CONKLING. On that motion I demand a division.
Mr. ALCORN. I withdraw the motion.
Mr. CONKLING. I renew the motion, and demand a division.
Mr. SCOTT. Is a motion to adjourn in order?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not while the Senate is dividing on this motion to dispense with the further reading of the report.
The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 11, noes 16; no quorum voting.
Mr. STEVENSON. I am exceedingly obliged to the friends who have manifested their regard for me, and I am unwilling to keep them here longer. I move, therefore, that the Senate do now adjourn.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and fourteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 15, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal, but before concluding,
Mr. GARFIELD asked unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.
No objection was made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill.
Mr. DURHAM. I rise to make a privileged report from a committee of conference.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will receive the report of the committee of conference.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS COMPANY.

Mr. DURHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3265) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:
That the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to the bill of the House with sundry amendments, as follows:
In line 10, section 1, strike out the words "said loans" and insert in lieu thereof "money loaned thereon."
In line 12, section 1, after "keep," insert the words "the buildings upon."
In line 13, section 1, strike out "its" and insert "their."
In section 3, line 4, strike out the words "Comptroller of the Currency" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."
Strike out all of section 5 after "years" in line 15.
Section 7, line 2, strike out the word "wind" and insert "close."
Section 7, line 3, after "men" insert the words "not connected with the previous management of the institution and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."
Section 7, line 6, strike out the word "wind" and insert "close."
Section 7, line 25, after "company" insert "for the purposes of this act."
Section 7, line 29, strike out "winding" and insert "closing."
Section 7, line 37, after "pro rata" insert "distribution."
Add the following as an additional section:
SEC. 8. That from and after the passage of this act, and until the 1st day of July, 1875, all the deposits made in said trust company shall be held by the trustees of said company as special deposits, and any investments made of said deposits shall be made and held for the use and benefit of said depositors only; and it shall be the duty of said trustees on or before the 1st day of July, 1875, to make a full and complete statement of all the assets and liabilities of said company and lay the same before the Secretary of the Treasury, and if said Secretary and the trustees shall at that time, after investigating the condition of said company, believe the same to be solvent, then the trustees and said Secretary shall issue an order declaring that thereafter all deposits shall be general; but said order shall in no wise affect the special deposits unless said depositors shall in writing consent that said special deposits shall become general deposits. But if the Secretary and trustees of said company shall on the 1st day of July, 1875, after the examination aforesaid, doubt the propriety of making the deposits thereafter general, then the deposits made shall still be special until the 1st day of July, 1876, or until the said Secretary and trustees deem it prudent to make said deposits general.
And the House agree to the same.

M. J. DURHAM,
C. L. MERRIAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHERMAN,
JOHN SCOTT,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BROMBERG. I rise to a question of order. Is this a Senate bill to be taken up and passed now?
The SPEAKER. It is the report of a committee of conference, and the only question before the House is upon agreeing to the report.
Mr. BROMBERG. Is this question debatable?
The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] yields for that purpose.
Mr. DURHAM. I do not yield; I call for the previous question.
The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.
Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. DAWES. I usk unanimous consent to submit at this time resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in regard to revision of the revenue laws, and I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and printed in the RECORD.
No objection was made, and it was so ordered.
The resolutions were as follows:

At the monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commeree, held June 4, 1874, Hon. William E. Dodge, president, in the chair, the following resolutions offered by Mr. John Austin Stevens, jr., were unanimously adopted:
Resolved, That the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States are earnestly requested to direct the holding of sessions, during the coming recess, of their respective Finance and Ways and Means Committees, for the revision of the revenue laws, in order that while the amount of revenue now collected shall not be diminished, the collection of the same may be simplified by a change from ad valorem to specific duties wherever practicable, and by such alterations in the classification of merchandise as may be found desirable.
Resolved, That a special committee of five be, and is hereby, instructed to consult with the Boards of Trade of Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore as to the best manner of arriving at such change in the revenue laws, and for the devising of a complete revised tariff for submission to the before-named committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, should Congress in its wisdom see fit to direct their session.

President.

GEORGE WILSON,
Secretary.
NEW YORK, June 13, 1874.

PENSION APPPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the pension appropriation bill may be disagreed to, and that a conference with the Senate be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.
There being no objection, it was so ordered.
The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. O'NEILL, Mr. RUSK, and Mr. WELLS as the committee of conference on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the miscellaneous appropriation bill. If there be no objection I am willing, however, to yield to gentlemen who wish to ask unanimous consent upon matters that will occasion no debate.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3676) to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WRITS OF ERROR IN CRIMINAL CAUSES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3677) to provide for writs of error in certain criminal causes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

VOTE ON CURRENCY REPORT.

Mr. FIELD. Upon the vote taken on Saturday last upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the currency question I was paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. FREEMAN. If he had been present he would have voted "ay," and I should have voted "no."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:
An act (S. No. 228) for the relief of Bigler, Young & Co.; and
An act (S. No. 563) for the relief of John M. McPike.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.
The question being taken on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD, that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the special order, the motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 15, 1875, and for other purposes.
Mr. KELLOGG. I offer an amendment to come in after the amendment adopted on Saturday last upon motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] My amendment is the latter part of the amendment offered on that day by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the officer at the head of each of the Executive Departments at Washington to prescribe and publish rules for ascertaining the qualifications of applicants for appointments at his disposal or made under his authority, to make such appointments only from candidates who have the qualifications of honesty, efficiency, and fidelity, and not as rewards for mere party zeal, giving preference only to those who have the additional qualification of an honorable record in the military or naval service of the United States; and it shall be his further duty to make such appointments as equitably as possible from qualified candidates presenting themselves from the several States and with reference to their population; and upon the removal of any appointee the reason for such removal shall be stated on the records of the Department where the service was rendered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the precise words embraced in this amendment were stricken out on Saturday by a vote of the committee, and it is not in order to move to insert them.

Mr. KELLOGG. They were not stricken out by order of the committee; but the gentleman from Massachusetts took them out of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa and inserted the other portion as a modification of his own amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the words were stricken out by order of the committee, the point is well taken.

Mr. GARFIELD. But as I understand the motion of the gentle- from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was to strike out and insert. That was an indivisible motion. The motion of the gentleman from Connecticut is to add what he has presented.

Mr. KELLOGG. Simply to add the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GARFIELD. Hence the proposition comes in a different form.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. KELLOGG. I now call for the reading of the words in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that are proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

"And it shall be the duty of the officer at the head of each of the Executive Departments at Washington to prescribe and publish rules for ascertaining the qualifications of applicants for appointments at his disposal or made under his authority, to make such appointments only from candidates who have the qualifications of honesty, efficiency, and fidelity, and not as rewards for mere party zeal, giving preference only to those who have the additional qualification of an honorable record in the military or naval service of the United States. And it shall be his further duty to make such appointments as equitably as possible from qualified candidates presenting themselves from the several congressional districts and with reference to their population, and upon the removal of any appointee the reason for such removal shall be stated on the records of the Department where the service was rendered."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the words of the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] are not precisely the same as those struck out on Saturday.

Mr. KELLOGG. In my amendment the word "States" is substituted for "congressional districts."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order upon the statement of the Clerk that the words are not the same.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. KELLOGG] by striking out "States" and inserting "congressional districts."

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is impossible to make the distribution in that way. There are not enough appointments in some of the Departments to go around among the congressional districts.

The amendment of Mr. STARKWEATHER was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KELLOGG as amended, there were—ayes 84, noes 52; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 58.

So the amendment of Mr. KELLOGG, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert in the amendment just adopted, after the words "military or naval services of the United States," these words "or the widow, wife, daughter, sister, or mother of such soldier or sailor."

Mr. KELLOGG. We have not changed that part of the amendment as originally offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But I have the right to offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I move the following, to come in as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the proper accounting officers be, and hereby are, authorized and required, in the settlement of all accounts for the services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, between the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work for all such laborers, workmen, and mechanics, and the date of the passage of this act, to settle and pay for the same, without reduction on account of reduction of hours of labor by said act, when it shall be made to appear that such was the sole cause of the reduction of wages, and a sufficient sum for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in order to enable said officers to pay to the laborers, workmen, and mechanics mentioned in said act of June 25, 1868, the full compensation of a day's wages for each and every eight hours, labor performed without evasion or subterfuge.

Mr. ROBBINS. Where does that come in?

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved as an additional section to come in after the first section.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I should like to hear that amendment read again, as it occurs to me it is open to the point of order that it is in contravention to existing law.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. From the reading of the amendment it occurs to me it is liable to the point of order. It provides for paying the persons named according to a different law and by a different rule from that which was in force at the time the work was performed. It is to that extent new legislation. In other words, Mr. Chairman, there is no law providing for the payment of these workmen on the terms and according to the provisions specified in the amendment moved by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Before the Chair decides the point of order, I wish to say a word or two. When the act of May 2, 1872, was moved in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union by yourself, Mr. Chairman, a question of order was then raised. This amendment is in substance the same as the law of May 2, 1872, which is on this very same subject. The question of order was raised by Mr. Farnsworth, of Illinois, with Mr. Stevenson in the chair, and as will be seen by the Globe of the Forty-second Congress, page 1481, it was then decided to be a germane amendment to the deficiency bill which was then under consideration.

I looked up the whole matter before attempting to offer this amendment in Committee of the Whole, and had it been liable to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Vermont, I would have in the House moved to suspend the rules in order to obtain the privilege of offering it as an amendment to this bill in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Vermont to state the law which this amendment proposes to amend or change.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. These workmen were employed when a given law was under operation and it is now proposed to pay them according to a different rule and a different law. Mr. Chairman, it is like a proposition to be put into this bill to pay the President of the United States a larger sum of money for his last year's salary than what was provided at that time by law. The amendment is not in accordance with any existing law, and is therefore liable to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Vermont refer to the law which this amendment proposes to change?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is for the gentleman from Kansas to refer to the law which makes this amendment in order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; you have made the point of order and you ought to state the law which this amendment proposes to change.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is for the gentleman from Kansas to point out the law for it as he has moved the amendment. I raise the point of order that there is no law authorizing this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont raises the point of order that this is not authorized by any existing law. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. The reason for this amendment which I move to this bill is this: the law passed on the 2d of May, 1872, was for the compensation of these laborers in order to cover the period between the 25th of June, 1868, to the 19th of May, 1869, the latter being the date of the issuance of the President's proclamation. It was undoubtedly supposed when Congress passed the law of the 25th of June, 1868, that it would be respected by the administrative and ministerial officers of the Government, but it was on the contrary defied, and the matter was accordingly brought to the attention of the Executive, who performed the extraordinary act of issuing that proclamation which is familiar to us all, of the 19th of May, 1869, enforcing the fact upon all the administrative and ministerial officers of the Government that they must respect that law as the law of the land. It was supposed on the part of the House and of Congress in 1872 that the eight-hour law had been obeyed and respected after the issuance of the President's proclamation. But that was a mistake. On the contrary the fact is patent to everybody, that notwithstanding the law of the 25th of June, 1868, and notwithstanding the President's proclamation of the 19th of May, 1869, this law has been constantly and persistently defied by a large number of ministerial officers of the Government down to the 1st of October, 1872.

These men have a claim against the Government for two hours' extra labor which they have performed each day between the date of the passage of this act and when it became the law of the land up to the time when it began to be respected throughout all the departments of the Government. They have as good a claim for that service which they rendered after the 19th of May, 1869, down to October 1, 1872, as they have for the service which they rendered between the 25th of June, 1868, and the 19th of May, 1872.

The proof that they did render that service is overwhelming, and they have the right to compensation for it. I introduced at an early period of the session a bill on this subject, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, but in reference to which no report has been made. I also urged this amendment before the Committee on Appropriations, and sought to have it reported with this bill. Its justice no one can deny. In my own district, at Fort Leavenworth, a large number of men who went on working in this way, working two hours extra each day, will be compelled to submit their claims to the Court of Claims if this amendment is not adopted to this bill, and they ought to be saved any such expense and vexation, for they are poor laboring men and are not able to stand such expense, and they ought not to be put to any such additional outlay. I hope the committee will not refuse them this simple meed of justice here and now.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. If the amendment is adopted how much will it increase the indebtedness of the Government?

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. From correspondence I have had with the Third Auditor, I believe it would increase the indebtedness of the Government to the extent of about $600,000.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It would not increase the indebtedness of the Government at all.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Yes; I correct my statement; it would not increase the indebtedness of the Government one cent, because this is due to these people this day; but it would settle a claim that is now unadjusted against the Government of about $600,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided, The law making eight hours a legal working day for the employés of the United States be hereby repealed.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I raise the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is germane to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] to yield to me to allow me to complete my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. FIELD. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "performed" insert "by such laborers, including teamsters and watchmen."

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I make the point of order that that is new legislation and as such will defeat this amendment, else I would be happy to admit it as a just claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COBB, of Kansas, there were ayes 28, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SESSIONS. I offer the following amendment:

After line 1219 insert the following:

That the provisions contained in the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes," limiting the compensation to be allowed for the disbursement of moneys appropriated for the construction of any public building was intended and shall be deemed and held to limit the compensation to be allowed to any disbursing officer who disburses moneys appropriated for and expended in the construction of any public building as aforesaid, to ½ of 1 per cent. for said services.

Mr. BURCHARD. I make the point of order on that amendment that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am willing to withdraw the point of order long enough to allow the gentleman to state his intention in offering it.

Mr. CONGER. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

The Clerk commenced the reading of section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the following sums be appropriated and paid to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, being arrears of interest due to said tribe, as follows:

For this amount, being the interest on $66,666.66⅔, 5¼ per cent. bonds of the State of Tennessee, from January 26, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $19,010.25.

For this amount, being the interest on $616,000, 6 per cent. bonds of the State of Tennessee, from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $203,280.

Mr. CONGER. For the purpose of having some explanation of the clause just read, I move to strike it out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that this is new legislation. The clause provides for an appropriation not authorized by existing law.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to be heard on the point of order. The Government is indebted to these Indians under the treaty of 1832 for certain moneys. By that treaty those moneys were paid over to the United States; and these are trust funds now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to these Indians. We have been every year appropriating in our regular appropriation bills the interest.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman say that this is in pursuance of a treaty?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I do not. I say that the money came into the Treasury by virtue of a treaty, and being in the Treasury we appropriate by virtue of law. The Government agreed to take this money and keep it on trust for the Indians. This is a trust fund in our hands; it is property in our hands belonging to these Indians. It is not given to them by virtue of any treaty. These are moneys which we appropriate every year in our regular appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Before the point of order is overruled I desire to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts briefly on the point of order as he has heard the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This very section provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reimburse the United States in the sum of $24,000, by transfer from funds in the Treasury belonging to the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Wea, and Piankeshaw Indians, now to their credit, under the act approved July 12, 1862.

The CHAIRMAN. What the gentleman is reading has not yet come before the committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, sir, here is an appropriation, being the interest on $66,666 of certain bonds of the State of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Iowa or the Chair will point out any law by which as matters stand at present the United States are bound to pay interest on Tennessee bonds without new legislation, I should like to know it. I have got a few. There is no law authorizing it which has yet been shown, nor is there any. It is said that there are trust funds in the Treasury. Is there any evidence of that before the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes the statement of the gentleman from Iowa. Otherwise the Chair is not advised.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I beg the Chair's pardon; that will hardly do. There is nothing now to show that the United States owes this money.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I desire to raise the point of order as to the whole section; but I do not wish to do it until gentlemen have made their points of order on the particular clauses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] states that this is a fund held by the United States in trust for these Indians to pay over to them year after year. Does the Chair correctly understand the gentleman?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This goes back twelve years.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Iowa is correct in his statement of this matter, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to a point of order that goes deeper than this. I submit that the whole section is out of order under the rules of the House, and has no place in this bill. This appropriation, if it has any merit in it, is to carry into effect an existing treaty with these Indians, and it should be put in an Indian appropriation bill. If put in here it is subject to a point of order exactly as the other section following this would have been had it not been made in order by a suspension of the rules. I ask the Clerk to read the clause which I have marked of Rule 76.

The Clerk read as follows:

In preparing bills of appropriations for other objects the Committee on Appropriations shall not include appropriations for carrying into effect treaties made by the United States; and where an appropriation bill shall be referred to them for their consideration which contains appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect, and for other objects, they shall propose such amendments as shall prevent appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect being included in the same bill with appropriations for other objects.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if there is any other authority for this appropriation than a treaty?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. There is no other authority, but we have the funds in our hands.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; we have not; that is the trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. By virtue of a treaty?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. We received them by virtue of a treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the same point of order on the preceding clause of this section.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I raised it on that clause in the beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. Not until after the next clause was read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, yes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I waited to raise it as to the whole section, until gentlemen had a chance to raise any points they chose as to the particular clauses. Of course I had a right to wait until the whole section was read. It is a distinctive matter in relation to one tribe of Indians under one treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Maine is too late as to the first paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I raised the point of order on the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That was a different point of order, which was overruled.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, I raised precisely the same point, and you took the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that it was in order.

Mr. SPEER. What is the effect of the Chair's ruling? Is the whole section struck out?

The CHAIRMAN. No; only the clause on which the point of order was raised, from lines 10 to 15 inclusive.

Mr. SPEER. I thought it was raised on the whole section.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I raised it on the whole section, and I wish now to notify the Chair that I do raise it on the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not yet read beyond line 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

For this amount, being the interest on $90,000, 6 per cent. bonds of the State of Arkansas, from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $29,700; making in all the sum of $251,990.25; one-half of this amount to be paid on or after the 1st of July, 1874, and the balance on or after the 1st of July, 1875.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I make the same point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Does the Chair sustain the point of order as to the first paragraph of the section?

The CHAIRMAN. As to the first paragraph it was not raised.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the first paragraph was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. No such motion can be made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We can move to strike out the first paragraph; no vote has been taken on it yet.

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has been passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No vote was taken on it.

The CHAIRMAN. No motion having been made in reference to it, the next paragraph was read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I raised the point of order and it was about being overruled when another one was raised, and as soon as that discussion is through, before anything further has been done, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will state that he rose before the first paragraph was passed from, the Chair will entertain his point of order in reference to that paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rose at once when the first paragraph was read to make the point of order, although I did not rise to move to strike it out until it had been passed from.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] raised a point of order in reference to the first paragraph of this section, which point of order was overruled. Then, as the Chair recollects, the Clerk read the second paragraph, upon which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] raised another point of order, which was sustained by the Chair. If the gentleman from Maine now states that he endeavored to obtain the floor for the purpose of raising the point of order upon the first paragraph, of course the Chair will entertain it at this time.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I arose for that purpose; but, as I said before, I did not put forward my point of order, because the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was being considered. But the moment that I understood the decision of the Chair then I pushed my point of order, and did not understand that the committee had gone from the particular clause upon which the gentleman from Massachusetts made his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon that statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] the Chair will entertain the point order in regard to the first paragraph of this section, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS. Do I understand that the whole of section 2 has been ruled out of order by the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of section 2 has not yet been completed.

The Clerk read the remainder of the section, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reimburse the United States in the sum of $24,000, by transfer from funds in the Treasury belonging to the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Wea, and Piankeshaw Indians, now to their credit, under the act approved July 12, 1862; said sum being the amount advanced by the act of April 10, 1869, in the payment for certain lands purchased from the Senecas and sold to the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Wea, and Piankeshaw Indians.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now raise the same point of order upon this paragraph which the Chair sustained upon the other paragraphs of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS. On behalf of my colleague, [Mr. VANCE,] who is detained from the House by sickness, I offer as an additional section, to come in after section 2, that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, for the services and expenses of the delegation of the Eastern band of the Cherokee Indians of North Carolina who have visited and may hereafter visit Washington on business connected with their tribe, and the amount herein required to pay the delegation shall be charged to the unexpended balance of the interest fund arising under the fourth section of the act approved July 29, 1848, which remained in the hands of Special Agent James W. Terrell and Silas H. Swetland, and for the recovery of which suits at law are now pending against them in the United States court in the western district of North Carolina, and, whenever recovered upon the bond of said agents, shall be reimbursed therefrom.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order upon that proposed amendment that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ROBBINS) state any law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. This is a bill which has been referred to some committee for the purpose of being made a law.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is recommended by a committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS. I offer as an additional section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, on account of expenses incurred by Silas H. Swetland as special agent to settle with the Eastern or North Carolina Cherokees in the year 1869, to the following-named persons, to wit: Samuel W. Davidson, Henry Smith, and N. J. Smith, of North Carolina, the sum of $1,068.66; to J. D. Abbott, of North Carolina, the sum of $108; to M. C. King, of North Carolina, the sum of $201; to John Gray Bynum, of North Carolina, the sum of $792; and to others whose claims may be filed and verified such sum as may be found due.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is another bill. I raise the same point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read section 3 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations assumed by the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate of the United States, under the provisions of article 11 of the said treaty, made on the 9th day of March, 1859, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed and required to issue and deliver to Peter P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized delegates and agents of the Choctaw Nation, or to either of them who may demand the same on behalf of the said nation, bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and of the act of Congress approved January 20, 1871, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt,'" for an amount equal to the sum stated and found to be due to the Choctaw Nation under the said award, as shown by the account stated by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with and in conformity to the said award, and reported by him to Congress, and printed and contained in House Executive Document No. 82, of the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress, deducting from said amount the following sums, to wit: the sum of $362,100.70, and the further sum of $286,595.75, together with interest on the sum stated in the said executive document as due to the Choctaw Nation from the United States under the said award, after deducting the sums above stated, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 2d day of March, 1861, until the said bonds shall be issued to the said delegates or agents of the Choctaw Nation as herein directed: Provided, That from the sum due the Choctaw Nation, as shown in the said executive document and account-stated, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct the sum of $250,000, paid to the said delegates for and on account of the said nation and on account of the said award, on the 12th day of April, 1861: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall neither entertain, recognize, allow, nor pay any of the various claims or pretended claims which have heretofore been demanded, or which shall hereafter be demanded, by any claim agents, attorneys, or pretended owners of the said bonds, by purchase or otherwise, or of any part thereof; nor shall the Secretary of the Treasury recognize or sanction any contract or pretended contract, made on behalf of the Choctaw Nation, providing for the payment of any compensation or fees for the collection or prosecution of the claims of the Choctaw Nation against the United States, but the said bonds shall be issued and delivered as herein provided: And provided further, That before the delivery of the said bonds to the said delegates as herein directed, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act approving the provisions of this act, and shall declare that the receipt of the said bonds by the said delegates, or either of them, on behalf of the said nation, is accepted and received by the said nation as a full payment and satisfaction of all claims of the said nation, whether national or individual, growing out of the cession of lands by the said nation to the United States, under the treaty of September 27, 1830; a copy of which act, attested by the seal of the said nation, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury previous to the delivery of the said bonds to the delegates aforesaid.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise for the purpose of moving to strike out this section. But first, in order that it may be settled what is actually and legitimately in the bill, I make the point of order that this provision is not properly in this bill, the same point of order that was made in reference to the previous section. I am aware that a long resolution was passed the other day under a suspension of the rules providing that something should be in order in this bill; and that we may know just what we have before us for amendment or for striking out, I raise the point of order here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the resolution adopted the other day contained the exact words of this section, and directed that they should be a part of the bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am willing to trust a great deal to our clerks. But this is a very important matter. The resolution was of record in writing, and was read here, and I want to proceed guardedly.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. It strikes me, if I am permitted to say anything on this point of order, that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is starting out upon this section with a very great degree of technicality. Now he distrusts the clerks of this House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not distrust the clerks of this House.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Well, the gentleman makes an insinuation of that character.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I make no insinuation; I am the last man to do it.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to state to the Chairman and to the Committee of the Whole that this resolution which was passed, and for which the rules were suspended, contained this identical section of the bill, because I cut it out of the printed bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let us have the resolution read.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Well, sir, I want to be heard. I cut this section out of the bill and incorporated it in my resolution. All there was of writing in connection with the section was the introductory clause of the resolution. The section which was made in order upon my motion to suspend the rules was identically this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. When the resolution was read the other day I thought its purpose was to make this particular section in order It struck me, however, as the resolution was read—I had no time to examine it—that there was a discrepancy between that resolution and the section that is now in this bill. If there was such a discrepancy, I am so strongly opposed to this section being incorporated in this appropriation bill, taking so large a sum of money out of the Treasury, that notwithstanding what the gentleman from Missouri has said I insist on my right as a member to save that point. If the section made in order by the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri is exactly the section now printed as a part of this bill, then it can be very easily shown. But the resolution was adopted only two days ago; and it is a very singular thing if it cannot be found.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it incumbent upon the gentleman from Maine, if he raises a point of order upon the section, to show wherein it is not in order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have raised my point of order under the rules——

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Missouri that the words of this section are identical with those embodied in his resolution, the Chair will rule, unless the gentleman from Maine can show——

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I state again, in order that I may be distinctly understood, that the section incorporated in my resolution and read by the Clerk was this very section of the bill; for I cut it out of the printed bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am an associate of the gentleman from Missouri on the Committee on Appropriations, and I know how well he can be depended upon. Hence, upon his assurance, I will not further insist on my point; only I would ask the gentleman whether he knows where the resolution now is. He of course has not put it out of the way. Where is it?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I have paid no attention to the resolution since it passed.

Mr. RANDALL. It has gone to the Public Printer with the Journal. I am so informed at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It was passed only three days ago.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I should like to have it settled here and now why it is that the gentleman insinuates that there is any difference between my resolution and this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Upon the assurance of the gentleman from Missouri, I withdraw my point of order and move to strike out the section.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to discuss this question?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. As the gentleman is in favor of the section, I yield to him. I do not wish to go on until he has made his explanation.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I would prefer that the gentleman should first state his reasons for making this motion.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Committee of the Whole will give careful consideration to this section, for it is a very important one. There are two reasons which I wish to impress upon the committee against retaining this section in this appropriation bill. The first is a matter of good habit in our legislation. It is not fair to the various claims before Congress, numbering so many hundreds, and which are referred generally to the Committee on Claims, that one should be singled out and placed upon an appropriation bill that must become law. Such a proceeding is relatively an injustice to all other claims before Congress. This remark, of course, has no reference whatever to the merits or demerits of this particular claim. But if the rules must be suspended in order to make one special claim in order upon an appropriation bill, why should not all other just claims be also placed upon appropriation bills? What reason can be given for preferring one claim above all others and giving it a more advantageous position? That is my first objection; and it is so strong that I hope it will have weight with the Committee of the Whole. During this session the Committee on Appropriations have sent back to the House about forty claims, and have had them referred to appropriate committees, on the principle that such claims ought not to encumber appropriation bills, for each should stand on its own merits. I believe that no single claim except this has found its way into any of the appropriation bills reported to the House, and this is here only by the action of a divided committee.

In the next place, while I admit that this Choctaw claim has some merit, and while if it were presented here by itself as a bill I should be strongly disposed to vote for settling it in some way, yet I do not believe it possible now upon this bill to give it that full and elaborate discussion that its merits deserve. It is a claim more than thirty years old. It has a long and intricate history, and is beset with difficult questions. It has several times been put upon appropriation bills, but has never been enacted into law.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Have not $500,000 been already appropriated, and was not that done on an appropriation bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is true that a small payment has been made on account of this claim, but it was in order that it should be upon an appropriation bill in years past and until last year. It was about being put on—indeed was put on—the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate during the last Congress, when a letter came from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate saying the Secretary had reason to believe there was fraud behind the claim, and asking them not only not to put it on the bill, but to put a section in the bill forbidding the payment of the claim until further investigation and legislation by Congress. That section was put on in the Senate, passed by the House, and became section 3 of the Indian appropriation bill of 1872. So that as the law now stands the claim is barred until future action of Congress. Hence it required a suspension of the rules to put it into this bill.

I deeply regret, Mr. Chairman, that the House saw fit to suspend the rules to make it in order. I have not one word to say against those gentlemen who think it ought to be here, except to say that there is an honest difference of opinion between them and myself. The members of the Committee on Appropriations who voted to put this section in this bill have the utmost of my confidence. I say not one word to detract from their high worth. I hold them to be as true men as live. I say only in this matter we radically differ in our judgment on this question. I think they mistake as a matter of legislative propriety and as to the right management of our finances to put this section into this bill, and I appeal to the House to reconsider its action and strike the section from the bill. Then we can truthfully say that our twelve great appropriation bills have not borne upon them one claim or one shadow of a claim; that they have contained nothing save the regular appropriations for the support of the Government.

That is the whole case; but I must say a word on the merits of the section itself. If we go into the discussion of the Choctaw claim we shall encounter on the threshold a serious difficulty in reference to the treaty of 1855. That treaty provides that the amount awarded as claims of individual Choctaws shall be delivered over to the nation in bulk and the remainder of the award, which is in its nature national—which belongs to the Choctaw Nation as a people—shall be invested in interest-bearing bonds and held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the nation. Now, how much of this amount awarded by this section belongs to individual Choctaws and how much belongs to the Choctaws as a nation I do not know and the committee has failed to discover; but this section gives it all in a lump to two persons—agents of the nation. No doubt we have wronged the Choctaw Nation by not settling this claim long ago. But we shall wrong both them and ourselves by this method of settling the case. This Congress has made a most worthy record in all that pertains to public expenditures. Let us not now mar that record by breaking over the wise rules which long experience has taught us to respect.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio this question: Does the Government owe this debt or not?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the Government owes a debt, but I do not believe that this section provides for discharging the debt in accordance with the terms of the obligation.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I am peculiarly situated in reference to this matter. The remarks of the gentleman who spoke in favor of the motion to strike out this section are of such a character as to cover this whole case, and I am fearful it will be impossible to present the case to the House as it should be presented (and as I think I ought to be permitted to present it, having made the report on this question from the Committee on Appropriations) in the short space of five minutes. But I will do the best I can.

My friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for whom I have as high regard as for any person in the world, admits the merits and the justice of the claim, but the trouble with him is, he desires, I think, to pay off these Indians by compliments to his fellow-members of the committee. That may be handsome, and will be appreciated by the colaborers with him on that committee, but I apprehend it is not of such a character as will satisfy a just demand against the Government.

Now, sir, as to the reasons the gentleman urges why this should not go upon the appropriation bill. In the first place, two-thirds of this distinguished body have decided it is proper to go on an appropriation bill. I would be willing, even if I were chairman of the committee, to abide the fiat of the House proclaimed by two-thirds of its members.

But what reason has he urged why it should not be put upon this bill in this way? One reason is that it is an old claim. It is an old claim, Mr. Chairman, and the age of this claim places it before the country and the world as a lasting disgrace and burning shame to this Government that it has not been satisfied years and years ago. I have understood that wine was improved by age, but the rule with him seems to be that a claim which is just, a claim which the gentleman admits to be honest and fair, is to be destroyed because of its age. And he wants to increase the age of this just claim. He says it should be put off yet a little longer; that its payment shall be procrastinated yet a little while.

Why, Mr. Chairman, must that be done? I will tell you why. If this were a claim urged against this Government by a nation which had the power to hold us accountable for the non-payments of our debts, then you would hear the chairman of this committee upon this floor talking of national honor and national honesty. But here are a class of people who, unfortunately for them, are unable to hold us accountable to them as a nation for that dishonesty. Therefore we postpone the payment of this just demand.

Why is this claim old? This brings me to a brief presentation of the claim on its merits to this House. What is the claim? How does it come that those people have a claim against the Government of the United States that has remained unsettled for these many years? I will tell you the foundation of it.

On the 27th September, 1830, the Government of the United States made a solemn treaty with these people, when they were living in the State of Mississippi. But prior to that, in the year 1820, the Government entered into a treaty with them by which it received from them four million three hundred thousand acres of land in Mississippi for a tract of country west of the Mississippi River where they are now living. That tract of four million acres of land covers from one-half to three-fourths of the whole water front of the State of Mississippi. In 1830 a question arose between the Government of the United States and the State of Mississippi—the State claimed jurisdiction over these people. The Indians were unwilling to submit to that State jurisdiction. War was imminent between the Federal Government and the State of Mississippi upon that question. The President of the United States, President Jackson, sent his Secretary of War, General Eaton, and an officer of his Army, General Coffee, to make a treaty with these people. They did make the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek on the 27th of September, 1830. These Indians did not want to leave their homes on the Mississippi; they wanted to remain there. But by threats and terrorizing over them, the United States induced them to sign a treaty granting to the United States over ten million acres of land. They were by the terms of that treaty to be paid in advance. The treaty was signed by these people. They agreed, the most of them, to remove to their new homes in the then unknown country west of the Mississippi River. It is out of the cession of these lands that the treaty grew.

Well, what occurred then? After the treaty was made the Indians presented their claims to the Government of the United States for these ten million acres of land and the thing was procrastinated or overlooked, just as the gentleman from Ohio now seeks to put it off, from 1830 to 1855.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. On the 22d June, 1855, the Government of the United States entered into another treaty with these people, and what was that treaty? It was substantially this: that all claims and demands urged upon the part of the Choctaw people should be settled by a court. What court was that? By the terms of the treaty it was the Senate of the United States. I wish to have the Clerk read the eleventh section.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 11. The Government of the United States not being prepared to assent to the claim set up under the treaty of September 27, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States:

First. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to, or shall be allowed, the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the cost of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the land remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected; or,

Secondly. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States; and if so, how much. (11 Statutes at Large, page 611.)

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be observed by the committee that this claim by the terms of this treaty is to be submitted to the Senate of the United States and a board of arbitrators. It will be observed further that we had the selection partly of the court, and we took good care to select a court on which there should be no Indians. It was a court of our own choosing. It was one of the highest courts of arbitrators that ever assembled in this country or any other country. It must be remembered that by the terms of this treaty of 1855 the finding of the Senate was to be final. There was to be no appeal from that finding.

The Senate did take up this case, and on the 9th of March, 1859, after the proposition had been referred to a committee of the Senate, after it had been deliberately considered by that committee for three months, it was brought back into the Senate, reported favorably upon by the committee of the Senate. The Senate discussed it for days, and finally they did make an award in favor of these people. And I want to say here in this connection that after deducting every possible thing that they could deduct from these people, they found to the amount of money that we claim is due here to-day. What did they say? Here is the resolution which they passed:

Whereas the eleventh article of the treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians provides that the following questions be submitted for decision to the Senate of the United States:

First. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to or shall be allowed the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and, if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the lands remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected; or,

Secondly. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States; and, if so, how much?

Resolved, That the Choctaws be allowed the proceeds of the sale of such lands as have been sold by the United States on the 1st day of January last, deducting therefrom the costs of their survey and sale, and all proper expenditures and payments under said treaty, excluding the reservations allowed and secured, and estimating the scrip issued in lieu of reservations at the rate of $1.25 per acre; and, further, that they be also allowed twelve and a half cents per acre for the residue of said lands.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior cause an account to be stated with the Choctaws, showing what amount is due them according to the above prescribed principles of settlement, and report the same to Congress.—Senate Journal, second session Thirty-fifth Congress, page 493.

Not to the Senate but to Congress, thereby showing that the Senate deemed their award as final.

They did not ask the master in chancery, as he might be termed, the Secretary of the Interior, to report back to the Senate, but to make his report to Congress. On the 8th of May, 1860, under the direction of this board of arbitrators, he did report back to the Congress of the United States the amount of money that was due these people. Now what was it? It is contained in Executive Document No. 82 of the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress. Here is his finding; here is the account-stated——

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SPEER. Is this in order? If it is not I must object, unless it be understood that the same courtesy will be shown to gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no doubt it will be, and I hope the gentleman from Missouri will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. SPEER. With that understanding I withdraw the objection.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Here is the account-stated:

Leaves a balance due to Choctaws of		2,981,247 30

Now one word in connection with these accounts. By the treaty of 1830 it was agreed to remove these Indians at the cost of the Government. We did remove them, but in making up the account we charged them for that removal $1,200,000. By the treaty of 1830 we agreed to survey these lands which have become ours under that treaty. We did survey them, but we stole from these Indians for that survey $1,300,000, when he had said by the treaty that we would pay the expenses ourselves. We agreed to furnish under the treaty of 1830 cattle to these Indians. We did furnish them cattle, but we paid for those cattle out of their own money and cast it up in this account against them.

That is not all. I could stand here for half an hour enumerating wrongs and outrages that have been committed against these people. We agreed to pay the Wayne warriors, who were in the Wayne campaign, pensions. We did pay them pensions, but we paid them out of their own money. We agreed that we would pay these people twelve and a half cents an acre for the residue of the lands that were unsold in 1859. We did pay them twelve and a half cents an acre, but we took ten cents an acre of that for surveying the lands, when we had agreed to survey them ourselves.

Well, now, has this claim been approved by anybody? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] says than an opinion came to Congress during its last session against this claim. O, yes; Mr. Chairman, if I were released from the obligations of secrecy in this case I could give to the House and the country the history connected with that opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury; but has this claim ever met with the approval of anybody?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I hope that I shall have a little more time.

Mr. KELLOGG. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. TREMAIN. I renew the amendment and yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I thank the gentleman. I have in my possession the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States in which he says that this claim is just and ought to be paid. I have in my possession the report of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House, when he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, recommending the payment of this claim. And the House, if I am right in that matter, at that very session passed it through this body. I have in my possession here the report of the Indian Committee of the Senate made by Mr. Sebastian in 1860, in which he said that this claim was a just claim and ought to be paid. I have in my possession the report of the Indian Committee of this House at the last session, stating that it was a just claim and ought to be paid. I have in my possession the report of the Indian Committee of this House of this Congress, a unanimous report, stating that it is a just claim and that it ought to be paid. And above all, the Congress of the United States in 1860 said that it was a just claim and ought to be paid. By a solemn act of Congress they appropriated $5,00,000 toward the payment of it. The Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and of the House have recommended this payment. I have here the report of the Committee on the Judiciary of the last Congress, made by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Kerr, in which he says that this claim was just and ought to be paid.

Now the gentleman from Ohio, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. GARFIELD,] makes the point that this should not be in an appropriation bill. Why should it not? At this very session we appropriated in an appropriation bill $1,000,000 to pay the judgments of the Court of Claims, and judgments, too, which have not yet been rendered. Is not this a judgment? It is a judgment of the highest character. To the eternal shame and disgrace of this nation here is a judgment against it since 1859, and to this day never paid.

I am glad that we have a chance to present this case to the Committee of the Whole. I am glad that the merits of it can be looked into by gentlemen. I assert as a fact that no honest man who will ever look into this case can come to any other conclusion than the one to which we have come.

One point further. We take from this amount of two million nine hundred and odd thousand dollars the sum of three hundred and odd thousand dollars, as being the 5 per cent. fund that the Government was to pay to the State of Mississippi under that law. We deduct also about the same amount as being the amount which the Government paid to the State of Mississippi as the swamp-land fund. I suppose we do it somewhat upon this principle: If I should buy a house in this city of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. AVERILL,] and should give him my note for it, then when he came to me to collect the note I would say to him that I would give him only a part of the amount which the note represented, because I had given another part to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Therefore, because we have given away a part of this fund which belonged to the Indians, we deduct it from the amount due. In that way we have reduced the claim to two million three hundred and odd thousand dollars. No man in this country can come to the conclusion that this claim should not be paid.

Why, then, should we not pay it now? Some say that we cannot afford to pay it now. Sir, there can never be a period in the history of this country when we can repudiate an honest and just claim against us, held by a people who cannot go into a court and enforce it, and who cannot hold us accountable as a nation for the non-payment of an honest claim, because they are too weak.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, obtained the floor.

Mr. SPEER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] be allowed twenty-five minutes, the same time that was allowed to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not desire so much time.

The CHAIRMAN. There can be no unanimous consent given in Committee of the Whole. The Chair, however, has no doubt that proper time will be allowed the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. This claim, and it is nothing but a claim in its best condition, will take two million three hundred and odd thousand dollars out of the Treasury. This is a large sum, and it requires sober attention, both in regard to the question whether it should be paid at all, and also, if paid, the perhaps more important question of guarding the fund so that it shall go to those to whom whatever sum is due belongs.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] need not talk about the wrong done to the American Indian. I see all that in its full force. They have been driven from pillar to post; cheated by thievish agents of the Government; stripped of their lands, and in most cases if paid at all for them it has been by a mere bagatelle. So much I own.

But this claim deals not here with these general considerations. It is narrowed down to a proposition to put in an appropriation bill a section appropriating over $2,300,000 to be paid over to two men living in the city of Washington, neither of whom I presume has seen the Choctaw people for a dozen years, perhaps more; or if in this I am wrong, it is certainly true that they have both made this city their home, their point of action. My objection to this claim is twofold; first and foremost, while admitting that a large sum is due to these Indians, I am not ready, and the opposition to this claim is not ready, to admit that the sum named here is merely the sum that ought to be paid. But upon this point I give the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] credit for a good, and as far as he has gone a thorough examination, and admit that his figures are entitled to prima facie credit. This, then, as to amount, we will not controvert as our strong point.

But bearing on this, let me say that several years ago this amount was given at a lower figure in the Senate of the United States by Senators then in charge of the claim. As long ago as March 9, 1859, at about the time of the adjustment, as it has been called, when the accounts were made up, and the matter was presented in the Senate by the Committee on Indian Affairs through Mr. Sebastian, of Arkansas, its chairman, a question was asked by Mr. King. I read from the Globe:

Mr. KING. About what is the amount to be paid?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is almost impossible to arrive at a correct conclusion. It is very large, and the amount this resolution will give them is far below what they are entitled to, in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. KING. Will it give them one million or more?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think when the account is stated it will be between eight hundred thousand and one million dollars. We got a large amount of land for nothing.

Gentlemen will see that the sum there named was little more than one-third of what is now pressed.

But there is another consideration to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, and it is most important. While I hope that this proposition will be voted down so that it may at the proper time go to a committee that shall report it as a distinctive bill, when it can receive full discussion on this floor, I shall be well content if a proper substitute can be adopted, and I have other considerations to urge in favor of an amendment, a vital amendment to this section.

The gentleman from Missouri has said that there was a treaty or adjustment in 1830. Granted. He has said further that it ran along until 1855, when a treaty was made which fixed the liabilities of the Government, and declared that the Indians had certain rights. Granted. I am going to have read portions of that treaty. He says, further, that a report was made to the Senate and that it was accepted by that body. Sir, was there anything further done after that? Good as is the gentleman's report, which I hold in my hand, he has not in that report called attention to the fact that on the 14th of June, 1860, less than a year after a report was made to the United States Senate, the matter came up in that body again on a resolution to pay over this fund of $2,330,000, the same sum that is proposed to be given now. That resolution was based, as this section which we now confront is, upon the treaty of 1855. I ask the Clerk to read from article 12 of that treaty.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 12. In case the Senate shall award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands, ceded as aforesaid, the same shall be received by them in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States, whether national or individual, arising under any former treaty; and the Choctaws shall thereupon become liable and bound to pay all such individual claims as may be adjudged by the proper authorities of the tribe to be equitable and just, the settlement and payment to be made with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for the tribe; and so much of the fund, awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws, as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the liabilities of the tribe, shall, on their requisition, be paid over to them by the United States.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It will be seen that in making this treaty the Government took cognizance of the fact that there were two kinds of claims involved. The committee here have forgotten this. In the first place this tribe or nation of Indians was fairly indebted to individuals in large sums, and those individuals could not get their pay till the Government provided a fund. It was, therefore, provided that so much as the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation should find to be owing to individuals should be paid over by the Government to those authorities for the payment of their tribe's debts. That is how part of the fund was to go. That it was not all will be shown by what will now be read.

Let the Clerk read from the thirteenth article of the treaty, in order that gentlemen may see how the balance of this fund of $2,330,000 was to be kept sacred for the Indians and not to be disposed of here.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the funds now held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Choctaws under former treaties, or otherwise, shall continue to be so held; together with the sum of $500,000 out of the amount payable to them under articles 8 and 10 of this agreement, and also whatever balance shall remain, if any, of the amount that shall be allowed the Choctaws by the Senate under the twelfth article hereof, after satisfying the just liabilities of the tribe. The sums so to be held in trust shall constitute a general Choctaw fund, yielding an annual interest of not less than 5 per cent.; no part of which shall be paid out as annuity, but shall be regularly and judiciously applied, under the direction of the general council of the Choctaws, to the support of their government for purposes of education and such other objects as may be best calculated to promote and advance the improvement, welfare, and happiness of the Choctaw people and their descendants.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it is to this decisive point more than to anything else that I am speaking here. I put my sympathy with the Indians against that of the gentleman from Missouri or any other gentleman who advocates this section providing for paying this whole fund of $2,300,000 into the hands of a delegated agency, thereby stamping to the ground the sacred stipulation which we have made with this tribe that all the balance after paying their debts shall be saved as an impregnable fund to go for the purposes of education and good government in the territory of this once great and powerful tribe. Sir, that is the question that confronts us here. Is there anything in this section that keeps the balance of this fund for the education of the Choctaw children? Is there anything that keeps a dollar of it for good roads, for schools, for good government in the Choctaw country?

To show that the view I now maintain, and which has been forgotten in the report, was maintained by those advocating this claim in the Senate, let me call attention to the fact that on the 14th of June, 1860, after the award that the gentleman builds upon had been sent into the Senate, Mr. Sebastian, then of the Committee on Indian Affairs of that body, in order to carry into effect that treaty, offered an amendment to an appropriation bill providing for the payment of just the sum that is provided for here. But I ask gentlemen to observe how that provision was guarded, as the committee has forgotten to guard this provision. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment moved in the Senate by the then chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

For carrying into effect the award of the Senate made March 9, 1859, pursuant to the eleventh article of the treaty with the Choctaws of June 22, 1855, $2,332,560.83. So much thereof as shall be necessary for the payment of the claims which by the twelfth article of the said treaty the Choctaws have assumed to pay and of such other liabilities of the tribe as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be just, shall on their requisition be paid over to them at such times and in such manner as they request; and the balance remaining—

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mark that language.

The Clerk continuing—

And the balance remaining after satisfying such claims and liabilities shall be held in trust for the benefit of the Choctaws according to the provisions of the thirteenth article of the said treaty.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That was fourteen years ago. From that time up to the present has anything happened that changes the responsibility of Congress as to the disposition of this fund? Gentlemen who are so eager here can take lessons of caution from the Senator who so carefully guarded the best part of this fund.

Now, sir, this amendment gave rise to discussion in the Senate. The ablest men in the Senate took part in it—Mr. Hunter, of Virginia; Mr. Fessenden, then of my own State; Mr. Clarke, of Vermont; and Mr. Toombs, Mr. Davis, Mr. Pugh, and other well-known gentlemen. The ground was taken then, that although there had been a sort of award in the Senate, yet it was an affair of so much importance that it ought not to be considered in the hurried hours of the last days of the session upon an appropriation bill, Mr. Fessenden himself making that point. And although the proposition was well hedged about, yet if the Clerk will turn over three or four leaves beyond that which he has been reading he will find the record of the yea and nay vote. I ask him to read the record of that vote.

Page 695, June 14, 1860. Mr. Hunter called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 24.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That will do. That was the end of it, Mr. Chairman, and from that day for years, not only during the war but long afterward, it slept. If there was such a pressing and pushing demand in this case, why did it sleep so long? The only action of importance on the part of Congress since then, with the exception of at one time providing for payment in part which no one held as covering the whole, was a clause put in an appropriation bill providing that the claim should not be paid.

Now it is declared, in the last ten days of the session, upon the last appropriation bill with little time for discussion, that this should be pushed through. Sir, who is pushing it? Who is urging this claim? I have been here for months during this winter, as other gentlemen have, and I have yet to see any delegation from the Choctaw tribe of Indians representing their people, their schools, their churches, their good government.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I can tell the gentleman the reason why he has not seen a delegation from the Choctaw tribe of Indians. It is because they have been satisfied long since he was not willing to pay them. That is the reason.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not know what parties in Washington thought. I used the first person in saying that no Choctaw delegation had been seen. I mean that nobody has said it. If such have been here, why have we not all seen them? If we are sensitive as to our obligation to the tribe why not simply declare, as Mr. Sebastian did in 1860, that it shall go to the tribe directly when that tribe have adjudicated their liabilities, and then the balance shall be paid as the treaty provides into a fund for educational purposes?

Sir, when this money leaves the Treasury I want it to flow to sources where it will properly fructify. The gentleman from Missouri is a man who has no part or parcel in any Washington lobby. I heartily credit him with that. He has proved it by an honorable service in this body. But, sir, I make this prediction, and I will stand on it in the future, that if this appropriation is made in the way the gentleman provides, if it is paid into the hands of the persons named in this section, there will be in less than three years a great national scandal and disgrace following directly upon the knowledge which cannot long be suppressed that little of the fund reaches the Indians. I do not believe the tribe as a tribe will get $500,000 of the money. The Indians never will get $100,000 of it. This I believe, and if I prove wrong I predict further that gentlemen will see around and about Washington and elsewhere, not in these seats thank Heaven, but outside, the most hungry and disappointed set of ravenous wolves that ever howled in our lobbies and sought to crowd a measure in which they have a part and parcel through Congress. One of these two things will be sure.

I have been told that a gentleman on the floor has an amendment which will put this fund directly into the hands of the tribe with a balance reserved according to treaty stipulations for tribal use. If that is so I shall be glad to vote for it. If it is not so, I have an amendment prepared which will cover that ground; and if the House must pass this appropriation, then I will move to amend it so the object of the treaty will be carried out and these Indians will get their money.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will take the floor and yield what time I have to the gentleman from Maine if he desires it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will not trespass further on the time of the House. I am obliged to the gentleman from Rhode Island, but if the points that I have made are not good there is no use in my further enforcing them.

Mr. SPEER. Three days ago a motion to suspend the rules was carried in the House making this section in order to this bill. As gentlemen well know, that motion could not be debated. On that day, while the vote was being taken, this floor swarmed with lobbyists beyond anything I have ever seen during my service here. There is not a man who has been hanging upon these corridors for the last three years, whose mark is upon his face as a paid and corrupt lobbyist, who was not on this floor on that day if he could get within the bar of the House. I do not say this claim is in itself fraudulent. But I say that it is supported and pressed upon this House by the most infamous set of legislative jobbers known in our history. If this claim be honest and right, let it stand upon its own merits as an independent proposition. If the Government owes these Indians, the Government should be great and honest enough to pay them, and it is.

Mr. COMINGO. Will the gentleman give way for an inquiry?

Mr. SPEER. If it be a proper one, surely.

Mr. COMINGO. The gentleman just remarked that this claim is pressed upon this Congress by the most infamous set of jobbers ever connected with this House. The gentleman's remark is so general that

I suppose it applies to all who have ever advocated this claim to the present time.

Mr. SPEER. Not at all.

Mr. COMINGO. I wish the gentleman to state whether in his remarks he includes any of those who have made reports upon this claim at the present session?

Mr. SPEER. No, sir. I very cordially except the gentleman from Missouri. He is an upright, honorable man. In speaking of lobbyists, I did not refer to members of the House. I referred to ex-members of the House. And if the gentleman does not know who they are I will give him their names privately.

Mr. COMINGO. I do not know who they are.

Mr. SPEER. I say that if this is an honest proposition it should stand upon its own merits as any other claim against the Government.

But here a proposition, involving nearly $3,000,000, by some political magic, is carried by a two-third vote on this floor, with the floor and the corridors swarming with lobbyists, and is attempted now to be put through on a bill to which it does not belong and where it should never have been placed. I make no accusation against members of the House. I believe the gentlemen who support the proposition, or many of them, are honorable men. I believe the claim, or a portion of it, is honest. But I would never agree to pay under the pretext of benefiting the Indians, who are the wards of the nation, to two irresponsible men, without bond or security, representatives of a corrupt ring behind them, this large sum of money. I would never agree to give to those men moneys of the Government in these negotiable bonds, whose title passes by delivery, to be handed around in the streets and in the corridors to the lobby here. I would not vote the people's money into the hands of these men who are employed here as lobbyists and expecting their pay in bonds of the Government belonging to the Indians. Let us carry out the treaty. Let us set apart a fund, the interest of which shall be sacredly set apart and be payable to them. Let us pay them the interest, and if they need more than the interest, let such portion of the principal be paid to them as the Secretary of the Interior in his judgment and discretion shall deem proper. But let this House vindicate itself. Let it vindicate the honor of Congress and the honor of the nation by kicking from this floor this day this proposition supported by every agency and means that fraud and corruption can command.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the attention of the committee only a few moments upon this question. I desire to say that having been called as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate this case and to report upon it, I was led to the conclusion that no more stupendous fraud has ever been perpetrated upon any people since the foundation of the world than the Government of the United States has perpetrated on the Choctaw Nation. In 1820 they surrendered to the United States four and a half million acres of their lands in Mississippi; and for that land they took a territory in the Indian country, bounded by the western boundary of Arkansas, and lying between the Arkansas River and the Canadian branch of the Arkansas River and the Red River.

They were promised by the Government protection. They had left them in the State of Mississippi ten and a half million acres of land. In 1830 the United States Government notified the tribe that it was powerless to protect them, and that they must submit themselves to the laws of Mississippi; and that tribe of Indians under that threat surrendered all the best lands in the State of Mississippi—ten and a half million acres which the Government promised to survey and pay them for. The United States has received $7,500,000 in cash into its Treasury for that land. It has given away to the State of Mississippi two and a half million acres of that land. It has paid into the treasury of the State of Mississippi $360,000, or 5 per cent. of the proceeds of those sales, and yet the Indians are here to-day unpaid; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] rises now and says that because a lobby is here which may receive some of these funds the wrong which we have perpetrated so long on this Indian tribe shall be continued.

Mr. SPEER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPEER. Why do you not provide for the payment of this money directly to the Indians instead of to a set of claim agents and lobbyists?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I hope that before the bill passes the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to this section will be adopted. I want to see the fund guarded. But, Mr. Chairman, can the American Government longer continue this great fraud upon the Indians? After the Senate had awarded $2,900,000 as the amount of this debt, a committee of that body took from the award the sum of $1,099,000 for two million acres of land, and $360,000 which had been paid to the State of Mississippi, and another item, I forget now what.

Mr. SHANKS. The gentleman said he hoped the amendment of the gentleman from Maine would be adopted. I understand that to be to strike out the section.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Not at all. I understand that he proposes that the twelfth section of the treaty of 1865 shall be carried out in its letter. He desires an amendment to that effect, and I agree with him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the state of the case to-day? After taking out all the deductions that could be thought of, after making the Indians pay to the warriors of the Wayne campaign the pensions which the Government of the United States promised them, after having made them pay for their transportation to their new homes, after having made them pay for cattle which they had given up to the Government, after having made every conceivable charge against them, there is due the Choctaw Nation to-day the sum of $2,300,000, without a particle of interest from 1834, the time when the lands were sold by the United States to the white settlers.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. COX. What evidence has the House or had the committee that these two agents named in the section are authorized to receive this money?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I have not the evidence; but I understand, however, that they are the agents of the nation.

Mr. COX. I never saw a bill so loosely drawn. It is proposed to pay the money intended for the whole tribe to two persons, and you give us no authority to show that they are authorized to receive it for the nation.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I presume the Treasurer of the United States will never pay this money to persons who do not show their authority. Pitchlynn himself is an Indian of this tribe, and when he left the original Indian country he was possessed of quite a large estate of his own which he surrendered and for which he has never received a dollar.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. When was that?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusettss. Somewhere about 1834.

This matter came before the Committee on Indian Affairs by a reference from the Committee on Appropriations. We investigated it and had we had the power we should certainly have reported a bill making this provision; but we were only asked to give the result of our investigations to the Committee on Appropriations for their guidance, and it seems to me a little unfair that gentlemen of that committee should rise upon this floor, having had charge of this matter during the whole session and object to the passage of the claim because it is not undertaken to be passed in a separate and independent bill.

Mr. KASSON. I believe it is in order to perfect the section pending the motion to strike it out. I move to strike out all after the words "delivered to," in line 11, down to and including the word "nation," in line 14, as follows:

Peter P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized delegates and agents of the Choctaw Nation, or to either of them who may demand the same in behalf of the nation.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the Choctaw Nation and the people thereof, according to the terms of the treaties providing for the same.

This amendment strikes at the central point in this debate, and that is whether the Indians will, as the section now stands, get the benefit of this appropriation if it is made by Congress. Whether this amendment be adopted or not, I desire to say that in the next page of the section I shall also offer an amendment designed to get the amount placed at that sum which is due to the Indians after deducting all the payments that have been made to them by special appropriations of Congress, of which I remember some made during my former service in the Thirty-ninth Congress on the Committee on Appropriations and not made in consequence of previous law or treaty.

But my object now, sir, particularly is to say that having voted to suspend the rules to make this appropriation in order here, I did it for the purpose of settling if possible, as a question of justice, whether these Indians were entitled to something or not. I believe they are entitled to compensation for these lands and upon the basis of the senatorial award. But having said this frankly, I desire with equal frankness to say that I do not believe that this section will accomplish the purpose of members who believe with me that the Indians themselves are entitled to compensation. I dislike exceedingly to allude to outside lobbyists. I dislike to allude to the fact that a large number of contingent fees are widely and well understood to be dependent upon this appropriation and are to be paid out of the interest fund, yet such an impression is broadly spread in this House. If I had the authority of an honorable gentleman once a member of this House, who had some relation to this claim, I would willingly state my authority for the declaration that there have been pledges to the amount of over $900,000 of contingent allowances depending upon the ultimate allowance of this claim. I do not wish to state it as a fact; I only wish to say that the very fact that such an opinion prevails among honorable members of this House is enough to make us guard this appropriation in such a way that what we do appropriate will surely reach its proper destination.

Therefore I say that in order to accomplish that purpose the first thing that we ought to do in the interest of these Indians, the first thing that these delegates—who, let me say, I believe to be authorized delegates of the Choctaw Nation—ought to demand of us is that we take these bonds at once from their hands, hands that are tied, if what gentlemen on this floor believe to be true is true, and put them in the hands of an officer of the United States to be disposed of according to the treaty. There they will be safe, there the lobbyists, if they have these large contingent fees, cannot reach them. And in that way it seems to me we shall have redeemed the honor of the United States, if that honor is pledged to this payment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COMINGO. Inasmuch as I have had some connection with this claim as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, and I have heard it antagonized this morning for various reasons, none of which appear to me to be very substantial, I desire to add a few words to what has been said by my colleague, [Mr. PARKER.] It is passing strange that the chief objection urged by gentlemen to this appropriation is that it may be misapplied; that they should come here and move to strike out the whole section simply for that reason is to my mind a singular fact. I believe there is not a gentleman of all those who have antagonized this measure this morning who has pretended to controvert the justice of this claim. If there is one on this floor who has done so, I have not understood the language he has used. I defy any gentleman on this floor or elsewhere to show to any honest man the least evidence of fraud in this claim, either in its inception or in its present condition.

Gentlemen talk here very flippantly about rings and lobbyists. I have been connected with this claim as one of the sub-committee whose duty it was to consider it. If there had been a lobbyist in this city in behalf of this claim I suppose he would have approached me. I have never heard in that connection that there was any one here acting as a lobbyist in behalf of this particular claim. But even if such were the case, I ask gentlemen who have raised such a hue and cry about these lobbyists what has that to do with the validity of this claim? If those gentlemen are honest in their opposition to this section in its present shape, then why not amend it? I am willing to go with them to the utmost extent to perfect this section.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Will the gentleman vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON?]

Mr. COMINGO. I will vote most cordially for anything necessary to protect this fund. I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that lobbyists or some other influences have kept this money out of the hands of these Indians for almost forty-four years. I ask gentlemen to look at the facts in this case, and the enormous injustice which, as a people, we have done to these our wards in the manner in which we have deferred the payment of this claim. I stand here prepared to stake all I have in the way of reputation upon the justice of this claim, and the great importance of our paying it at the present time.

I will not undertake to discuss this claim at length; it would require more than twenty-five minutes to do so, instead of the five minutes allowed me under the rules. But I wish to call the attention of gentlemen who are here to-day trying to hinder and delay the payment of this money by such pretexts as they have presented this morning, to the fact that in 1830 we made a treaty with these Indians and removed them from their homes east of the Mississippi. They ceded their lands to us then for the purpose of having peace. If gentlemen will take the trouble to look at the preamble of the treaty of 1830, they will find that these Indians were constrained to remove from east of the Mississippi and to part with their lands not because they were tired of their possessions there, but because they were unsafe and insecure and because the United States, as is alleged in that preamble, was unable to protect them from the aggressions of their neighbors.

I beg that gentlemen reflect upon this fact: that since 1833 or 1834, as has been stated by my colleague on the committee, we have had seven or eight millions of this people's money in our Treasury, and refused to give them but $250,000, which was allowed a few years ago. By the treaty of 1850 we did not acknowledge that these Choctaws had a valid claim against the United States. But we admitted this much, that they had set up a claim against the Government, and that they wished, and we were willing, to have it adjudicated. And by the treaty of 1855 we agreed that we would refer this claim to a tribunal of our own choosing.

The basis of this claim is found in the treaty of 1830. To what extent and in what manner these Indians have prosecuted that claim from 1830 to 1855 it is not important that we should inquire. But we know that in 1855 a treaty was effected between the Government of the United States and these Indians by which it was stipulated that this claim should be referred to the United States Senate as an umpire. That was a court of our own selection, a court elected by the people of the United States, and to which this claim was referred for adjudication. In 1859 that court considered and tried the claim. Their resolutions have already been referred to by my colleague. They establish two facts; first, that the Choctaws were entitled to the net proceeds of the sale of their lands west of the Mississippi River. After a full hearing of all the facts that bore upon that treaty and of the considerations that moved these Indians to make it, the United States Senate, the highest court of this country, determined that the Choctaws were entitled to the net proceeds arising from the sale of their ten and a half millions of land, or so much thereof as had been sold. Not only so; they determined that the Indians were entitled to twelve and a half cents per acre for all the lands that remained unsold.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to oppose the pending amendment, and yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO.]

Mr. COMINGO. The court which rendered this judgment or award in 1859 was, as I have stated, one of our own selection, composed of men selected by us, in whom we then confided, and in whom he have never had occasion to lose our confidence. That court determined that the Indians should receive the net proceeds (with certain exceptions) of the land sold, and also that they should be entitled to twelve and a half cents per acre for all that remained unsold. Having made this finding, that tribunal devolved upon the Secretary of the Interior the duty of making an account-stated and determining the balance due these Indians at that time.

Now, any gentleman who will take the trouble to examine this subject will see that these Indians had confided their interests to the hands of those who were disposed not to do justice to them, as I can abundantly show, but to take the last farthing that could be taken from them under any shadow of a pretext.

There were about four and a half million acres of land that had not been sold at the time of that award. The lands which had been sold amounted I believe to some seven or eight million dollars. For the four and a half million acres remaining unsold the Indians were to be paid at the rate of twelve and a half cents an acre. Let any gentleman who desires to ascertain the truth on this behalf refer to the account stated by the Secretary of the Interior in pursuance of this order of the Senate, and see how unfairly these men were dealt with. They were treated almost as unfairly as gentlemen on this floor seem disposed to treat them to-day. Gentlemen seem to smell rings and lobbies all around; they are afraid that somebody who is not entitled to it may get a part of this money; and therefore they would lock it up in the Treasury and let these Indians go unclad, unfed, uneducated, and wholly unprovided for. I repeat, that the account stated by the Secretary of the Interior was as unjust to the Choctaws as it was possible to make it, but surely not more so the wrong which gentlemen here propose to perpetrate upon them. Even the proposed appropriation does them gross injustice. Instead of giving them, in accordance with the award of the Senate, sitting as an umpire, twelve and a half cents per acre for the four and a half million acres remaining unsold, they charged them ten cents an acre for surveying the whole ten and a half million acres; thus allowing them only two and a half cents per acre for that which they resolved to pay twelve and a half cents per acre.

But I wish to show another outrage in this connection. The injustice which we did to these wards of the nation did not end in giving them only two and a half cents instead of twelve and a half cents per acre for their lands. We went further. The Secretary of the Interior, in stating the account, (and the Committee on Appropriations of the present Congress proposes to perpetuate this injustice,) charged those Indians with all the lands which this Government in its benevolence or munificence had seen fit to give to the State of Mississippi, amounting in value to three or four hundred thousand dollars if not more. In addition to that, the Government of the United States in its exceeding liberality gave to the State of Mississippi 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of all the lands that had been sold, and deducted it from the amount derived from the sale of those lands; and the Committee on Appropriations at the present session have sanctioned this act of injustice by deducting these sums from the amount found due in 1859. In that particular I say they propose to perpetrate an outrage upon these people. But notwithstanding we have thus taken more than $600,000 of this fund that was found due to these Indians by the award of the Senate in 1859, we find gentlemen standing on this floor to-day and saying to these claimants, "Go home, and you shall receive this money when we may be pleased to give it to you;" but it is not our pleasure to do so at present. Gentlemen ask, "Who is Pitchlynn? Who is Folsom?" If they will look at the treaties they will find that Pitchlynn is a Choctaw; I think he is a Choctaw chief. It was he that negotiated the treaty of 1855; it is he that has been prosecuting this claim for years; he who has been knocking at our doors for this appropriation ever since that time, and who to-day asks us to perform a long-deferred and simple act of justice.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] tells that $900,000 of this money has been appropriated to lobbyists. In the name of God, how does he know that? From what source does he get his information? If he knows that a portion of this money has been appropriated to lobbyists and to members on this floor, I demand that he come forward and tell us who are the parties implicated. The intimation has been thrown out that a corrupt influence has been brought to bear upon members of this House by which legislation is sought to be secured. Now I ask the gentleman to tell us who are these lobbyists and who the members that have been by them corrupted. If they are here and are doing as the gentleman from Maine charges and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] intimates, I insist that those gentlemen are not true to themselves, not true to their duty as members of this House, nor to their duty as loyal American citizens, if they do not take measures to bring these offenders to jus-justice. I demand that it shall be done.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that at the end of ten minutes a vote may be taken on this question.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I object to that. I want to be heard on this new question that gentlemen have raised.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; I will let the debate run on a while longer.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire to say a few words on this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I give notice that at the end of ten minutes I shall move that the Committee rise, to close debate on this question.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question; important in the amount sought to be appropriated, but vastly more important in the great principle on which we are required to pass. There seems to be really but one side to this question. Every gentleman who has spoken has admitted the justice of this claim; every committee which has ever examined it has decided in favor of its merits; of all the gentlemen who have spoken only one has made a suggestion, and that gentleman thinks this is not enough.

These Indians want something. They want a part of the much they are entitled to. They want this rather than have a longer delay. After forty years these men who have been deprived of their lands and driven from their homes come here for justice. Congress has recognized the claim as just, and we cannot deny it now without stultifying ourselves. Let this tardy act of justice be done. "Righteousness," says the proverb, "exalteth a nation."

What is our position? It is this: The United States by solemn treaty nearly half a century ago pledged its honor to compensate these Indians for their lands. After years of delay the Senate of the United States on full examination made a solemn award, in which they find the balance due as stated in the bill, after making all possible deductions.

We have the lands we almost forced them to leave, for it was equivalent to force. At our bidding they left their old homes and crossed the "Father of Waters," and "their garments are wet with the dews of the Jordan they have passed," never to return.

Yet, sir, there are gentlemen here asking for a longer delay. Why? Is there not time for discussion? Has not the matter been fully discussed? I am surprised to hear the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations say that we need more time to consider this subject. Why we have here the report presented by the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. That sub-committee consisted of Mr. PARKER of Missouri, Mr. LOUGHRIDGE of Iowa, and Mr. HANCOCK of Texas. They examined this matter early in the session and presented a report giving all the facts, which report gentlemen will find before them. That report was presented to the Committee on Appropriations, and there was not a man on that committee who could say this claim had not justice in it.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, composed of gentlemen who understand this whole question from top to bottom, made a unanimous report in favor of it.

We are asked, notwithstanding all these things, to still further postpone this claim now almost half a century old. We are asked to send these old men who come here to represent their tribe, to send these missionaries of different denominations who come and ask for justice at our hands, to send these representatives of the various religious denominations who come here to ask for justice—we are asked, I say, to send these old men home again with this claim unpaid and themselves branded as "lobbyists," when they came here not on their own account, but appointed in solemn council as the accredited agents of the Choctaw Nation for the transaction of this very business. Now, shall we send them back to their homes scourged and branded as "lobbyists," when they have only presented to us a just claim which the Government ought to pay? Shall we do this when we have taken their lands from them, when we have $8,000,000 of their money in our Treasury—shall we, I say, deprive them of this because, as is urged, we have no time now to consider the matter?

Mr. Chairman, seven different committees at different sessions of Congress have recommended the passage of this claim. The Judiciary Committee of the House and of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations of the House and of the Senate and different Indian committees have unanimously passed on this claim after the fullest examination, and still we are asked to delay its payment.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Has there ever been such a report as this? Has there any such bill ever been reported providing for giving this fund to two particular persons?

Mr. STARKWEATHER. It is not given by the bill to two persons.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. They are named in this very section.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I do not yield further. I will explain that. We provide in this section for that which has had not only the sanction of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but was suggested by him. He himself suggested, as I understand, that it should be paid to these men if they should have the approval of the council of the Choctaw Nation. Such is the provision in the section and the very thing objected to was suggested by the chairman of the committee himself, as I suppose, as a proper safeguard.

Mr. GARFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not ask it should be paid to these men, but when it should be paid that it should be paid with the consent of the council of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. And we provide that it shall be paid to these two men who are appointed as the agents of the Choctaw Nation. How can we pay except to the agents of the tribe?

Mr. GARFIELD. Pay it to the tribe itself.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. That is what we do.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, rose.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. The gentleman from Maine has had twenty-five minutes while I only have five, and I cannot yield.

We provide these men shall have the approval of the Choctaw legislative council. These Choctaws have their schools, their churches, and their farms, and they have made most creditable progress in civilization. We cannot afford as a Christian nation (for there is a judgment day for nations as well as for individuals) to turn our backs upon men who come and ask the payment of an honest claim. Nor ought the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to make the objection he does that this is an old claim. Last year or the year before we voted an old claim for the State of Maine of several hundred thousand dollars for interest. Last year this House voted an appropriation to Ohio, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations voted for it, to pay her an old claim.

Mr. GARFIELD. I voted against it.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Everybody else from the State of Ohio voted for it. This year we voted $1,000,000 to pay England's claims not three years old. Will you pay England and not pay these men, when you have three times as much of their money in the Treasury and when they only ask this pittance. We have taken their lands, and what is here proposed is not one-third of what you have received for those lands. Why should we not pay them at once and not postpone it? The proviso to this section is a safeguard not only to the Government but to the Indians.

The committee say in their report:

1. The United States acquired the lands of the Choctaw Nation on account of which the said award was made on the 27th day of September, 1830, and it has held them for the benefit of its citizens ever since.

2. The United States had in its Treasury, many years prior to the 1st day of January, 1859, the proceeds resulting from the sale of the said lands, and have enjoyed the use of such moneys from that time until now.

3. The award in favor of the Choctaw Nation was an award under a treaty, and made by a tribunal whose adjudication was final and conclusive. (Comegys vs. Vasse, 1 Peters, 193.)

4. The obligations of the United States, under its treaties with Indian nations, have been declared to be equally sacred with those made by treaties with foreign nations. (Worcester vs. The State of Georgia, 6 Peters, 582.) And such treaties, Mr. Justice Miller declares, are to be construed liberally. (The Kansas Indians, 5 Wallace, 737–760.)

5. The engagements and obligations of a treaty are to be interpreted in accordance with the principles of the public law, and not in accordance with any municipal code or executive regulation. No statement of this proposition can equal the clearness or force with which Mr. Webster declares it in his opinion on the Florida claims, attached to the report in the case of Letitia Humphreys, (Senate Report No. 93, first session Thirty-sixth Congress, page 16.) Speaking of the obligation of a treaty, he said:

"A treaty is the supreme law of the land. It can neither be limited nor restrained nor modified nor altered. It stands on the ground of national contract, and is declared by the Constitution to be the supreme law of the land, and this gives it a character higher than any act of ordinary legislation. It enjoys an immunity from the operation and effect of all such legislation."

Then as to the mode of payment provided in this bill, it cannot be more guarded, and all these amendments are but pretexts for defeating this bill. That is what it means. If the gentlemen who voted to make this claim in order on this bill mean to pass it, they will pass it now without amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] means postponement and defeat. It means that we will pay millions to pay old debts to others to build magnificent buildings, but we will not pay this honest debt.

Mr. SHANKS rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. SHANKS. I desire to be heard only for a few moments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the motion until the gentleman from Indiana gets through.

Mr. SHANKS. I wish to answer some questions that have been put to the House on this matter. I do not care to go over a single one of the arguments on this question which have been already gone over. But I do wish to answer one question which was asked by the gentleman from Maine, which he asked with a good deal of spirit, and in which it might be thought there was something that remained unanswered. He asks, "Why has this been delayed so long?"

The gentleman says that this is a claim thirty years old. But, sir, during those thirty years there has been much done in regard to it. It was only as far back as 1855 that the Senate of the United States was made an umpire by its own agreement with this Indian tribe for the settlement of this identical question. The treaty of 1855 had nothing in it but the settlement of this question. It was made a treaty by the consent of the Senate for that purpose.

There were two propositions laid down at that time. The Senate of the United States was authorized as umpire to settle this question in one of two ways, and it was not authorized to settle it in any other way. One of the ways was this: that they might declare as umpire an amount in bulk, an amount in gross, as to how much we were to pay the Indians for the claim. The other was that they should consider the net amount of the proceeds of the land that we got from them. The Senate by its resolution decided in favor of basing the settlement on the net proceeds and directed the Secretary of the Interior to render an account upon that. That account was rendered, amounting to $2,900,000. The Senate then took out the items for lands that Congress had given away for schools, railroads, and the 5 per cent. fund to improve the country; so that the Senate made the Indians build our school-houses, educate our children, construct our roads, and build our railroads. That was what the Senate did after the rendition of the account by the Secretary of the Interior. That, too, after we had taken out the pensions paid to men who fought under our own flag. That, too, after we had agreed to send those people to their new homes. We charged them over a million for it. After all these deductions, amounting to $2,300,000, when no man could find occasion for plundering them of another dollar, there was then appropriated $500,000. That confirmed the award and made it as binding as any transaction between men could be. When an account was rendered part of that amount was paid. That is what we did. On that we paid $250,000.

Now, then, comes the question of the gentleman from Maine as to why this has been delayed so long. The war broke out in 1861. These people found themselves in the hands of the rebels, and a United States officer, a United States agent, Douglass H. Cooper, appointed by the Government, commissioned by the United States, led those Indians in rebellion against the Government and commanded them during the war. That threw them in opposition to the Government. By a statute passed in 1862, the officers of the Government were forbidden to pay tribes of Indians a portion of whom were at war with the Government. At the close of the war the question was in the same position; $250,000 were paid over, and the other $250,000 were to be paid in bonds. This has not been paid yet.

Why has it been delayed so long? Since that time these people have been here asking us to settle this account. And during that time the reports have been presented which have been mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER.] The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] when chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, reported in favor of it. The Committee on Indian Affairs twice reported in favor of it. The Committee on Appropriations at this time have reported in favor of it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER, having resumed the chair, said: This being the third Monday of the month, and the hour of two o'clock having arrived, the Committee on the District of Columbia are entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that we be allowed first to finish this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the floor cannot be held by the Committee on the District against a motion for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire that we may finish the sundry civil bill, and I think the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will have plenty of time for his business after we are through with that bill.

Mr. COTTON. I should have no objection to allowing the gentleman until three o'clock, if that will do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will move to suspend the rules so that we may continue the consideration of the bill, with the understanding that when we get through with it the District business shall come up.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the sundry civil bill, and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section and the subject thereof be limited to ten minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

COMMISSIONS OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the House request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commissions of certain officers of the Army.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COBURN moved to reconsider the order just made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. COBURN, Mr. ALBRIGHT, and Mr. NESMITH as the conferees on the part of the House.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. GARFIELD to limit the time for debate upon the pending section of the sundry civil appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will modify my motion so as to close debate on the pending section of the sundry civil appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole in fifteen minutes.

Mr. COTTON. I desire to understand the proposition of the gentleman exactly.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is that the House now go into Committee of the Whole, with the limitation of debate I have indicated, and when the committee rises the gentleman shall have his rights.

Mr. COTTON. The same as now?

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3300) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending section of this bill is limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to make a few additional remarks upon one of the points raised by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.] Some way or other I have the impression that all the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Maine are simply to delay or defeat the proposition embraced in this section.

The question has been raised here that this money should not be paid in the manner proposed by this section; that it should be funded and placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. I believe the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is that this money shall be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. Now let me state to the Committee of the Whole one objection I have to that method of disposing of Indian funds, especially when they belong to tribes who I am satisfied are capable of taking care of their own interests. We have said that these Choctaw Indians are able to take care of their own interests. By the eleventh article of the treaty of 1855 we provided that all the money necessary to satisfy the individual claims of Indians against this nation should be paid to them. We then regarded them as entirely competent to take care of their interests.

The fact is that these claims, which have accumulated and been drawing interest from the time of the removal of these people to this time, may absorb all of this money. But if it would not, I object to any longer funding the moneys belonging to these Indians and putting them in the Treasury of the United States where annually Washington attorneys, as they have been doing for fifty years past, are around the doors of the Treasury waiting for a slice of it. I prefer to give this money to the people who are entitled to it and entirely competent to manage it for themselves in their own way.

During the war the officers of our Government went into the Indian country and stole the cattle of these people and the herds of these people; they burned down their school-houses. These people ask for this money to beautify and improve their homes, and to replenish the herds that were stolen from them by the sworn officers of this Government. We are asked who are Peter P. Pitchlynn and Mr. Folsom. Sir, they are the authorized agents of these Indians, and have been for many years past.

I have here a volume of the laws of the Choctaw Nation. They are as intelligent and as accurate in language and in intent as any laws passed by this body. These laws contain five different appointments by the Choctaw Nation of these men as their agents. Ah, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] say that we ought to pay this money to the individual Indians. My friend from Pennsylvania, who not only smells, but sees and tastes a lobbyist in every man that he meets in connection with this matter, objects to people coming here in connection with this matter. But we cannot pay these individual Indians unless they come here to get it, and that would not meet the approval of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER.]

There is an old Greek proverb about the manner in which we always make up our opinions of things and persons. It is that we are apt to compare with that which we know best. Every one knows his own mind and heart better than the mind and heart of anybody else. Therefore a man is very apt, according to that proverb, to take his own mind and heart to determine what another would be apt to do under like circumstances.

Among these five appointments I find the following:

Be it further resolved, That it is hereby declared to be the intention of the Choctaw Nation that the terms of service of the delegates herein mentioned shall expire whenever the whole amount of the net proceeds question is adjusted and settled by Congress; and said delegates are required to render a full and just report of their proceedings and the progress they are making with the claim from time to time to the principal chief of this nation.

Now, in this section we have provided that not one cent of this money shall be paid to these agents of this people, lawfully appointed as such, until the council of the nation first approves the action of Congress, until their council first acts upon it. I desire to have that provision of the section read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That before the delivery of the said bonds to the said delegates, as herein directed, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act approving the provisions of this act, and shall declare that the receipt of the said bonds by the said delegates, or either of them, on behalf of said the nation, is accepted and received by the said nation as a full payment and satisfaction of all claims of the said nation, whether national or individual, growing out of the cession of lands by the said nation to the United States under the treaty of September 27, 1830; a copy of which act, attested by the seal of the aids nation, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury previous to the delivery of the said bonds to the delegates aforesaid.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBURN obtained the the floor.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. COBURN. This is an improper time and manner to attempt to put this measure through this House. It should not be attached to an appropriation bill to be discussed under the five-minute rule and hurried through at the end of a session of Congress, when everybody is tired of investigation and discussion. If brought before Congress at all, it ought to be as a separate measure, resting upon its own merits.

To relate the history of this claim fully would take an hour. From year to year, almost from age to age, it has been presented, and no one in five minutes or ten minutes, or even half an hour, can pretend to discuss the question properly. For this reason alone, if for no other, the section should be stricken out. Independent legislation of this sort should not be attached to an appropriation bill. I would vote to dispose of it in any manner so as to get it out of the bill. Whatever may be the merits of the claim, however just it may be, it should not be passed in this hasty and improper manner.

In addition to that objection to the consideration of the claim at this time there are others which concern its merits. I have in my hand the report of Mr. Banfield, made by him as Solicitor of the Treasury two years ago, upon this claim, in which report he declares it fraudulent and utterly without foundation.

Several MEMBERS. Let that report be read.

Mr. COBURN. I will read a few sentences from the report. It is lengthy, and could not be read through in two hours:

To say nothing of the apparent fact, which I have endeavored to show from the history of the fourteenth article, that the United States has already paid under it a far greater number than ever had just claims, through practices notoriously fraudulent, there is this great fact, hitherto studiously kept in the background by the claimants, that in 1852, in consideration of the payment at that time of outstanding scrip amounting to $872,000, the nation guaranteed that no more claims should ever be made under the fourteenth article. That receipt, signed by the nation, forever bars all claim under the article by anybody, and can therefore form no possible ground, in any view, of the recommendation to pay the enormous award of nearly $300,000,000 which the committee made. * * * * *

A history embracing forty-five pages—

it appears, beyond doubt, that its basis is the alleged right to reservations under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830; that under this article a large number of reservations beyond what the Choctaws were legally entitled to were allowed by the Government, although, on the evidence, absolutely fraudulent. But, however this may be, Congress, before they finally paid them, determined that the Choctaw Nation should give a solemn acknowledgment that they should never thereafter make claim again to reservations under the article, as a condition-precedent to its action, in paying those which had already been allowed. This the nation having done, the claim, as it seems to me, should be regarded as completely barred by Congress. * * * * * *

[Copy of release referred to in the foregoing letter.]

Whereas by an act of Congress entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852," it is provided that after the 30th day of June, 1852, all payments of interest on the amounts awarded Choctaw claimants, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, for lands on which they resided, but which it is impossible to give them, shall cease, and that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to pay said claimants the amount of principal awarded in each case respectively, and that amount necessary for this purpose be appropriated, not exceeding $872,000; and that the final payment and satisfaction of said awards shall be first ratified and approved as a final release of all claims of such parties under the fourteenth article of said treaty, by the proper national authority of the Choctaws, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Now, be it known, that the said general council of the Choctaw Nation do hereby ratify and approve the final payment and satisfaction of said awards, agreeably to the provisions of the act aforesaid, as a final release of all claims of such parties, under the fourteenth article of said treaty.

Under the release I have just read $850,000 was paid by the Government and accepted by the authorities of the Choctaw Nation as a complete and final settlement. There the matter should rest. If the account has since been opened, if an equity has been raised on behalf of these Indians, if an obligation has since been incurred by the treaty-making power of the United States, that is matter of discussion for lawyers; it is a question that ought to be investigated thoroughly and completely, and should not be brought in here at the end of an appropriation bill to be discussed under the present circumstances.

I regard this matter as of very great importance aside from the amount of money involved. We ought to adopt and stand by a policy against opening claims of such great age unless some equity of a very strong character is presented.

Here, so far as I can see, there is none. The claim seems to be trumped up after settlement in full more than twenty years. It deserves the fullest investigation and the most thorough discussion, such as we cannot give at this time.

Mr. SHANKS. I ask attention for a single moment. My colleague [Mr. COBURN] has read from a report made by one Banfield. Now this man Banfield has not reflected much glory upon his brow as an American official. That man made this report about a year ago, and connected with it was a contract for $30,000 to be paid out of the national Treasury to a set of fellows who had claimed to be attorneys for the Choctaws; but when the Choctaws refused to recognize them, and would not pay them, they then went to the Secretary of the Treasury and got a contract for $30,000 to defeat the very claim for which, as they said in letters which I have in my possession, they had been laboring for six long years. And in an appropriation bill passed in the last Congress there was inserted a proviso forbidding the payment of that $30,000.

Mr. COBURN. What connection has that with this claim?

Mr. SHANKS. The men connected with that fraudulent transaction in which Banfield figures were Page, of this city, who was kicked by Mr. Dent out of his office on account of his rascality; a man named Grayson; and another man who testified so fearfully before the District Investigating Committee—a man named Kirtland, I believe. That report is the only evidence ever claimed to have been presented against the payment of this money; and it was simply culled from the records of the country on an arrangement with Banfield to plunder the Treasury out of $30,000.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am very glad that the sober attention of the committee has been called to this important subject. I cannot doubt what the result will be. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] and I will have no controversy about the lobbyists. I think I am justified in saying that neither he nor I will ever be believed to have anything to do with that class of men. I have not said that his garments have been touched, but that a raging and roaring lobby has been crowding this claim in our corridors, in the hotels of Washington, and elsewhere. I do know, and I should be blind if I did not see it. The gentleman is being used by men whom he should be glad to thwart. This I believe. He does not; that is all. I may be wrong or he may be wrong. Time will show.

So far as Mr. Banfield's opinion goes, and he has been alluded to, I have nothing to say. The late Secretary of the Treasury, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] whose integrity no man impeaches, whose industry everybody recognizes, whose faithfulness in office has passed into a proverb, examined this Choctaw claim two years ago, and I ask the Clerk to read his letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1872.

SIR: I have, at your verbal request, examined certain questions which have been brought to your notice affecting your obligation, under the laws of Congress, to pay over to the Choctaw Nation certain bonds, for the delivery of which claim is made upon you.

I find that no objections to such delivery are made, except such as can be gathered from the various treaties made with the Choctaw Nation and the action taken by Congress upon the claim which has been presented.

I will briefly recite the substantial points of the treaties which are relied upon to sustain the claim, and indicate my views thereon; I see no occasion to go back further than to the treaty of 1820.

This treaty provides for an exchange of a small part of the land of the Choctaws, east of the Mississippi River, for a country beyond the said river, the purpose being that those Indians wishing to become civilized and to be made citizens should remain, and that those who will not work, but prefer to live by hunting, should go to the new country west of the river.

Article 1 of this treaty cedes a part of the Choctaw lands to the United States, defining the same by bounds.

Article 2 states that, in consideration of said cession by the Choctaw Nation, and in part satisfaction therefor, a certain tract west of the Mississippi River, defined by bounds, is ceded by the United States to the Choctaws.

The other articles of this treaty are beneficial to the Indians, engaging to subsist those who remove over the river until they arrive at their new home, and that a part of the land ceded to the United States shall be sold to create a school fund for the benefit of the Indians on both sides of the river, and making other provisions for the comfort and necessities of the Indians.

The report of the Solicitor of the Treasury and an examination of the treaties of 1830 and 1855, with the Choctaw Indians, aided by such information as I have been able to obtain from other sources, tend very strongly to show that there is no equitable ground on which the Government can be required to issue the bonds in question, or make payment of the large sum of money covered by the claim of the Choctaw Nation.

The Department, however, has not had the means of a thorough examination, nor will there be time during the present session of Congress for the proper inquiries by a committee of either House; and I have therefore the honor to suggest that a bill or joint resolution be passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to delay the issue of the bonds until there shall have been further investigation and action by Congress.

Very respectfully,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That was only two years ago. If gentlemen are prepared, after this examination by a non-interested Secretary of the Treasury into this case and so condemning it as he does, to vote for it, upon them be the responsibility.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me for a question?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have very little time left.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I wish to know of my friend from Maine whether that opinion, which is the opinion of Mr. Banfield and the Secretary of the Treasury himself knew nothing about it—whether that opinion is his opinion?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury not only from the information of Mr. Banfield but from other sources.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Is that the opinion of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is my opinion that we need as much caution as Mr. BOUTWELL exercised. It is proposed by this section of the bill to pay this money over to two men, Pitchlynn and Folsom. The gentleman from Missouri says it is guarded because it is provided before they shall receive the bonds the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act approving of their authority. But, Mr. Chairman, anything these two men or either of them has done in these past years, mortgaging this claim to men around this Capitol who have been pushing it, cannot in any way be controvened by the Choctaw Nation by subsequent action. I want all that shut off.

HOW DOES THE QUESTION STAND?

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] proposes a very simple amendment, and that is that this fund shall be placed where it shall be held in trust for the very purposes named in the treaty of 1855. Why is there any sensitiveness about adopting that amendment? Why was it not accepted at once? Why is it the lobby which is gazing with hungry eyes here from these galleries would not accept that at once? Because it takes away from them their last hope of fattening on this claim. My friend will see the day that he will regret fighting these men's battles.

But in addition to that there will be offered another proposition by my friend from New York [Mr. WHEELER] which just suits me, and that is this: These claims are of two kinds. A portion should go to enable the Choctaw Nation to pay its just liabilities, not liabilities to A and B, who have been hanging around Congress for years, but liabilities to its own people. No mortal power has ever yet been able to show how much will be taken of this money to pay such liabilities. The proposition will direct the Secretary of the Treasury between this and the next session of Congress to ascertain how much will be swallowed up by these claims. He will be able then to report a schedule to the next Congress. Then Congress can see how much of this fund is to go in that way, and the balance can be placed as a trust fund, which the Choctaw people will hold for educational and governmental purposes. What is fairer than that? Let us adopt it. Better that the lobby weep than that the Indians suffer——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out these words in lines 11 and 12:

Peter P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized delegates and agents of the Choctaw Nation, or to either of them who may demand the same on behalf of the said nation.

And in lieu thereof insert:

Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Choctaw Nation and the people thereof, according to the terms of the treaty providing for the same.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 72.

Mr. KASSON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KASSON, and Mr. PARKER of Missouri, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 81.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer the following as a substitute for the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to inquire into the amount of liabilities due from the Choctaw tribe of Indians to individuals as referred to in articles 12 and 13 of the treaty of June 22, 1855, between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians and to report the same to the next session of Congress with a view of ascertaining what amounts, if any, should be deducted from the sum due from the United States to said Choctaw tribe for the purpose of enabling the said tribe to pay its liabilities and thereby to enable Congress to provide a fund to be held for educational and other purposes for said tribe as provided for in article 13 of the treaty aforesaid.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the original text, to perfect what my previous amendment calls for.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 58 strike out these words: "to the said delegates;" in line 61 strike out the words "by the said delegates or either of them, on behalf of the said nation is," and insert the word "are;" so that it will read:

That before the delivery of the said bonds as herein directed, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act approving the provisions of this act, and shall declare that the said bonds are accepted, &c.

Mr. KASSON. That is merely following up the amendment already made.

The question being taken on Mr. KASSON's amendment, it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER.]

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I hope if that amendment be adopted that it will be followed up by another declaring that we never mean to pay this debt.

Mr. SPEER. O, that is mere clap-trap.

Mr. RANDALL. We only mean to pay the people we owe.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. That means that we do not intend to pay anything.

Mr. SPEER. We do not mean to pay the rings of lobbyists.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will order tellers and appoint the gentleman from New York, Mr. WHEELER, and the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. STARKWEATHER.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 70.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I give notice that I shall call for the yeas and nays on all these amendments.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If the gentleman had not given that notice I should.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 4. That the clause in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, which provides that "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the census-takers of 1860, or their assigns, the sums set to their credit now in the Treasury of the United States, any provision of existing laws to the contrary notwithstanding," is hereby re-enacted and declared to include, as entitled to payment and to be paid, both marshals and assistant marshals employed in taking said census.

Mr. SPEER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying, as I see the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] is now in his seat, that I am informed that the building of the State Department was done with granite from the Westham quarry and that the Government pays two dollars per cubic foot at the quarry for it. It is then transported seven miles by rail to the Government sheds, at Manchester, where it is cut for the United States, the Government furnishing the sheds; also an architect at twelve dollars a day; one superintendent at ten dollars per day; one property man; one boss to every twelve stone-cutters; one blacksmith to every twelve stone-cutters; four hundred kits of tools; laborers, &c. All this is paid for by the United States.

In addition the United States pay to the granite company 15 per cent. on all the money disbursed. This sum is paid in addition to the amount the company receive for their stone. By this operation the granite company are not out of pocket one cent. They do not pay the labor out of their own pockets, which if they did would be a partial excuse for the gift to them of 15 per cent. on the amount disbursed. At the end of each month the company call all their hands up to sign the roll; when the roll is signed and witnessed by a Government officer, it is sent on to Mr. Mullett, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and receipted as if the money had been paid out by the contractors, when really not a dollar of it has been paid by them. Mullett then pays the money and keeps the receipted roll as his voucher, and these contractors get 15 per cent. for disbursing the amount which Mullett pays them. There is disbursed every month an average of $55,000.

I understand that in addition to the gentlemen named by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] as members of this company, there is a gentleman by the name of Smith, president of a New York railroad company, and Mr. Washburn, a United States pension-agent at Richmond, who are also members of the company, and it is understood that there are two silent partners whose names I am not able to give at this time—friends of certain parties in prominent positions.

Now, if this appropriation passes of $700,000 for the State Department, 15 per cent. of that amount, being $105,000, will be paid out to this company for simply disbursing it, paying it to the hands. I desire also to say that the Government were offered stone, almost as good stone—that out of which the Scott statue has been made in this city—for sixty-five cents per foot, while they are paying two dollars per foot for the stone being put into this building. We pay two dollars a foot for the stone in the rough, the Government paying for the work afterward.

Mr. O'BRIEN. From whom does this 15 per cent. come?

Mr. SPEER. From the Government, and it goes into the hands of the contractors forming this granite company. They run no risk, they are at no expense, and this enormous sum is paid to them by the Government without any consideration whatever. Is it not time that we pause before we lavish upon these men further appropriations?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. I wish him to state whether these gentlemen, Messrs. Washburn & Co., did not make the most reasonable bid for this granite contract when given out?

Mr. SPEER. I can only repeat that stone almost as good—I believe in the gentleman's own State—was offered for sixty-five cents per foot and these contractors get two dollars a foot.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. We have had these straw bids before. Is the gentleman ready to vouch for the responsibility of the bidders?

Mr. SPEER. I am able to vouch for the responsibility of the owners of the quarry.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I renew the amendment. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] if he states the fact that the contract price for this granite is two dollars per cubic foot upon his own knowledge?

Mr. SPEER. I certainly do not state it on my own knowledge. As I have already said, I state it upon information which I believe to be correct. I have no knowledge about it. I understand, however, that the gentleman in company with Mr. Mullett visited this quarry not long ago, and perhaps he can give the House the facts on his own knowledge.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The statement of the gentleman in regard to the contract price for this granite is a very good illustration of the amount of confidence to be placed in all the statements he has given the House, and which I have no doubt he derived from some other source, and I have no doubt I know perfectly well what that source is.

Now, my recollection is that the contract price for this granite was either fifty-three or fifty-nine cents per cubic foot. That is the contract price at which these gentlemen are furnishing the granite under their contract, and I have no doubt that they were the lowest bidders. The schedules, bids, and papers in the Department will show that they were the lowest bidders at the time the contract was assigned.

Now, in regard to the statement made by my colleague from the Richmond district, [Mr. SMITH,] that Mr. Washburn, and nobody else, has swindled the Government of the United States out of fifty or sixty thousand dollars, or out of any other sum, I desire to say that the statement is entirely unfounded, and that the manly course for my colleague to pursue, if he has charges of that kind to make, would be to make them in a proper way and have them investigated in a proper manner by a committee. He says that he blushes to own that Mr. Washburn, the gentleman who has thus swindled the Government, as he alleges, is the pension agent in his city. I know, sir, that Mr. Washburn is equally ready to blush and does blush at the reflection that the gentleman who made this charge is his Representative on this floor. If my colleague has any charges to make against Mr. Washburn, let him make them here in a plain and open manner. I say upon my personal responsibility that there is not a word of truth in the statement, and I say further that Mr. Washburn is ready to defend himself and to show that fact whenever he may be called upon to do so in any proper and legitimate manner. My colleague owes it to himself, to Mr. Washburn, to this House, to put his charges in proper form, and to take that officer of the Government before the court which the law provides, where he will be properly punished if he has done anything of this kind.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have put these charges in a proper form, and I have placed them in the hands of the President of the United States. And in addition to these, I have put in a charge which the President himself said was sufficient to cause the removal of this man Washburn. I do not want to cast reflection upon the gentleman who represents Petersburgh, Norfolk, and the south side of Virginia. I have nothing to say with him or against him; his people will settle with him. I represent the Richmond district. If that granite contract is an honest one, I will stand here and defend the contractors. If there has been any stealing under the contract, then I ask why the gentleman from Norfolk, [Mr. PLATT,] nearly one hundred miles away, comes here and tells this House there is no stealing? I say that Andrew Washburn drew that 15 per cent., that the Government paid it for nothing, that he never put one dollar into that concern, never bore one dollar of expenses, and yet is to-day $60,000 better off than when he commenced, unless he has divided with somebody else. That is what I say.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to allow me to move that the committee rise in order to obtain an order from the House to close debate.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I wish to know if I am to be attacked on this floor and deprived of an opportunity to defend myself? I appeal to the fairness of this committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I want to say this: If I have attacked the gentleman I am responsible anywhere for it.

Mr. BECK. When the question of the building of the new State, War, and Navy Department was up the other day I called the attention of the committee to the fact which I believed then, and believe now, to be true, from information received from some of the officials at the Treasury Department, that gross mismanagement had accrued in the construction of this and other buildings, by reason of the ex-Secretary depriving the Comptrollers and Auditors of their legitimate power to investigate the accounts of the Supervising Architect, and that he had done so against their protest; I insisted that no payments ought to be made to any of the contractors until these matters were investigated. The statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to-day seems to verify what I said in that regard, and to prove that these accounts ought to be investigated before payments are made. When I made that statement on Saturday the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] rose in his place and controverted it. I read from the report of the debate on that occasion:

Mr. BECK. Is it not true that for the year past under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury the Comptrollers and Auditors have been deprived of all supervision over the Accounts of this Supervising Architect?

Mr. RANDALL. Against law?

Mr. BECK. Yes; against law.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I cannot answer that question. But I say in regard to the expenditures made for the State, War, and Navy Department building, the Secretary of the Treasury had had nothing to do with it. Not one dollar of the expenditure has been made under his supervision or order. Every dollar of it has been expended under the direction of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State has the entire control of it; has control over every dollar of the expenditure from the commencement of the building. That I state upon my own knowledge.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] moved to amend the then pending amendment, and I followed it with a remark. I read the amendment to the amendment and the remark which I made:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the items for which this sum shall be expended.

Mr. BECK. I do not believe it to be the fact, as has been stated, that this money is expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; but if so, how can the Secretary of the Treasury account for the expenditure?

I now call attention to volume 17, Statutes at Large, page 352, where I find the following provision of law in the appropriation bill, approved June 10, 1872.

Public works under the Treasury Department:

* * * For continuation of the construction of the building for the Department of State, Washington, District of Columbia, $800,000; for the east wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments, $400,000: Provided, That all appropriations for public buildings under the Treasury Department shall hereafter be available immediately upon the approval of the acts containing such appropriations.

I have risen now for the purpose of saying that in my judgment the law of June 10, 1872, put this State Department building, as all other buildings are, under the direction of the Treasury Department and under the direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. I say further that all the accounts for moneys expended for this building, as well as for every other building, which have been withdrawn from the supervision of the Comptrollers and Auditors of the Treasury Department, have been paid in violation of law, and that the accounts of the Supervising Architect have been paid without undergoing the supervision which the law requires they shall undergo. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] was mistaken in his statement that of his personal knowledge it was under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MERRIAM. I desire to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the present Secretary has ordered that no money shall be paid until audited by the proper accounting officers.

Mr. BECK. I said the other day that that was one of the first official acts of the present Secretary. I want the past vouchers investigated, so as to see where among things the $60,000 has gone which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] says was wrongfully paid.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has read from one appropriation bill the second appropriation for this building. I ask him if the first appropriation for the building did not put it under the entire supervision of the Secretary of State? I ask him to look at the first appropriation.

Mr. BECK. I have not turned to that, but I understand from outside information that in volume 16 of the Statutes at Large there is an appropriation to that effect. But since June 10, 1872, during all the year in which this illegal act of the Secretary was operating, (for it was only about a year ago that the power of the Auditors and Comptrollers over these payments was taken away)—since that time $800,000 has been appropriated for the State Department building and $400,000 for the east wing, making $1,200,000, and this expenditure has not been under the control or subject to the supervision of the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury. Is not that true?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir. I have no doubt my friend from Kentucky means to state the case fairly; but if he will look at the first appropriation act for the State Department building he will find that the whole matter was put under the control of the Secretary of State; and it has been so continued. I think that the gentleman in his statements has done injustice both to the late Secretary of the Treasury and the Supervising Architect. He certainly did injustice to them in his statements the other day, and if I had time I would show wherein he did so. The new State Department building has been and is under the supervision of the Secretary of State, and the Supervising Architect has simply done his duty under his direction.

Mr. BECK. Why, sir, here is the act of June 10, 1872, which appropriates $800,000 for the State Department building and $400,000 for the east wing, and puts it all under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Supervising Architect. No matter what previous laws may have provided, this act repeals or supersedes all prior provisions, and the expenditures made since this appropriation of June 10, 1872, until the rescinding of the action to which I have referred by the present Secretary, have been made without the requirement of any vouchers to be submitted to the Auditors and Comptrollers, the action of the late Secretary of the Treasury being in this respect a palpable violation of the law, which in my judgment was an impeachable offense.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I stated in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky on last Saturday, when this subject was under debate, that I could not answer the gentleman in regard to orders given by the Secretary of the Treasury; that I knew nothing about them. But I did state from my own knowledge, and I repeat the statement as true, that all the disbursements and expenditures made in the construction of the new buildings for the State, War, and Navy Departments have been and are being made under the direct control and supervision of the Secretary of State; that the Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do with them whatever. This the gentleman can ascertain for himself to be the fact upon inquiry at either of those Departments.

As to the charges that have been made here in regard to the manner in which this work is being done upon that building, I do not understand that any charges have been made against myself; but statements have been made that 15 per cent. of the money of the Government is being paid to a favored contractor upon all expenditures, and that for this 15 per cent. he renders no service whatever. I have a general knowledge of those contracts, which enables me to state (and I believe this case is no exception to all the contracts that have been made for furnishing granite for public buildings within the last two or three years) that, in the first place, advertisement was made for stone to be furnished at so much per foot; and afterward a contract was given for cutting the stone, the contract for furnishing the stone and for cutting it being given in almost every instance to the same parties. In consequence of this contract for cutting the stone the men engaged in that work, instead of being under the direct control of the Government, are employed by a contractor. There is a Government inspector. There is no architect paid twelve dollars a day, or anybody else paid ten dollars a day. So far as I know the highest price paid to anybody is six dollars a day, which is allowed to General Randall, the superintendent.

Mr. SPEER. Does the gentleman state upon his personal knowledge that there is not an architect paid by the Government at twelve dollars a day; a superintendent at ten dollars a day; one property man; one boss to every twelve stone-cutters, and one blacksmith to every twelve stone-cutters; all paid by the Government?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I say that so far as I know there is no one receiving more than six dollars a day, which is being paid to General Randall, a gentleman selected for his skill and knowledge in connection with these matters to act in the capacity of superintendent to watch over the interests of the Government. I say that no dollar of expense on the part of the Government is allowed to be contracted by any contractor. There is simply a provision for a superintendent and a time-keeper to watch over the interests of the Government. The contract in this case is precisely like the contracts that have been made in the building of the post-office at New York, the post-office at Boston, and other public buildings.

But, sir, I see that the Committee of the Whole is impatient; I hear gentlemen around me calling for the debate to close. I wish only to enter a general denial of the statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER.] I say that he is entirely mistaken as to the price given for granite. I am not here to shield any man who has been guilty of any wrong against the Government. I will go as far as any man on this floor in investigating and punishing the acts of any one who has been guilty of fraud in connection with this matter as any other.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed upon the pending paragraph.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to have a section of the statute read in reference to this matter.

Mr. RICE. I want to move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Connecticut will be allowed to have the three minutes left of the eight which were allowed for debate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no feeling in this matter except to see fair play, and where wrong statements are made to see that they are corrected. I have nothing to do with the matter in Virginia, but I think my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is entirely mistaken when he charges that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Supervising Architect acted in an improper manner in this matter. The Secretary of the Treasury has had nothing to do with the building. It has been by statute placed under the control of the Secretary of State, and the Supervising Architect has been detailed to act under the orders of the Secretary of State. I ask the Clerk to read section 2, making the first appropriation, and gentlemen of the committee will find by the law the statement I make is the true one.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $500,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction, under the direction of the Secretary of State, on the southerly portion of the premises now occupied by the War and Navy Departments, a building which will form the south wing of a building that when completed will be similar in the ground plan and dimensions to the Treasury building, and provide accommodations for the State, War, and Navy Departments; the building to be of such kind of stone as may be hereafter determined by the concurrent decision of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, three stories in height, with basement and attic, and of fire-proof construction, the plans to be approved by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, before any money is expended under the provisions of this act.

Mr. KELLOGG. That shows that the Secretary of the Treasury has had nothing to do with it at all, and that the building has been under the charge of the Secretary of State and the Supervising Architect.

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate on the amendment is in order.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of erecting and completing a United States court-house at the city of Auburn, New York, $100,000.

Mr. COX. I propose to add to the fifth section before we go to any other.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on the amendment moved by the gentleman from New York that it is an appropriation not provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out.

Mr. RICE. If in order, I move that the committee rise, and I should like to say one word before that vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Mr. COX. I believe an amendment of that kind should be put at the end of every appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. COX. It is not new legislation. It makes no new penalty. It was ruled to be in order to other appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment to come in as an additional section.

Mr. GARFIELD. Wait until the last section has been read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to offer it as an amendment to come in after section 4.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, as follows:

After section 4 insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay unsettled claims legally existing against the Government of the United States on account of services actually rendered in carrying the mails of the United States exclusively in the aforesaid States prior to the 14th day of April, 1861: Provided, That before any payment shall be made satisfactory evidence shall be furnished that no compensation has been received from any other source for such service.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that that is not only unauthorized by existing law, but is against a specific statute, the statute of 1867, which provides that this class of claims should not come in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I give notice that when we get back into the House I will move to suspend the rules and adopt this section.

The Clerk read the fifth section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That hereafter there shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a statement in detail of the contingent expenses of each Department or Bureau of the Government incurred during and for the service of the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I make the point of order on that section that it changes existing law.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman does not want a report to be made by each Department of its contingent expenses, he will take the responsibility of preventing it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I always take the responsibility of everything I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts call the attention of the Chair to the law with which this section is in conflict?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is no such law; but I say that you cannot point to any law requiring it.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a law requiring the Departments to keep an account of their contingent expenses.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is so. There is a law requiring them to keep an account. That is right. But there is no law requiring them to report that to Congress. And the very fact that my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, tells me that I should take the responsibility of stopping this change of the law, shows that it is a change of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following amendment as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That section 6 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 11, 1874, be amended by striking out the following words, namely: "Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all missions abroad, such as."

Mr. GARFIELD. In the consular and diplomatic bill passed and approved on the 11th of this month the appropriation for consular expenses unfortunately had the words "foreign intercourse" in the language which preceded the appropriation. The Secretary of State informs the committee that that will not allow the use of that appropriation for consular business, but would apply only to foreign missions. The correction was made when the bill was before the Committee on Appropriations, but it was omitted to be put in the printed form of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the early part of this bill we have appropriated for thirteen soldiers on the roll of the Door-keeper. It is found that there are fourteen. There has been one left out. I ask unanimous consent to go back to that part of the bill and make the number fourteen, and also to add an equivalent sum to the appropriation increasing the amount appropriated by one-thirteenth.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to offer one other amendment. There is a colored lady who has charge of the ladies' retiring-room, and the officers of the House consider it desirable that she should have a permanent place. A person having a similar charge in the Senate has been put in another bill as a permanent employé. I offer the following amendment:

On page 10, after line 211, insert these words:
To pay Harriet P. Fisk, employed under the Door-keeper of the House for attending the ladies' retiring-room of the House, $600 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call the attention of the House to one other thing, and only to one other thing, before moving that the committee rise and report the bill. The committee have put on this bill an appropriation for printing the Agricultural Reports. This will render necessary an increase of the force in the folding department. In our legislative bill we have cut down the folders to twenty. The Door-keeper informs me that it will be utterly impossible to attempt the folding of this document if that reduction is made. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. RANDALL objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen object I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. FORT. I desire the unanimous consent of the committee to make a merely formal correction in the amendment in reference to the Agricultural Reports. The amendment by mistake makes provision in reference to the reports for 1873 and 1874. It should be 1872 and 1873. The record is right, but the manuscript in the hands of the Clerk is wrong. I hope there will be no objection to making that correction.

There was no objection, and the correction was made.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer the following amendment:

For repairing the building occupied by the Post-Office Department, $100,000.

I wish to state in explanation of this amendment——

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. There is absolute necessity for something being done to preserve this building.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that this appropriation is not in accordance with law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair is of the opinion that a contingency for carrying on one of the Departments of the Government is in order.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Now, if I may have reasonable assurance that I shall be permitted to proceed one minute without interruption, I desire to explain this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The Postmaster-General and the gentleman having this building in charge—having control and management of the building as well as being disbursing officers of the Department—have both been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at various times this winter, urging that a bill should be passed by the present Congress authorizing the enlargement and reconstruction of the post-office building. The business of the Department has so increased as to be beyond the present capacity of the building, and there is great necessity for additional room. The recent improvements made about this property by which the streets around the Department have been very much lowered have caused cracks in the building, and it is being very much damaged. There is no appropriation and no law under which anything can be done to preserve the building. It is the opinion of these gentlemen that with this expenditure they can make the necessary repairs and secure some twenty-five or thirty additional rooms in the basement which will be available for offices. We were asked to do one of two things, either to urge the House to authorize the reconstruction of the building by raising it and putting one story under it and one on top, which would involve an expenditure of $1,500,000, or as a temporary expedient to authorize these absolutely necessary repairs to be made. From the personal examination made by the committee and from the evidence of these gentlemen, I am prepared to say that this appropriation is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the building and should be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the building will last another year as it is.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. PLATT, of Virginia; and it was not agreed to, there being on a division ayes 31, noes not counted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WHEELER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DAWES reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3300) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a few words to the House in regard to the amount of the appropriations in this bill. I will make the statement very brief. The appropriations last year in the sundry civil bill amounted to $32,186,129.09. This year the bill as reported to the House amounted to $23,704,102.82, being less by $8,482,026.27 than the corresponding bill of last year. There have been considerable sums added in Committee of the Whole, but still larger sums have been stricken out of the bill, so that as it stands now it is nearly, perhaps quite, $9,000,000 less than the corresponding bill of last year. There is this difference, however; there are no appropriations made here for the board of public works of the District of Columbia, and such appropriations were in the corresponding bill of last year. I submit as a part of my remarks the following detailed statement of the items that make up this bill and the corresponding items in the bill of last year, that the House may see where the reductions are made. If the House sustains the action of the Committee of the Whole in regard to the Choctaw claim, this bill will be absolutely free from all claims and will be as clean a bill as ever passed the House.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. It is whether in footing up the $23,704,000 he embraces the amount on page 39 of the bill for the northern and northwestern lakes, the provision which makes available all the unexpended balances of appropriations for the survey of military defenses, and if he does, how much is embraced in that item?

Mr. GARFIELD. There was but a very small amount left over.

Mr. BECK. Whatever the amount was it has to be added to these figures?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is true. I will remark that generally where unexpended balances are made available I do not count them, because I do not know the amount and because they were counted into former appropriations.

Mr. BECK. On page 50 of the bill the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will observe that all balances remaining in the Treasury unexpended on the 1st day of July, 1874, of appropriations heretofore made for buildings and sites of buildings, &c., are made available for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. The balances of appropriations for public buildings which the gentleman refers to amount in the aggregate to less than $2,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I find by statement "D" in the last Book of Estimates that they amount to $5,600,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. That book was made up in October, 1873. The latest statement on the subject is one that the gentleman will find on the second page of the report accompanying this bill, which is a statement up to June 1, 1874, from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of unexpended balances left over for all public works, and the gentleman will find by examining that list that less than $2,000,000 are reappropriated in this bill.

Mr. BECK. I find on page 247 of the last Book of Estimates, which is appendix "D," that the amount was $5,600,000 on the 1st of July, 1873

Mr. GARFIELD. That is nearly a year ago, the gentleman will remember.

Mr. BECK. These sums have all to be added to your figures in your footing up?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; whatever they are. I shall detain the House but a few moments longer, and will then ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire an opportunity to submit some remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This debate, it must be understood, proceeds by unanimous consent.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I ask unanimous consent to print a few remarks on this subject. (See Appendix.)

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have a right to the hour, but I will not trespass upon the time of the House. I submit a statement showing the various expenditures in this bill, grouped into classes for the convenience of those who care to examine it. It embraces so many subjects that it may be of service to the country to see at a glance the classes of objects to which the money herein appropriated is applied. They are as follows:

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

1. Public printing	$1,675,507 66
2. Administration of public justice, including judicial expenses of courts, defending suits of the United States, paying judgments of the courts, detecting and punishing crimes against the revenue and currency, and including also the portion that the United States pay to support the Metropolitan police of Washington	3,522,118 34
3. Public lands—expense of surveyors' offices, cost of surveys, and expense of collecting revenues from public lands	1,580,921 00
4. Public works, including arsenals, navy-yards, the various public buildings under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the public buildings and grounds of the United States in Washington	10,023,335 81
5. Commerce and its adjuncts, including life-saving stations, the revenue marine, the marine hospitals, light-houses, coast survey, lake survey, and the weather report	$5,470,704 90

7. Educational, charitable, and reformatory institutions, including the Smithsonian Institution, Asylum for the Insane, Deaf Mute College, Lying-in Hospital, Freedman's Hospital, the several charities for the poor, and the Reform Farm	433,491 00
8. Payments growing directly out of the war—bounty and prize-money for colored soldiers, $50,000; expenses of the States for drilling and equipping volunteers, $250,000; for horses lost in the rebellion, $50,000	350,000 00
9. Miscellaneous	446,524 12
Total	23,704,102 81

From the last or ninth group we have stricken out more than a quarter of a million.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations entitled to one hour to close the debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He does not claim it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield the floor to save the time of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are separate votes called for upon any of the amendments?

Mr. STORM. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment in relation to the pay of printers at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I ask a separate vote on all amendments increasing appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be better to dispose of the amendments upon which separate votes are asked as they come up in their order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask a separate vote on one amendment.

The first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, upon which a separate vote was asked, (by Mr. STORM,) was to strike from the bill the following:

And wages paid to printers and binders in the employ of the Government shall not be above the average price paid for similar work in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Suppose the amendment of the Committee of the Whole should not prevail, does that leave the original text of the bill to stand without regard to any amendments made to it before it was struck out by the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole; and upon a division there were—ayes 46, noes 84.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. ALBRIGHT called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 15 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAWLEY of Connecticut, and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 42, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 91, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bowen, Buckner, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., John B. So the amendment was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. My colleague, Mr. HUNTER, is absent on business of the House, and will not be here to-day.

Mr. MERRIAM. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS, is absent on a committee of conference.

The next amendment, reported from the Committee of the Whole, upon which a separate vote was asked by Mr. KELLOGG, was to insert as section 2, the following:

SEC. 2. That section 9, of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1872," approved March 3, 1871, authorizing the President to employ suitable persons to conduct certain inquiries and to prescribe their duties, and in respect to appointments in the civil service, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the unexpended balance of any appropriation heretofore made for carrying the same into effect shall be covered into the Treasury.

That in the Bureaus and in all the Departments at Washington, whenever there shall be a number of applicants for employment therein, a soldier or sailor who fought in the line of duty in the war, a soldier or sailor's widow, wife, daughter, and mother respectively being such applicants, shall have preference in employment suited to each respectively, and the same rule shall be observed whenever discharges shall take place in the several Departments and Bureaus by reason of diminution of force therein respectively: Provided, That two persons of the relationship above stated, either by blood or marriage, shall not have employment in any of said Departments or Bureaus at the same time.

And it shall be the duty of the officer at the head of each of the Executive Departments at Washington to prescribe and publish rules for ascertaining the qualifications of applicants for appointments at his disposal or made under his authority, to make such appointments only from candidates who have the qualifications of honesty, efficiency, and fidelity, and not as rewards for mere party zeal, giving preference only to those who have the additional qualification of an honorable record in the military or naval service of the United States, or the wife, widow, daughter, sister or mother of such soldier, sailor, or marine. And it shall be his further duty to make such appointments as equitably as possible from qualified candidates presenting themselves from the several congressional districts and with reference to their population, and upon the removal of any appointee, the reason for such removal shall be stated on the records of the Department where the service was rendered.

Mr. KELLOGG. The last part of that section was adopted this morning by the Committee of the Whole as a separate and distinct amendment from the other part which was adopted on Saturday last. I ask a separate vote on the portion adopted to-day.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the point of order that the entire section is reported from the Committee of the Whole as one amendment, and must be voted upon as one amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken; the entire section is one amendment and cannot be divided.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "two persons of the relationship above stated" the words "unless both have been disabled in war."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLOGG. I object. If the Departments are to be filled with persons entirely disabled, how is the work of the Departments to be carried on?

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and upon a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 17, noes not counted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded (by Mr. HALE, of Maine) was to strike out $50,000 and insert $30,000 in the following paragraph:

For building a light-ship, to be stationed at Winterquarter Shoals, on the coast of Virginia, $50,000.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. This amendment was adopted on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] who upon subsequent examination finds that the appropriation in its original form should stand. I ask therefore that the amendment be not agreed to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded (by Mr. HALE, of Maine,) was to strike out the following paragraph

For light-house and day-beacon at or in the vicinity of Mathias Point, Virginia, $40,000; and the appropriation made by the act of June 10, 1872, for a light to mark the entrance of Shipping Point, Potomac River, Virginia, shall revert to the Treasury.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think that we had better not agree to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That two thousand copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer for 1873 be printed and bound for the use of the Secretary of War.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2347) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the Connecticut Historical Society certain papers on file as vouchers for the discharged claims of the heirs of Silas Deane.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 935) to provide for writs of error in certain criminal causes.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded (by Mr. PARKER, of Missouri) was to strike out section 3 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to inquire into the amounts of liability due from the Choctaw tribe of Indians to individuals, as referred to in articles 12 and 13 of the treaty of June 22, 1855, between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and to report the same to the next session of Congress with a view of ascertaining what amounts, if any, should be deducted from the sum due from the United States to said Choctaw tribe, for the purpose of enabling the said tribe to pay its liabilities, and thereby to enable Congress to provide a fund to be held for educational and other purposes for said tribe, as provided for in article 13 of the treaty aforesaid.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 96, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 70.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPEER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand this question to be upon agreeing to the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The choice of the House is now between the substitute and the original text.

Mr. SPEER. If the substitute is rejected does it revive the original section as reported by the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. SPEER. Without amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without amendment.

Mr. SHANKS. I object to putting in stump speeches under the form of "parliamentary inquiries."

The question was taken on agreeing to the substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole for the third section of the bill; and there were—yeas 118, nays 103, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Mr. BARBER stated that he was paired with Mr. MAYNARD.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Committee of the Whole was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their Clerks, notifying the House that that body had adopted the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of the commissions of certain officers of the Army, and agreed to the conference asked on the part of the House, and appointed as conferees on its part Mr. SPENCER, Mr. WEST, and Mr. RANSOM.

HON. DAVID B. MELLISH.

Mr. WOODFORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the proper officers of the House shall pay to the widow of Hon. David B. Mellish the balance of the salary and allowances due him as a member of of the House at the time of his death.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MOREY asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks he had prepared on the South and its wants. (See Appendix.)

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the standing rule of the House, this being the third Monday of the month, the Committee on the District of Columbia is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. COTTON. If the House will give that committee one hour after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning it will be all the time we ask. It is now five o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the committee will go on now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

ANACOSTIA BRIDGE.

Mr. COTTON. There is on the Speaker's table a Senate bill which we regard of great importance. It is a bill to construct a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac. I am instructed by the committee to endeavor to have that bill taken up and passed. We have a bill before the House for the construction of a bridge at this same place which requires an appropriation of $250,000. According to the plan we have here on our desks we are informed from estimates carefully made a bridge can be constructed for $146,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. COTTON. I move to take up for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of War be, and he is thereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed across the Anacostia River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, in the District of Columbia, a substantial iron and masonry bridge and causeway; and the sum of $146,000 be, and the same is thereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of said bridge; provided that the said Secretary shall construct a bridge upon such plan as shall cost no more than the amount therein appropriated; and provided also that the said bridge shall be so constructed as not to interfere with the usual navigation above said bridge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up that bill?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object.

Mr. COTTON. Then I move to suspend the rules to take it up, and I hope the House will sustain us.

The House divided; and there were ayes 92, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question then recurred on suspending the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 20.

Mr. LAWRENCE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. COTTON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 120, noes 26.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for an amendment.

Mr. COTTON. I will hear it read.

Insert after the word "appropriated" these words:
But no part of this appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until the contracts shall have been entered into with responsible parties and with sufficient sureties, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the construction and completion of said bridge, including masonry, iron-work, and causeway, at a cost not to exceed $146,000.

Mr. COTTON. I will allow that amendment to be voted on. I demand the previous question.

Mr. COBURN. I move the House take a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the recess be until eight o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done, as the recess has been provided for under a suspension of the rules until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. COBURN'S motion was rejected.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I ask that the bill be read so we may see the operation of the amendment.

The bill and amendment were again read.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] and the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the impropriety of mixing up the authority of these Departments in this way.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I am willing to change my amendment to say "the Secretary of War" instead of "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. RANDALL. This shows the great advantage of delay and consequent investigation. The original estimate for this bridge was over $300,000.

Mr. RICE. That was a different bridge.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill introduced into this House was for $275,000. An intelligent and capable engineer now says that a proper bridge can be built across this river for $145,000.

Mr. RICE. You can put a bridge there for $60,000; but do you want a $60,000 bridge?

Mr. RANDALL. I want what a civil engineer says is a sufficient and proper bridge.

Mr. COBURN. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

Mr. COBURN. Should not this bill have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made too late.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COTTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. RICE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3641) to amend an act entitled "An act incorporating the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company," approved May 17, 1862.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. STORM. Pending that motion I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion that the House adjourn, there were—ayes 60, noes 104.

So the motion was not agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw papers from the files in the House in the following cases:

By Mr. O'BRIEN: In the case of Benjamin Isaac and Thomas DeFord, of Baltimore.

By Mr. STORM: In the case of Charles Cosby, of Hardin County, Kentucky.

By Mr. BURCHARD: In the case of O. P. Burnside. No adverse report.

By Mr. MOREY: In the case of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: In the case of Mary A. Holmead.

By Mr. CRITTENDEN: In the case of S. Highleyman.

By Mr. BLOUNT: In the case of A. C. Davenport.

By Mr. McFADDEN: In the case of Calvin N. Hale, assignee of Hale, Winson & Crosby.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, that the House take a recess, there were ayes 110, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WHEELER.) By order of the House under a suspension of the rules, the special assignment of business this evening is the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the fact that there is manifestly not a quorum present, I move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. LAWRENCE. O, no; let me make some reports from the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order of the House excludes all business except reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to modify his motion so that the recess shall expire at ten minutes to eight o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. I agree to that.

The motion, as modified, was agreed to.

The House accordingly (at seven o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) took a recess until seven o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at ten minutes to eight o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2359) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to reserve from sale ten thousand suits of old disused Army uniform clothing, now in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and to transfer the same to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. PRATT, and Mr. STOCKTON to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds.

COST OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back with the recommendation that it do pass the bill (H. R. No. 3589) to extend the limits as to cost of certain public buildings, and to remove certain restrictions in regard to the construction of the same, and for other purposes. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was read. It proposes for the purpose of securing the erection of suitable public buildings already authorized by law at the following-named places to extend the amounts authorized to be expended in the construction of the same as follows, and to remove all restrictions as regards the material of which they shall be composed: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $4,000,000; Cincinnati, Ohio, $3,500,000; Nashville, Tennessee, $400,000; Raleigh, North Carolina, $350,000; Atlanta, Georgia, $350,000; Evansville, Indiana, $300,000; Covington, Kentucky, $250,000; Fall River, Massachusetts, $200,000; Trenton, New Jersey, $350,000.

The second section provides that no sums in excess of the amounts named in the act shall be expended in the construction of the buildings therein named; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of the act are thereby repealed.

The third section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to accept sites for public buildings which have been or may be tendered by the municipal authorities of the following-named cities and towns, if in his opinion the interest of the Government would be thereby promoted: Carson, Nevada; Greenville, South Carolina; Jefferson City, Missouri; Tallahassee, Florida; and he is directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session what action he has taken under the authority granted by the provisions of the act.

The fourth section directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session whether the present needs of the Government require the erection of public buildings at any, and, if so, which, of the following-named places, and the estimated cost of the same, including the site, at each place at which the erection of a public building may be recommended: Auburn, New York; Brooklyn, New York; Syracuse, New York; Rochester, New York; Danville, Virginia; Fredericksburgh, Virginia; Lynchburgh, Virginia; Winchester, Virginia; Harrisonburgh, Virginia; Erie, Pennsylvania; Salem, Massachusetts; Charleston, West Virginia; Asheville, North Carolina; Wilmington, North Carolina; Beaufort, South Carolina; Greenville, South Carolina; Jacksonville, Florida; Key West, Florida; Tallahassee, Florida; Montgomeny, Alabama; Shreveport, Louisiana; Austin, Texas; Dallas, Texas; Galveston, Texas; Houston, Texas; Jefferson, Texas; Tyler, Texas; New Albany, Indiana; Quincy, Illinois; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Oxford, Mississippi; Bowling Green, Kentucky; Jefferson City, Missouri; Kansas City Missouri; Saint Joseph, Missouri; Leavenworth, Kansas; Topeka, Kansas; Du Luth, Minnesota; Red Wing, Minnesota; Green Bay, Wisconsin; La Crosse, Wisconsin; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Oshkosh, Wisconsin; Carson, Nevada; San Francisco, California; Port Townsend, Washington Territory; Olympia, Washington Territory.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose there is no intention of insisting on the previous question on this bill without any discussion or consideration of it.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The time is so limited that I should feel compelled to insist on the previous question, and then I will allow the hour allotted to me after the previous question shall be sustained for discussion.

Mr. BURCHARD. But we may want to amend the bill.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. There must be some discussion on a bill of this character.

Mr. BURCHARD. And amendments must be offered.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. That is the very reason why I want the previous question seconded.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. You cannot have the previous question seconded without discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to inquire what are the restrictions which are removed by this bill.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. All the safeguards in regard to the cost of buildings.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I feel compelled to insist on the previous question.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 61, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, and Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, were appointed.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. In deference to the request of gentlemen who desire an opportunity to make some remarks upon this bill, I withdraw the call for the previous question, and will occupy a short time in explanation of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that we adopt the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is already adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is already adopted; that is the order for the evening.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Then I have five minutes in which to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the order of the House.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I wish to say that the bill provides first, for the extension of the limits previously fixed on the cost of buildings at the various places named, which are Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Nashville, Raleigh, North Carolina; Atlanta, Georgia; Evansville, Indiana; Covington, Kentucky; Fall River, Massachusetts; and Trenton, New Jersey. In five minutes I have not time to have read the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to these points named. I willl simply say that the committee are unanimous in the recommendations contained in the bill after a careful examination of the facts placed before them by gentlemen representing the districts in which the buildings are situated, and by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and other officers connected with the Treasury Department.

The second section of the bill provides that in some instances where sites have been tendered to the Government of the United States for the purpose of erecting at some time public buildings there, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to examine the sites and the propositions made by the places proposing to give them to the United States free of cost, and if, in his judgment, the interests of the Government will warrant the acceptance of the sites as gifts to the United States, he has authority to so accept them in behalf of the Government.

The third section provides that he shall, between now and the next session of Congress, inquire in regard to the necessity for public buildings at various points where they have been asked for by the localities named, that he shall examine and report on the cost of such buildings, including the cost of sites, and whether in his opinion the interests of the Government demand that public buildings shall be erected at the points named, and he is to make that report at the next session of Congress. Those are all the provisions in the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I would like to have the gentleman answer an inquiry or two. I desire to know how much the limit at Philadelphia is increased?

Mr. RANDALL. One million dollars.

Mr. CREAMER. One and a half million dollars.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. If the gentleman from New York is going to answer these questions I will take my seat.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The increase at Philadelphia is $1,000,000.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The cost of the building and site was fixed at $3,000,000 by the original law. The site at Philadelphia cost a great deal more than was anticipated. One of the most magnificent blocks in that city, one of the most valuable squares, has been obtained, where the present custom-house is located, and the cost of that site, I believe, I am not quite certain in my recollection on that point, but any of the gentlemen from Philadelphia can correct me if I am wrong, was $1,500,000.

Mr. RANDALL. About that.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The Government of the United States made a magnificent bargain when they purchased it at that price, and if they were to sell it to-day they would get a great deal more than they paid for it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How about Cincinnati?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. At present the limit at Cincinnati is $2,500,000. Originally the cost of the building and site was limited to that amount. It is proposed by this bill to extend the limitation, so that the cost of the building and site shall not exceed $3,500,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That is an increase of $1,000,000 What is the increase at Nashville?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. What is the increase at Raleigh, North Carolina? Or I hope the gentleman will be kind enough to tell us, without my asking him in each case, the increase contemplated by this bill in each of these cases.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I will endeavor to do so if I have time in my five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The five minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I yield the gentleman my five minutes.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. For Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the cost now authorized by law for the site and building is limited to $3,000,000; this bill extends it to $4,000,000. For Cincinnati the present limit is $2,500,000; this bill extends it to $3,500,000. For Nashville, Tennessee, the present limit is $150,000; this bill extends it to $400,000. For Raleigh, North Carolina—and gentlemen will notice that these places are all capitals of States or important points—for Raleigh, North Carolina, the present limit is $200,000, and this bill extends it to $350,000. For Covington, Kentucky, the limit is $100,000; this bill extends it to $250,000. For Fall River, Massachusetts, the site having been purchased, the amount avalable under the present law for the construction of the building is $67,000; this extends the whole amount for site and building to $200,000. For Trenton, New Jersey, the present limit is $250,000; this bill makes it $350,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How about Evansville, Indiana?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The present limit is $200,000; this bill makes it $300,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. And for Atlanta, Georgia?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The present limit is $110,000; this bill makes it $350,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is, the extension of this bill is $3,500,000 in all.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Has there been any authority yet given by law for the erection of public buildings at Carson, Nevada, Greenville, South Carolina, Jackson City, Missouri, or Tallahassee, Florida?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. We ask the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire whether there is any necessity for public buildings there.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. No; you direct him to accept sites.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon. We direct him to examine the propositions to grant sites, and if in his judgment he deems it necessary for the interest of the Government he has authority to accept them. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury "to accept sites for public buildings which have been tendered by the municipal authorities of the following-named cities and towns, if in his opinion the interest of the Government would be thereby promoted."

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Yes; to accept sites.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. These cities have tendered sites to the Government as a free gift. We say that where a town or city makes a free gift to the Government of a site, the proposition should be examined in order to ascertain if it would be for the interest of the Government to accept it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. And if the Government accepts the site, that of course commits us to put up a building on it.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Not necessarily. But I suppose that unless the Secretary deems it proper to put up a public building there he would not accept the site. I now move to recommit the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the first section of the bill by striking out the words "and all restrictions as regards the material of which they shall be composed are removed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] moves to recommit the bill, which excludes amendment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understood that the order of the House in this case was that these bills from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. Is the motion to recommit in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is; but it should be followed by a motion for the previous question. The Chair will state the position of the question. Before the gentleman from Virginia took his seat he made a motion to recommit the bill. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] rose and moved to amend. The motion to recommit takes precedence and shuts out all amendments.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I suppose that debate can go on on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RANDALL. The motion to recommit cuts off my amendment.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. My object is to permit the fullest debate upon the bill under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With the motion to recommit pending the debate can only be five minutes for and five minutes against, or ten minutes in all.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I must decline to admit any amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the House will vote down the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] or any other gentleman desire to debate for five minutes the motion to recommit?

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I do.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not think that the House understands precisely the force of the motion to recommit. Suppose that motion be voted down, then under the previous order of the House will not any amendments be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They will be in order under the five-minute rule.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. No previous question will operate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question will not operate until it is ordered by the House.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Is debate exhausted on the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Then I withdraw the motion, and demand the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed for the third reading.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. If we cannot have some discussion on this bill, I move to adjourn. I am not willing that we should appropriate $15,000,000 without some debate.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I understand that this bill is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and under the rule operating in Committee of the Whole the previous question is not in order; as long as any member chooses to offer an amendment it must be entertained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that in considering this bill all the rules of the House apply except with regard to the limitation of debate, which is subject to the five-minute rule. Pending the demand for the previous question the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. STARKWEATHER] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. If we cannot have a few minutes' discussion——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Then I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The question being put on the motion,

The SPEAKER pro tempore declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. STARKWEATHER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STARKWEATHER, and Mr. PLATT of Virginia, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 92.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being ayes 34, noes not counted.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I desire to make a proposition which I think will be satisfactory. If it will meet the wishes of gentlemen who oppose this bill——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 29, nays 151, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barrere, Burchard, Cannon, Stephen A. Cobb, Cox, Creamer, Fort, Foster, Frye, Hamilton, Magee, Merriam, Mills, Monroe, Packard, Hosea W. Parker, Phelps, Randall, James C. Robinson, A. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Averill, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Bright, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cason, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clinton L. Wilson, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—109.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call, the following announcements were made:

Mr. GIDDINGS. My colleague, Mr. WILLIE, is detained from the House by sickness in his family.

Mr. DONNAN. My colleague, Mr. MCCRARY, is absent to-night in attendance on a conference committee.

Mr. MERRIAM. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS, is absent upon a conference committee.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPEER, is unable to attend the session to-night on account of overwork to-day in fighting the Choctaw Indian claim. I believe that if present he would vote for the adjournment.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the demand of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] for the previous question.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Before that question is taken I ask unanimous consent to have the following amendment considered as pending——

Mr. FORT. No; we do not consent to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to allow some debate on this bill.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I will allow all the debate that gentlemen desire.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. We want to offer amendments.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I think I have here all the amendments that gentlemen have indicated a desire to offer.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. There are a great many amendments that have not been submitted to the gentleman.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I insist on my motion.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the motion of the gentleman from Virginia. He will state it again.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Then I withdraw the demand for the previous question and substitute a motion that the rules be suspended and the bill be passed with the following amendments:

In line 6, after the word "extended," insert "to the amounts named respectively."

Strike out in lines 6, 7, and 8 these words: "and all restrictions as regards the material of which they shall be composed are removed."

The last amendment which I include in my motion is that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] to add at the end of the third section the following:

Provided, That upon such acceptance notice shall be given to the grantors of such sites that the United States are in nowise pledged to erect such buildings unless Congress shall hereafter think fit; and acknowledgment of such notice shall be contained in the deeds thereof.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I will yield to hear the amendment read.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will yield to an amendment to insert on the third page, in line 9, provision for a building at Montpelier, Vermont.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I decline to yield to that amendment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I hope the gentleman will yield also for an amendment for a building at Port Huron.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will agree to allow the third section to be amended so as to exclude buildings for all towns where there are not held sessions of United States courts.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. There is no town there where there is not held sessions of the United States courts.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I decline to yield to any further amendment, and now call for a vote on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments I have stated.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I move the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion cannot be entertained. There is only one motion which can be entertained pending a motion to suspend the rules, and that is the House adjourn.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move the House do now adjourn, and on that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MERRIAM, and Mr. PLATT of Virginia, were appointed.

Mr. COX. At what stage will it be in order for my friend from New Hampshire to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the motion to suspend the rules is lost, then the motion to lay on the table will be in order.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 73.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 121, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barber, Barrere, Bland, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cannon, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Stephen A. Thomas, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—100.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will yield to me to have an amendment read.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I decline to yield to anybody until I make my statement. I do not wish to antagonize gentlemen who wish to be heard on this bill, and for the purpose of preventing further dilatory motions I will withdraw the motion to suspend the rules, and now ask that the bill be taken up by sections for consideration.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to lay the bill upon the table, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 103, nays 77, not voting 104; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Stephen A. So the motion to lay the bill on the table was agreed to.

During the roll-call, the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBBINS. My colleague, Mr. VANCE, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. LAWSON. My colleague Mr. TREMAIN, is detained by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BURCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRE-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SESSIONS.]

Mr. SESSIONS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3532) to aid in the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia, and that the same be passed.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 105, noes 35.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 20, not a sufficient number.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were refused, and the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

And accordingly (at nine o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 16, 1874.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

DUPLICATE AGRICULTURAL LAND SCRIP.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask that bills from the Committee on Public Lands be now considered, in accordance with the notice I gave yesterday. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3090.

Mr. SARGENT. Will that be subject to morning business?

Mr. SPRAGUE. It will not take long.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3090) to authorize the issue of duplicate agricultural land scrip where the original has been lost or destroyed was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends the provisions of the act of Congress of the 23d of June, 1860, relating to the reissue of land warrants in certain cases, so as to include the reissue of agricultural college land scrip lost, canceled, or destroyed without the fault of the owner thereof, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS RIDGWAY.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now move to take up House bill 1691.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill (H. R. No. 1691) for the relief of Thomas Ridgway was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It confirms the title of Thomas Ridgway, late of Linn County, Missouri, to the northeast quarter of section 29, in township 58, in range 19 north, in that county.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. SCHURZ. As I am ill and desire to leave the Chamber soon I wish, with the consent of the Senator from Rhode Island, to call up a bill from the Committee on Public Lands. The other day we considered House bill No. 3354, to which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] offered an amendment, and I would say that I have agreed with him upon an amendment, so that no further discussion will be necessary.

There being no objection, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3354) to legalize entries of public lands under the homestead laws in certain cases was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCHURZ. There was an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Vermont, and he and I had agreed upon a modification of it, as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall have the effect or be construed to impair the valid and paramount adverse rights of any person or corporation to any of such lands, except in so far as the right of Congress to protect the claims or rights of homestead settlers upon land within the limits of grants of lands to any railroad company may have been reserved in the acts making such grants and be now lawfully existing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHURZ. There is another amendment which was suggested by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] which I accepted also. It is to insert in line 3, after the word "lands," the word "heretofore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ISLAND IN SAGINAW RIVER.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to take up House bill No. 2539.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2539) relinquishing the rights of the United States in certain lands in the State of Michigan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

By the bill, all rights and title of the United States to the middle ground or island in the Saginaw River, lying within the prescribed limits of fractional section 5, in township 13 north, of range 5 east, and sections 29 and 32, in township 14 north, of range 5 east, in the State of Michigan, are relinquished to the riparian owners respectively of the lands on the shores of the river in front of or opposite to that island. The act is not to be construed or held to imply a claim of title on the part of the United States to the middle ground, but only as a relinquishment of any apparent right therein to the persons respectively to whom the lands on the shores were patented, their heirs and assigns.

The Committee on Public Lands proposed to amend the bill by inserting after the word "island," in line 10, the words "saving and reserving to all persons or parties other than the United States any legal rights acquired therein."

Mr. THURMAN. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. SPRAGUE. There is a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office explaining the whole subject.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to have some explanation of what this bill means.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The letter is more concise than I could explain it.

The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the papers filedby you 7th instant respecting what is known as the "middle ground" in Saginaw River, Michigan, together with a copy of a letter to this office, dated 6th ultimo, from P. C. Andre, esq., of Saginaw.

This middle ground appears to have been, at the date of the public surveys, a part of the bed of the river, covered by its waters. No public survey of it was attempted, and no island is reported in the stream at this point.

In March, 1856, a survey was made upon the ice by the county surveyor, who certifies that no survey could be accomplished in any other manner, the grounds being so constantly under water as to render it impracticable to make the attempt.

This survey was filed in this office, but was not considered as entitled to approval as a survey of public lands, and was not so approved.

Congress, however, on the 15th July, 1870, evidently without an examination of the questions involved, passed joint resolution No. 140, directing the issue of patent to Stephen Marston for a portion of said grounds, described by metes and bounds, upon payment by him of the sum of $100.

The Commissioner, my predecessor in office, for the purpose of carrying the law into effect, onthe 10th August, 1870, indorsed on the said plat of survey his qualified approval, as ex officio surveyor-general of Michigan, and subsequently issued the patent accordingly.

Understanding that you wish my opinion upon the question of the power of Congress to dispose of this ground as public land, I have examined the facts as above recited, and would state that I do not regard it as in any sense public land the property of the United States, but consider it properly within the jurisdiction of the State of Michigan, and subject to her laws

The rights of the owners of the shore having been also called to my attention, I will give you a few authorities, decisions of the Federal courts, which seem to have direct application to this case, and will indicate the United States law upon both points.

Rivers are deemed navigable waters of the United States when they are used or are suitable of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, between the States. (The Daniel Ball, 10 Wallace, 557; The Montello, 11 Wallace, 411.)

Under the acts of Congress relating to the survey and sale of public lands bordering on rivers, the right of a grantee of lands bordering on a navigable river stops at the stream, and does not extend to the medium filum. But such riparian proprietors have the same rights to construct suitable landings and wharves for the convenience of commerce and navigation as riparian owners on navigable waters affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. (Railroad Company vs. Schurmeir, 7 Wallace 272.)

The owner of land bounded by a navigable river (whether his title extend to the middle of the stream or not) has a right of free access thereto, and of erecting a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use or that of the public. These rights are to be enjoyed subject to such general rules as the Legislature may prescribe for the protection of the public rights; they cannot be taken for public use except due compensation be made. (Yates vs. Milwaukee, 10 Wallace, 497.)

At the Revolution the people of each State, in their sovereign character, acquired the absolute right to all navigable waters and the soil under them. (Martin vs. Waddell, 16 Peters, 307; Russell vs. Jersey Company, 15 Howard, 426.)

The shores of navigable rivers and the soil under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively; and new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original ones. (Pollard vs. Hagan, 3 Howard, 212; Pollard vs. Kibbe, 9 Howard, 471; Hallet vs. Beebe, 13 Howard, 25; Withers vs. Buckley, 20 Howard, 84.)

The foregoing will be sufficient to show that, if this ground was of the bed of the stream on the admission of the State, she has sovereignty over it, and the laws for the disposal of the public domain can have no application to it subsequently.

Very respectfully,

WILLIS DRUMMOND,
Commissioner.

Hon. HIESTER CLYMER,
House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect in any manner the rights of Stephen Marston, one of the proprietors and occupants of said middle ground.

Mr. THURMAN. I only ask the chairman of the committee what is the necessity for any such act as this? If the riparian proprietors have the right to that land, if it is vested in them already, if it is not public land of the United States at all, as the letter would seem to indicate, what is the necessity of passing any bill like that before us?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I would observe to the Senator that this is land that has grown up in the last eight or ten years, a deposit at the mouth of the Saginaw River. It has been occupied by the owners adjacent to the banks of the river, each party dividing the island between them, upon which they have erected saw-mills. The object of this bill is to alienate any right that the United States may have in it with a view of preventing others hereafter from finding that by some decision of the courts the title may not rest in the riparian owners. It is simply to quiet title. The land is of no value to the United States, but of very great importance to the people who are erecting buildings and doing business there.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand that this is accretion. Ever since the decision in the case from the city of Mobile, it has been held that accretions belong to the riparian proprietors.

Mr. SPRAGUE. So the cases cited in the letter say.

Mr. THURMAN. Therefore I cannot imagine that it is necessary to pass an act of Congress to reaffirm what has been held by every court that ever pronounced a decision on the question.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I do not know that it is essential to pass a bill; but it is to quiet the title. In reporting the bill the committee took care to guard all rights that may be involved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. WEST. I rise to morning business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will allow me to pass a public bill that interests a dozen different States.

Mr. WEST. I will wait a moment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up House bill No. 2653. This is a public bill and not one of a private nature.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that all prior orders be dispensed with for the purpose of considering House bill No. 1760.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana rises with morning business, which is in the nature of an objection to the bills of the Senator from Rhode Island who gave the Senator from Louisiana the floor.

Mr. WEST. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator then yielded to the Senator from Vermont, who made a motion. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This is a bill in relation to public buildings in at least a dozen or fifteen different States—Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Nebraska, New York, New Jersey, and so on. It has passed the House and it ought to pass the Senate. I am not interested in it in the least; but it is a matter of a public nature, and I hope it will be allowed to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the Senator from Vermont might be passed in three minutes, the Chair thinks, if the Senator from Rhode Island would give way.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Although the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have a half-dozen measures that they desire acted on after this, this is the only bill I desire to press now.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to read to the Senate the bill I propose to consider. It is a bill to secure homesteads——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is out of order. The Chair will hear the Senator in regard to taking up the bill offered by the Senator from Vermont; but the merits of another bill are not a subject of discussion. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2653) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to defer operations on any public buildings that are authorized by existing laws but not actually commenced, or to proceed with the same as may in his opinion be for the best interests of the public service. All moneys heretofore appropriated for the construction of public buildings and now remaining to the credit of the same on the books of the Treasury Department, or which may hereafter be appropriated for such buildings, are to remain available until the completion of the work for which they are, or may be, appropriated; and upon the final completion of each or any of the buildings, and the payment of all outstanding liabilities therefor, the balance or balances remaining are to be immediately covered into the Treasury.

Section 2 provides that in the selection of a site for any public building not yet commenced, reference shall be had to the interest and convenience of the public, as well as to the best interests of the Government; and it is to be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to set aside any selection which, in his opinion, has not been made solely with reference thereto. No expenditure is to be made upon any building, a site for which has been selected, and work upon which has not been commenced, until such of the persons who acted as commissioners in selecting the site shall make and file with the Secretary of the Treasury an oath or affirmation that he is not at the time of making the affidavit, and was not at the date of making the selection of the site, directly or indirectly interested in the property selected for the same; and a similar affidavit shall be made and filed by each and every person hereafter appointed as such commissioner before any site shall be finally adopted. In either case a failure on the part of any commissioner to make and file such an affidavit shall render the selection void.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several provisions in that bill which I should like to have considered. Does it continue in the Treasury for all time to come appropriations made but not expended for public buildings?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend such as in his judgment it is most expedient to suspend for the present year; but all appropriations for about a dozen or fifteen public buildings made last year and the year before will expire on the 30th of June, and all this ground that has been passed over for the past year or two will have to be gone over again. The bill merely continues them until the buildings for which the money has been appropriated shall be constructed. For instance, there is one at Dover, Delaware, for which an appropriation of $40,000 was made. The appropriation will lapse on the 30th of June, and the amount is absolutely limited, it cannot be exceeded. The bill proposes to continue the appropriations in existence until these buildings are completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill ought to be amended so that the appropriations may be continued for one fiscal year.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope there will be no amendment. There is an amendment that I should like to have put in myself; but at this late period of the session it is deemed impossible by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to get anything passed in the House on this subject unless this bill passes. I should be very glad to include one or two other amendments that have been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but we have thought it most expedient to withhold them from the bill and let it pass as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly cannot allow this bill to pass without a vote of the Senate on that question. We have decided by repeated votes that we will make our appropriations for specific purposes and for specific times. This bill proposes to continue indefinitely, it may be for twenty years, an appropriation now made for public buildings, and leaves it entirely discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the peculiar circumstances by which we are surrounded, as some appropriations were made for public buildings that have not been commenced this year, I could see a reason for continuing those appropriations for the next fiscal year. There is sufficient interest in this bill in the House to induce them to accept an amendment to allow the appropriation made for the last fiscal year to be continued for the next fiscal year. Beyond that I do not think we ought to go. The Senator from Vermont himself was as anxious to limit these indefinite appropriations as anybody else; and he ought not now, I think, to be willing to go back on that proposition merely because he desires to pass this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is known to all Senators that the appropriations for public buildings for the past year have been entirely suspended—not a dollar has been expended. Therefore the time has been lost; and in every one of these instances where we propose to continue the appropriations alive the amount is absolutely limited. Heretofore where a limitation has been applied to appropriations the provision has been that the balances at the end of two years shall go into the Treasury, and there has been an exception in relation to public buildings where the amount of the appropriation was limited by law. I see, therefore, no necessity for any amendment of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think this bill is obnoxious to the criticism made by the Senator from Ohio. It certainly is not in harmony with what we have been doing on this class of subjects. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that in the deficiency bill a general rule is made which will cover the Senator's object in reserving under certain limitations this class of appropriations. I would suggest that after the words "Treasury Department" in line 10, section 1, he strike out the words "or which may hereafter be appropriated for such buildings;" so that the bill will read:

That all moneys heretofore appropriated for the construction of public buildings, and now remaining to the credit of the same on the books of the Treasury Department, shall remain available, &c.

And then strike out after the word "available" the words "until the completion of the work for which they are or may be appropriated," and insert the words "for one year after the passage of this act." That will give all the amplitude that is necessary for the preservation of the appropriation, and then——

Mr. WEST. Make it read "until June 30, 1875."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; make it "for the next fiscal year." That will preserve all the rights contemplated by this bill and will bring all the appropriations before the committee at the next session. That certainly will not cripple the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I trust that there will be no amendment adopted on this bill, but that it will pass as it is. If any amendment is offered there are one or two amendments that I should like to have made to secure the sites as well as the buildings; but I do say that in my judgment there is no necessity for covering into the Treasury an appropriation made for a public building where the amount has been estimated and it is provided by law that it shall not be exceeded. I see no necessity for it there. It is merely applying a rule that has no application in economy to a subject to which it does not pertain.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to amend the bill by striking out in lines 10 and 11, of section 1, the words "or which may hereafter be appropriated for such buildings;" and also in lines 12 and 13 striking out "until the completion of the work for which they are or may be appropriated" and inserting "until the end of the ensuing fiscal year."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope that amendment will not be adopted; but if it should be, it will be seen that it confines it to one year, that is, one year from June 30, 1874, whereas all appropriations heretofore made have been allowed to run two years.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say to the Senator that the object of this amendment is this: By the rule established in 1870 all appropriations of every description were to be covered into the Treasury at the end of two years——

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But your amendment makes it one year for this class.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Taken in connection with what I said before, this saves these appropriations for the next fiscal year. Now, by a provision on the deficiency bill it is provided that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury at the commencement of each session of Congress to report to Congress specifically all balances of appropriations which are needed to be appropriated or to be provided for that they shall not lapse into the Treasury. In that way the Senator will see that the rule of 1870 may be observed, and Congress at each session have brought before it precisely the entire expenditures of the Government, none of these balances lying back, which have been a great source of trouble heretofore.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But my friend from Maine totally misapprehends the scope of this bill. These appropriations have been suspended for one year. It is proposed that the Secretary of the Treasury may suspend them for another; and now the Senator from Maine proposes that at the end of another year they shall all be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; I do not. That is not the effect of the amendment. The effect of it is that these appropriations shall last one year, until the provision of the bill to which I have referred takes effect, when it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to bring before Congress all balances which are likely to go into the Treasury without the intervention of Congress, to the end that they may be preserved. In that way we can preserve the rule adopted by Congress in 1870, which was deemed so important, that there should be no balances lying back anywhere which Congress did not understand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But the Senator from Maine will recollect that there was an exception made in favor of public buildings at that very time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We make that exception now in the bill to which I refer, but this bill is stronger than anything we have ever had. If any building has been inadvertently or injudiciously or thoughtlessly appropriated for, that sum of money would lie in the Treasury for an indefinite period of years—perpetually by this bill. That certainly is not a good thing to do. I am sure that this amendment would not embarrass the object which the Senator has in view, for I agree with him that the amounts appropriated for public buildings should be made available until the object is accomplished.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But the Senator will see at the close of the first section that after the completion of these buildings the balances are all to be immediately covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can give the Senator from Vermont an illustration of the operation of this bill. We passed for a number of years appropriations for the completion of the New Orleans custom-house. The officers did not use them. If this bill was the law in operation now, all the appropriations made twenty-five years ago for the construction of the New Orleans custom-house could now be expended at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Treasury. I doubt whether this bill ought to pass in any event; but without this modification, it certainly ought not to pass. It places in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury for years and years the whole mass of appropriations made a year ago for public buildings which by reason of our financial panic have not been expended. If this modification is adopted, those appropriations will stand precisely as if they were made now for the next fiscal year, subject to the general law and subject to the revision of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not see how there can be any objection to this amendment.

Mr. WEST. The title of this bill is "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings." Looking at the title alone, the presumption would be that the only action to be taken was to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work on these buildings; but if you follow the bill through, you find that it interminably appropriates money for these works, whether the Secretary of the Treasury shall use it or not. Under the limitation proposed by the Senator from Maine it virtually and actually reappropriates the money that has hitherto been appropriated for these public buildings for the next fiscal year. Is it not all the indulgence the Senator from Vermont can ask when we remove the restrictions from the appropriations of last year and grant him a reappropriation of this money for the succeeding fiscal year? What will be the consequence? If we find under the report that will be made, according to the provision of the law which the Senator from Maine has cited, that this money is not used, we can at the next session of this Congress reappropriate that money. Most assuredly no Senator can ask more, when an appropriation has lapsed for a year, than that we should now reappropriate it. It seems to me the limitation proposed by the Senator from Maine is exceedingly judicious.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 10, noes not counted.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1760, to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope that bill will not be attempted to be considered now. It cannot be disposed of in the morning hour.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It will take more than the morning hour.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then certainly we cannot consider that this morning.

Mr. SPRAGUE. We can continue after the morning hour.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object to its consideration this morning.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is morning business and is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not wish to interpose an objection to the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rising to make a report is an objection.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection for the purpose of proceeding with this bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This bill is the result of the experience of the Land Office and the experience of gentlemen connected with the land States and Territories.

Mr. WEST. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired the Senate resumes the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. There are a number of reports to be made. I hope reports will be allowed to be received.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the unfinished business be laid aside to continue the consideration of the bill that has just been read.

Mr. WEST. I trust the Senate will understand that if that action is taken it lays aside the post-office appropriation bill without any opportunity to get it up.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senate understand it.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 14, noes 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive strictly morning business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented the memorial of Messrs. Norton, Slaughter & Co., Woodward & Stillman, and many others, in all 130 other leading cotton merchants of the city of New York; the memorial of G. W. Baker, and several other banks and bankers of New Bedford, Massachusetts; and the memorial of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, the Equitable Life Insurance Company, the Hanover Fire Insurance Company, the Long Island Fire Insurance Company, and 25 other insurance companies of New York, protesting against a tax on sales of stocks, coin, bonds, and other securities; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also the memorial of E. S. Jaffray & Co., remonstrating against the proposed Senate bill which has been substantially agreed upon in the conference committee, amendatory of the bankrupt law. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALCORN presented the petition of William G. Ford, of Memphis, Tennessee, praying compensation for fifty-seven bales of cotton taken by the United States troops and other agents of the Government at Clifton, Alabama, in May, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia River, or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3678) for the relief of savings institutions having no capital stock and doing business solely for the benefit of depositors; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. MCCREERY, it was Ordered, That E. B. Boutwell have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers filed in support of his claim.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3604) to establish certain post-routes, have instructed me to report it back with amendments; and if there is no objection it might as well be disposed of now, as the amendments are numerous and have to be engrossed.

Mr. SPENCER. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2909) to declare the bridge across the Niagara River authorized by the act of Congress approved June 30, 1870, a post-route, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. WEST. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3414) to provide for the prepayment of postage on printed matter, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WEST. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. RAMSEY. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 858) to provide for the prepayment of postage on printed matter, and for other purposes, it being on the same subject, have instructed me to report it back, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3652) providing for publication of the revised statutes of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2771) for the relief of J. Scott Payne, second lieutenant Sixth United States Cavalry, late first lieutenant Fifth United States Cavalry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 747) to facilitate and regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report the following resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the Committee on Military Affairs, That an appropriation of $10,000 is hereby recommended for the purpose of testing Mr. Lee's breech-loading gun under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3673) authorizing the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home to sell the property belonging to the Soldiers' Home situated at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky, and known as Harrodsburgh Springs property, to report it back without amendment, to recommend its passage, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WEST. I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. The Joint Select Committee to Investigate the Affairs of the District of Columbia have instructed me to make a written report, which is unanimous, and also to present a substitute for the bill (S. No. 913) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported a few days ago. I move that the report and substitute be printed, and I give notice that I shall ask to take up the bill within a day or two.

The motion was agreed to.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 950) to pay the First National Bank of Saint Albans, Vermont, for losses sustained by the so-called Saint Albans raid; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

VIENNA EXPOSITION REPORTS.

Mr. SARGENT. On Saturday last I offered a resolution instructing the Secretary of State to furnish a certain report of a commissioner to the Vienna exposition on metallurgy, and on the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that there were other reports on other branches of art exceedingly valuable to his constituents and others, I desire to modify the resolution and present it in this form:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate all the reports of the commissioners to the Vienna exposition.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONNECTIONS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. BOGY. I move that the regular business be postponed temporarily with a view to take up a House bill of very great importance, and which will consume I think very little time and meet with very little opposition. It is House bill No. 3573.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair will submit the question to the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he proposes to amend the bill?

Mr. BOGY. No, sir; I propose to pass the bill as it came from the House without amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The bill in that shape I think will certainly lead to some discussion.

Mr. BOGY. I do not think it will occupy much time. I ask for a vote of the Senate on taking it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to postpone the pending order and proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire what the bill is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is a bill (H. R. No. 3573) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862."

Mr. CONKLING. I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Missouri, and I beg to say that that bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, I believe unanimously, unless my friend from New Jersey dissented, which I think he did.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; there were five in the committee, and three voted for it and two against it.

Mr. CONKLING. I may be wrong about it, but I understood there was no member of the committee except the Senator from New Jersey who opposed the bill, but I have no doubt my friend is right. I accept his correction, although my understanding was otherwise. I wish to say that this is a matter of grave importance and one upon which, if action is to be taken at all, no time ought to be lost. I think the case cries aloud for action of some sort. I refrain from at this moment saying what I think exactly right in regard to it; but a wrong is constantly occurring of dimensions sufficient to summon Congress to its feet, it seems to me. I cannot believe that much time will be engrossed with the bill. I rather think if it is taken up, if the Senator having in charge the appropriation bill would allow it to lie aside informally subject to his call, a very few minutes would dispose of this. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to try if he cannot get such an arrangement, leaving it always subject to the Senator from Louisiana to demand the regular order if this bill takes too much time.

Mr. BOGY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to that arrangement?

Mr. WEST. I leave that to be decided by the Senate, because it must be apparent that that request will be followed by requests from all parts of the Chamber. I do not wish to object to this bill; I leave the Senate to decide whether they will lay aside the post-office appropriation bill informally or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator from Louisiana that if the matter is submitted to the Senate the motion must be to postpone the appropriation bill, in which case, if the Senate so vote, his bill is postponed. If he consents to lay it aside informally, he can call it up at any moment.

Mr. CONKLING. In the other case, if the Senator from Louisiana were to give notice that he would not yield again but would in this case alone, that would free him from further annoyance. My impression is that a very short time will dispose of the bill; but if it does not, the Senator can demand the regular order after as many minutes as he thinks it is fair to allow.

Mr. WEST. It would be scarcely correct and fair to other Senators that I should make an exception in favor of one; but I am willing, if the Senate chooses to consider this bill, that the post-office bill shall be laid aside informally with the understanding that if this induces debate I shall call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already informed the Senator that the vote if taken must be on postponing the appropriation bill. Laying it aside informally is by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to inquire what the bill is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported again by its title.

The Chief Clerk read the title of House bill No. 3573.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the matter had better be decided by a vote. I think we had better ascertain whether the Senate is disposed to go on with the appropriation bills now waiting, which the Committee on Appropriations are anxious to put through, or whether we shall lay them aside as we have now for the last eight or ten days without attention to them. If it is the deliberate wish of the Senate to postpone them to other business and miscellaneous business, then we shall understand it and can cease this constant effort to get them before the Senate. But as there are only four legislative days of the session left, it seems to me the part of wisdom for the Senate to pass the appropriation bills, and then if there is time for miscellaneous business, to attend to it.

I do not undervalue the importance of this bill. My impression is that it ought to pass; at any rate that there ought to be legislation on the subject; but that is true of a great many other bills which are before the Senate. The one which was up at the close of the morning hour ought to pass unquestionably; at any rate it ought to be considered; but we must pass the appropriation bills in order to adjourn at the time fixed or else be called back. We have had for a day or two cool weather, but we are liable to-morrow to have another blast from hell such as we had last week, and then we shall regret it if we are compelled to sit here late at night enervated by the weather to dispose of business of importance, the appropriation bills unattended to. I trust, therefore, the Senate will either proceed at once with the post-office appropriation bill, which is certain to excite a great deal of debate on the franking privilege and the various questions that it was reserved to discuss, or by a decisive vote say that they will not do anything of the kind.

Mr. SCHURZ. It has been already stated that this is a bill of very great importance to the people of the West; and I think if the bill had been taken up, less time would have been consumed by debate on the bill than now has been consumed by debate on the order of business. I appeal once more to the Senator from Louisiana to give way informally.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think with the Senator from New York and the Senator from Missouri that there ought to be a vote taken on the bill of the Senator from Missouri. It affects a great number of people. At the same time I am embarrassed because I do not like to vote to postpone the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood the Senator from Louisiana to say that he does not object to the appropriation bill being laid aside informally so as to take a vote on this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that can be done, very well. There was a formal motion made to postpone the bill, and I was going to suggest it should be taken up after the post-office bill is disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it leads to debate, I for one do not consent that it shall be continued without a vote of the Senate. I know, if I know anything, that if we intend to adjourn on next Monday we have got to consider the appropriation bills when they are presented to you and the Committee on Appropriations are ready to go on with them. That is just as certain as anything in the future, and you cannot afford to delay us a day or an hour. Still if here is a bill ready to be voted upon, of course it is a proper thing for us to yield to that vote; but otherwise not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to postponing the regular order informally and taking up this bill subject to a call for the regular order?

Mr. TIPTON. In reply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have to say that an amendment was moved to this bill yesterday, or the day before yesterday, and if that amendment is to be discussed, it will be discussed elaborately; it will be discussed by the hour, for it will involve all the past legislation in this country in regard to the Union Pacific Railroad as to what is its terminus, all the legislation of the State of Iowa in regard to her railroads terminating at the western boundary of the State, all the legislation of Congress recently in regard to bridges over the Missouri River. All those questions are connected with and combined in that amendment.

Mr. SCHURZ. I think it will not be improper for me to state that I have been privately informed that that amendment will not be pressed, but will be withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not expect to press that amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to laying aside the pending order informally?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not understand the remark of the Senator from Iowa in regard to his amendment pending on this bill. Does he propose to press his amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I stated a moment ago that I did not expect to press the amendment which I proposed a day or two ago, because, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, it is likely to lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to laying aside the pending order informally? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there are——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to make a statement. I suppose I have that privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the question is debatable. If there is no objection, then it can be done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I object until I have the privilege of making a statement.

Mr. President, there are two bills pending before the Senate at the present time affecting this question. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator who reported this bill what is his purpose, provided this bill is taken up, in regard to the Senate bill also reported by him?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me to answer him at this moment, I will state to him the posture of the case. A bill was introduced, a Senate bill, a long time ago, as sundry petitions were, calling attention to this matter. For reasons which I need not state, the absence of members of the committee and other things, weeks of delay, indeed months of delay, intervened in the committee. At length the committee reported the Senate bill with one or two slight amendments, which bill is a much more searching one than the House bill now before us. That report having been made, the House acted upon the subject. The House bill coming to the committee, although those interested in this legislation greatly preferred, as they said, the Senate bill and thought they were entitled to it, yet owing to the lateness of the session, preferred to take the House bill only, and thereupon that bill was reported back by the Committee on the Judiciary. My understanding is that should that bill pass, the other bill will not be moved or heard from at all, the parties in interest, as I am informed by others, feeling that under the circumstances it will be idle for them to seek more ample legislation than is found in the provisions of the House bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume that it will be proper, after the passage of this bill, should it pass without opposition, that the other should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CONKLING. It will not need to be indefinitely postponed, my friend will allow me to suggest. If he chooses to make that motion, I presume nobody will object to it; but inevitably it will fall with the session. If either of the Senators from Missouri has any purpose to take it up, he will avow it. I know of no such purpose, and I presume there is none.

Mr. SCHURZ. There is none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I withdraw my objection with the understanding that no such amendments are to be offered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3573) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,'" approved July 1, 1862.

The bill proposes to add to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Mission River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," the following words:

And any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads, or of any company engaged in operating either of said roads, who shall refuse to operate and use the road or telegraph under his control, or which he is engaged in operating for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, or shall refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of, or adverse to, the road or business of any or either of said companies, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, and may be imprisoned not less than six months. In case of failure or refusal of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or either of said branches, to comply with the requirements of this act and the acts to which this act is amendatory, the party injured or the company aggrieved may bring an action in the district or circuit court of the United States in the Territory, district, or circuit in which any portion of the road of the defendant may be situated, for damages on account of such failure or refusal; and, upon recovery, the plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment for treble the amount of all excess of freight and fares collected by the defendant, and for treble the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff by such failure or refusal; and for each and every violation of or failure to comply with the requirements of this act, a new cause of action shall arise; and in case of suit in any such Territory, district, or circuit, process may be served upon any agent of the defendant found in the Territory, district, or circuit in which such suit may be brought, and such service shall be by the court held to be good and sufficient; and it is hereby provided that, for all the purposes of said act, and of the acts amendatory thereof, the railway of the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company shall be deemed and taken to be a part and extension of the road of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, to the point of junction thereof with the road of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Cheyenne, as provided in the act of March 3, 1869.

Mr. STEWART. I think this bill may be subject to misconstruction, and to guard against it I suggest an amendment, to insert after the word "months," in the twenty-fifth line, the following proviso:

Provided, That due regard shall be had to grades and curves in fixing rates between given points.

Mr. BOGY. When does the Senator propose to insert his amendment? What line and what page?

Mr. STEWART. I am not particular where it comes in; but I propose to insert it after the twenty-fifth line on page 2.

Mr. BOGY. I object to the amendment for the reason that if there be any remedy at all, the remedy is based on the law which gives existence to the Pacific Railroads, and they were to be run as a continuous road. Three branches are provided for, to come together at the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, and they were to be run as a continuous road without regard to grades or the expense of construction, because the subsidy both in bonds and in land was predicated upon the very difficulty of construction. That was taken into account.

This is not a contest between two railroad companies, as the impression appears to be, but it is a contest between the people of the Western States and these roads. The impression seems to prevail here among members of the body that this is a contest between the Union Pacific branch and the Kansas Pacific branch. In point of fact it is a contest between the people of the West and all these different branches that constitute the great road called the Pacific Railroad, both from Omaha via Ogden to San Francisco, as well as the Kansas City via Denver and Cheyenne to San Francisco.

For example, we in Missouri have built a railroad from the city of Saint Louis to connect with this road at Kansas City, at an expense of twenty-odd million dollars. We call it the Missouri Pacific Railroad, because it was intended to go by that route to the Pacific Ocean forming a connection with the roads created under the law of Congress. By a system of discrimination which has been established on the main line called the Union Pacific, which is the line starting from Omaha on the way to San Francisco via Ogden, the Missouri Pacific Railroad has been rendered useless. A person in Saint Louis desiring to go to San Francisco is compelled to go by the way of Omaha. If he has any freight to send he is compelled to send it by the way of Omaha, although we have built the railroad from Saint Louis to Kansas City at an expense of twenty-odd million dollars.

The object of this bill is simply to compel these roads to observe the law of 1862, the law of 1864, and the law of 1866, by which they were to be operated as one continuous road; and as to the expense of operating a railroad on a higher grade, the question cannot arise because they received subsidies in proportion to the expense of constructing the roads. I state as a fact that cannot be denied that the grades upon the one road are as high as they are upon the other. In other words, the grades upon the Kansas Pacific Railroad are as high as they are upon the main branch called the Union Pacific Railroad. The difference would be very little; but upon those high grades of the Union Pacific Railroad $48,000 in bonds per mile were paid by the Government of the United States and lands were granted in proportion. An amount of bonds was voted far exceeding the amount necessary for the construction of the road. It was specified in the law that the road should be run without reference to grade and without reference to expense, because that was obviated by the appropriation for building the road as one continuous line. Under that belief we in Missouri built what we called the Missouri Pacific Railroad at an enormous expense. The fifteenth section of the act creating the Pacific Railroad reads thus:

Mr. CONKLING. In the hope that my friend from Missouri will not misunderstand my motive, I venture to give him a caution about proceeding to discuss the merits of this matter, clearly as he is stating them, and for two reasons: In the first place here sits the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST,] likely at any moment to demand the regular order. In the next place there is one simple answer I conceive to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, and if my friend will allow me, it is this: The bill repeats in terms the section of the statute which it is insisted has been violated and gives in court a legal remedy to test the construction of that statute and ascertain whether it has been violated or not. Therefore it is not meet, it seems to me, that we should attempt to construe the section one way or the other. We take these parties over to court. That I think the Senator from Missouri will find an adequate answer to the Senator from Nevada; and although I listen to him with great pleasure in the interest of the bill in which he feels so much interest, I caution him that he may bring on a debate in the midst of which he will be caught.

Mr. BOGY. I will then say nothing further, but hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Perhaps I can shorten this debate if the Senator will allow me a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will yield.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from New York suggests that the identical language is used in this bill that was used in the old act. If it should be the construction of that language, which I doubt, that there should be no allowance made in estimating distances and estimating rates on account of grades and curves——

Mr. CONKLING. Let the court decide that.

Mr. STEWART. I say if that was the original construction of it I do not wish to change it. But as members of the committee assure me that they have used the exact language of the other act, I will withdraw my amendment. I think in coming to an equitable pro rata they should take into account the grades; but inasmuch as I am assured, and I believe that to be the fact, that the language of the original act is pursued in this bill and that the question is to be left to the courts, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada withdraws his amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not wish to say one word to delay the passage of this bill or to make any factious opposition to it. I am perfectly willing that this question should go to the courts. There is where it ought to go. The construction of the law regulating these different roads in the Judiciary Committee found various interpretations. We did not agree as to what that law meant. My objection to the bill now pending is that it does not refer it to the courts to determine, but it provides that any agent or officer who does not fulfill this statute shall be treated as a criminal; that it shall be a misdemeanor and that he shall be imprisoned, and that the company shall be liable to triple damages, and that bringing one suit shall be no objection to bringing further suits.

I do not see how any legislative body in the world can pass a law, referring a subject to a court upon which they cannot agree as to the meaning, and say that every officer shall be treated as a criminal and imprisoned if he does not obey the law, when we do not know what it means ourselves, and that he shall be subject to triple damages, and that suits may be multiplied ad infinitum. I propose to strike out those provisions of the bill which make it a criminal offense for any officer not to obey the law, the meaning of which we do not know ourselves, and leave it to the courts to adjudicate this question. I consequently move to strike out from the word "shall," in the twenty-first line, to the word "months" in the twenty-fifth line, inclusive, the words to be stricken out being:

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, and may be imprisoned not less than six months.

It does not even leave it discretionary to the court. It requires every officer and every agent connected under it to be imprisoned, and they must be imprisoned for not less than six months.

Then in the thirty-fifth line I shall move to strike out the word "treble;" and I shall also move, beginning in the thirty-sixth line, to strike out:

And for each and every violation of or failure to comply with the requirements of this act a new cause of action shall arise.

The bill thus amended will leave the subject to the courts. It will enable the proper court in a civil suit to give damages; but the amendments take away from the bill this odious criminal feature, making every agent and officer of the company liable to indictment, on which the punishment shall not be less than six months' imprisonment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is to strike out the words—

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, and may be imprisoned not less than six months.

Mr. SCHURZ. I wish the Clerk would read how the whole sentence will stand without those words:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads, or of any company engaged in operating either of said roads, who shall refuse to operate and use the road or telegraph under his control or which he is engaged in operating for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, or shall refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of, or adverse to, the road or business of any or either of said companies.

Mr. SCHURZ. The sentence is incomplete.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. "Shall be subject to a civil action" is the amendment which I shall offer afterward.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to say a single word. First, any amendment to this bill is probably fatal to it; it will be too late to carry it through the other House and command assent to it. In the second place, there is, I conceive, no hardship in the language the Senator proposes to strike out: "He shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 and may be imprisoned not less than six months." Of course in case of great aggravation and willfullness a court might be provoked or summoned to impose imprisonment; but everybody will see that this provides fairly for the imposition of a fine. What is the effect? Some officer is proceeded against; the road defends him, which is stereotyped. A conductor expels a passenger from a train; the passenger sues the conductor; the road defends him and goes to the end of the law to settle the law on that subject. That is what will occur here; and the practice is one so familiar in my own State, occurring so continually in order to settle the construction of railroad laws and railroad powers, that I cannot conceive there is any hardship in regard to it, whereas if it is stricken out the bill must be remodeled, and I think there can be little doubt that it will fail for lack of time between the two Houses.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think that any one ever saw a law drawn as this is, for the purpose of submitting a legal question to a court, making every officer and agent subject to a criminal proceeding, making the company liable to triple damages, and expressly providing that for each and every violation or failure to comply with the requirements of this act a new cause of action shall arise. In other words, while this question is pending, being an important suit giving construction to a statute involving $100,000,000, and it will take probably eighteen months before that question can be fairly determined, going through the courts, through all that period every day and day after day, the company that does not give construction, which we cannot give, to a statute is making itself liable to triple damage s,as provided by this act.

As to the bill getting through, I say this bill ought not to be able to get through the Senate with that provision in; and if that provision is stricken out, nobody will oppose concurrence in the other House. It is a proper subject for judicial determination.

Mr. BOGY. One word. Unless there be something of this kind, the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific Railroads will not respect each other's rights. It is with a view of compelling them. If the law is not in favor of the bill, there can be no danger; but if they have violated the law and thereby made enormous sums of money, there is no reason why they should not be compelled to pay heavy damages. The object of it is to compel them to obey the law which they will not do otherwise. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the next amendment of the Senator from New Jersey if the Senator from New Jersey insists on the other amendments.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No, sir; the other amendments were dependent on this.

Mr. TIPTON. I ask the attention of members of the Committee on Railroads to an amendment to come in at the end of the bill which I offer:

And the said Denver Pacific Railroad shall extend to the Union Pacific Railroad such equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation as are established by this act between the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific Railroads.

Mr. BOGY. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that that is the law now beyond any doubt. The road from Denver to Cheyenne was built under a law which puts it exactly under the provision of the law for building the Pacific Railroad, and the passage of this bill would include in substance the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. There can be no doubt about it.

Mr. TIPTON. When the Denver Pacific was made a part of the Kansas Pacific it was specifically provided by the act:

And nothing shall authorize the said Eastern Division Company to operate the road or fix the rate of tariff.

And since these roads have been running in conjunction the rates have been so grievous upon the Denver Pacific as to cut off Omaha and the shipping towns on the Union Pacific from access to the city of Denver. But if this bill, as now drawn, will give the Union Pacific the same advantages in running over the Denver Pacific that are extended to the Union Pacific and reciprocated by the Kansas Pacific, then I have no objection; but I have objections until that is understood.

Mr. BOGY. I will read to the Senator the law authorizing the building of the railroad from Denver to Cheyenne. It says in section 2:

All the provisions of laws for the operation of the Union Pacific Railroad, its branches and connections, as a continuous line, without discrimination, shall apply the same as if the road from Denver to Cheyenne had been constructed by the said Union Pacific Railway Company, Eastern Division.

It is the same law, and the bill would have the same effect upon the link from Cheyenne to Denver that it has upon the rest of the railroad. The act of 1869 provides for that.

Mr. TIPTON. Then I ask the Senator from Missouri, will this act have a tendency to repeal the last clause in the second section of the act, on page 324 of volume 15 of the Statutes at Large, which authorizes the purchase and control of that road by the Kansas Pacific, but which provided that the Kansas Pacific should have no power over its rates.

Mr. BOGY. No power over the freights of the Denver Railroad except between Cheyenne and Denver.

Mr. TIPTON. It reads:

But nothing herein shall authorize the said Eastern Division Company to operate the road and fix the rates of tariff for the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company.

If that is to be repealed by the act about to be passed this morning, I have no objection; but if that stands in force, we have no more access to the city of Denver with our commerce under this than we have previously had.

Mr. SCHURZ. I desire to address one remark to the Senator from Nebraska. It is the object of this act to enforce the act of Congress which makes all the Pacific Railroad branches one connected and continuous line; and of course this act will have the effect on the Denver road which it will have on the Union Pacific road; that is to say, to prorate rates of freight all over these roads. Of course the Denver road cannot be excluded. Under the very act which is here appealed to, the Senator will find his remedy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I was under the impression that the amendment in the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth lines was dependent upon the other amendment which, perhaps intentionally or perhaps not, was voted down by the Senate. I will renew the amendment to strike out the word "treble" in the thirty-fourth line and "treble" in the thirty-fifth line. The idea when we are passing a law in order to get an adjudication of a difficult question of making parties liable to treble damages for not obeying a law the meaning of which we do not know ourselves, seems to me the height of injustice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CONKLING. What the Senator proposes to strike out now is very mild, I submit. The bill provides that upon recovery the plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment for treble what? Treble the amount of excess of freight and fares collected by the defendant, and for treble the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff by such failure or refusal. The Senator must see that in any event the damages are very minute, excess of freights and fares, and such damages might be from not having their officers there prepared to take the freight and it not being delivered to them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is most astonishing. We are told that such an outrage is being effected by reason of the Union Pacific not affording the facilities it ought to other roads that are being ruined and that that is the damage that is done; and now this act which proposes to treble that is a minute, insignificant affair.

Mr. CONKLING. This act which proposes as to a single transaction to treble it, as my friend from California [Mr. HAGER] remarks to me, involves an amount in each case which probably would not be equal to the costs of the action.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The bill covers the whole amount of damages.

Mr. CONKLING. All the actions may amount to a large amount if people sue every day in the year.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well; provision is made expressly in this bill for suing every day in the year.

Mr. CONKLING. If they are wrong in the law, they will fail in the end.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Provision is made in this act for suing every day in the year for each and every failure to comply with the provisions of this act, when a new cause of action shall arise. So it makes it a criminal offense with treble damages, with repeated suits if they do not obey a law which the Congress of the United States cannot tell them to-day what it means, and hence the necessity of going to the courts.

Mr. CONKLING. A very mild way of testing the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will allow me to move for the indefinite postponement of another bill in regard to this same matter.

Mr. WEST. Any bill is sufficiently indefinitely postponed now by the disability of a Senator to get the floor to move to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. WEST. I decline to yield.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3679) defining the qualifications of territorial Delegates in the House of Representatives.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved the act (S. No. 419) for the relief of Sebastian Reichert.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 529) to authorize an appointment in the Inspector-General's Department;

An act (S. No. 693) to change the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin at Oshkosh;

An act (S. No. 881) fixing the times of holding the circuit court of the United States in the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada.

HARRODSBURGH SPRINGS PROPERTY.

Mr. MCCREERY. May I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Louisiana, and of the Senate also, for the consideration of a bill that I promise shall not occupy five minutes, and which the Secretary of War recommends? It is for the sale of the Harrodsburgh Springs property, belonging to the Government, in Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. WEST. I am somewhat compromised in my position on this subject by having stated to the Senator from Kentucky that inasmuch as the governor of the State was here and had come here for the purpose of securing the passage of this bill I would yield to him; but that opportunity of yielding to him was taken away by the superior vigilance of the Senator from Missouri. With that explanation, if the vote can be immediately had on the bill, I shall yield.

Mr. MCCREERY. The vote will be taken at once.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3672) authorizing the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home to sell the property belonging to the Soldiers' Home, situated at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky, and known as Harrodsburgh Springs property, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill authorizes the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home to sell to the board of trustees of the Widows' Home and Orphans' University of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows the property belonging to the Soldiers' Home, situated at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky, and known as the Harrodsburgh Springs property, upon such terms and such valuation as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DENNIS, Mr. HAMILTON of Maryland, Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. WINDOM submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. PATTERSON, and Mr. BOUTWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKTON and Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3535) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1565) relating to the commissioners of claims, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. WEST. In presenting the customary bill for an annual appropriation for the continuance of the post-office machinery for the ensuing year, I shall only detain the Senate at the outset with a brief statement, and that statement will have more reference to the financial management of the Post-Office Department than to any other matter.

I will state in general terms that the amount appropriated last year for the maintenance of the postal service throughout the country was $34,419,067. That amount comprised as well the total sum appropriated by the postal service bill itself as the amount of $1,865,900 appropriated for the postal service of the different Departments of the Government. This year the total appropriation by this bill and by other bills providing for the furnishing of stamps to the different Departments amounts to $36,341,091; an excess over last year of $1,922,024.

In explaining this increased appropriation, I must refer to the customary and usual increase of the service of the Department throughout the country annually. But in noticing that particular increase it is gratifying to be able to state that although the increase of the service is of a certain proportion, the proportion of expense results favorably toward the economy of the Government. That is to say, although the general service is increased throughout the country from 7 to 8 per cent., the increased expenditure is only 5½ per cent. and the increased percentage of deficiency, which is the measure of the economy of the Department, is 1⅞ per cent. The percentage of deficiency to the total amount appropriated for the fiscal year now about terminating was 15.68 per cent. This year there has been a very small reduction in that respect, and the percentage is 15.13 per cent., or a little more than a half per cent. less than it was last year.

As we shall proceed in the consideration of this bill matters will be developed with reference to legislation that is required, and also there will probably be some discussion and inquiry in reference to such advantages as are alleged to have arisen from the repeal of the franking privilege. The order of business that now controls the Senate excludes the post-office appropriation bill and does not make it amenable to the general rule applied to appropriation bills; but I offer the following resolution for the conduct of this bill during its consideration by the Senate:

Resolved, That pending the post-office appropriation bill, it shall be in order at any time to move a recess, and to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to ten minutes by any Senator on the pending motion; and such motion shall be decided without debate.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not desire to oppose a measure intended to facilitate business at this stage of the session; but it was quite impossible, at least for me, to understand the full scope of the resolution by merely hearing it read, and I would like an opportunity to scrutinize the proposition, and so I ask that it be called up again in the course of the day. I ask the mover of the resolution to let it lie on the table for the present, and he can call it up when he desires.

Mr. WEST. I am quite willing to accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over for the present.

Mr. WEST. Now let the Clerk commence the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Before the reading of the bill is commenced I should like, with the assent of the Senator who has charge of the bill, to offer a resolution in which I think he has as much interest as I have, and which I have delayed for a long time hoping that some disposition might be made of the general subject to which this resolution belongs. It is a resolution reported from the Committee on Printing to print five thousand extra copies of the report and appendix thereto of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. WEST. I will yield for a vote on the resolution, and that is all.

Mr. SHERMAN. Cannot that be provided for in an amendment to be offered to this bill? Had not the Senator better withdraw it now?

Mr. ANTHONY. That will not cover this case.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are amendments to be proposed which will cover all documents.

Mr. WEST. I ask the Clerk to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator having the bill in charge indicate the course he desires pursued in regard to any of the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the first amendment passed over until the end, because it raises a question that more properly belongs at the end.

Mr. WEST. In this instance I of course will pass over that amendment at the request of the Senator, but I ask the Chair to direct that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations shall be considered as the bill is read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section 1, line 10, to add the following proviso to the clause appropriating $16,400,000 for inland-mail transportation:

Provided, That postages shall hereafter be prepaid on all mailable matter at the time of mailing; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. WEST. Let the first amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Delaware, as I am apprised, having withdrawn his objection to the adoption of the resolution offered by me, I ask that it be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 39 of section 1, in the proviso to the clause for pay of letter-carriers, to strike out the word "twenty" and to insert "thirty;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That hereafter letter-carriers shall not be employed for the free delivery of mail matter in towns and cities whose population within their corporate limits, as shown by the last report of the national census or by any subsequent census taken in pursuance of State statute or by order of the mayor and common council of such town or city, shall be less than thirty thousand; but this proviso shall not affect the free delivery in towns and cities where it is now established.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add after line 41—

And for the more efficient management of the free-delivery system the Postmaster-General may designate one of the present fourth-class clerks to act as superintendent of free delivery in the Post-Office Department at an annual salary of $2,500; which amount of salary is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WEST. I desire to perfect that amendment. The committee discovering that $1,800 is already provided for this party, the necessary sum to appropriate here is only $700. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, on line 46, "which amount of salary" and inserting the words "and for this purpose the sum of $700."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to my friend whether instead of saying "one of the present fourth-class clerks" it would not be better to say "a fourth-class clerk," because otherwise the law would exhaust itself by the retiring of all the present fourth-class clerks in the Post-Office Department. The meaning of the committee would be exactly carried out by the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. WEST. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. WEST. Striking out "one of the present" and putting in the article "a," and changing "clerks" to "clerk."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 55, after the word "those," to insert the words "running out of the District of Columbia," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in Virginia and Maryland;" so as to read:

For advertising, $80,000: Provided, That hereafter no payment shall be made to any newspaper published in the District of Columbia for advertising any other routes than those in Virginia and Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. There is a verbal correction I wish to make on line 64, striking out the first two words "and no" and substituting therefore "nor any," in order to make it grammatical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was in lines 102, 103, and 104, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the monthly and annual reports of the Department of Agriculture shall pass free through the mails.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the first and second sections of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 13 of section 2:

For the purchase of law-books for the library of the office of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yesterday gave notice of an amendment to this bill which I now offer. I send it to the desk to be read. I will state that the proposition is intended also to supersede the amendment of the committee which has been passed over, and the Senator in charge of the bill kindly postponed a vote on it until this amendment shall be acted upon. After it is read I will explain very briefly its effect.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, to insert the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That on all newspapers and periodical publications mailed from a known office of publication or news agency, and addressed to regular subscribers or news agents, postage shall be charged at the following rates: On newspapers and periodical publications, four cents for each pound or fraction thereof: Provided, That the rate of postage on newspapers or periodicals, not exceeding two ounces in weight, and circulars, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by the office or its carriers, shall be uniform at one cent each, but periodicals weighing more than two ounces shall be subject to a postage of two cents each, and these rates shall be prepaid by stamp.

SEC. —. That upon the receipt of such newspapers and periodical publications at the office of mailing, they shall be weighed in bulk, and postage paid thereon by a special adhesive stamp, to be devised and furnished by the Postmaster-General, which shall be affixed to such matter, or to the sack containing the same, or upon a memorandum of such mailing, or otherwise, as the Postmaster-General may, from time to time, provide by regulation.

SEC. —. That newspapers, one copy to each actual subscriber residing within the county where the same are printed, in whole or in part, and published, shall go free through the mails; but the same shall not be delivered at letter-carrier offices or distributed by carriers unless postage is paid thereon as now by law provided.

SEC. —. That all mailable matter of the third class, referred to in section 133 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof, and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof; but nothing herein contained shall be held to change or amend section 134 of said act.

SEC. —. That the Postmaster-General may prescribe, by regulation, an affidavit in form, to be taken by each publisher of any newspaper or periodical publication sent through the mails under the provisions of this act, or news agent who distributes any of such newspapers or periodical publications under the provisions of this act, or employé of such publisher or news agent, stating that he will not send, or knowingly permit to be sent, through the mails any copy or copies of such newspaper or periodical publications except to regular subscribers thereto, or news agents, or as an exchange, without prepayment of the postage thereon at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fractional part thereof; and if such publisher or news agent, or employé of such publisher or news agent, when required by the Postmaster-General or any special agent of the Post-Office Department to make such affidavit, shall refuse so to do, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 for each refusal; and if any person shall knowingly and willfully mail any matter without the payment of postage as provided by this act, or procure the same to be done, or if any postmaster or post-office official shall knowingly permit any matter to be mailed without the prepayment of postage as provided in this act, and in violation of the provisions of the same, he or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned not exceeding three years, one or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. —. That the sixty-third, eightieth, eighty-first, eighty-second, eighty-third, eighty-fourth, and eighty-sixth sections of the said "act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 63. That the postmasters, except the postmaster at New York City, whose annual salary is hereby fixed at $6,000, shall be divided into four classes, as follows: The first class shall embrace all those whose annual salaries are not more than $4,000 nor less than $3,000; the second class shall embrace all those whose annual salaries are less than $3,000 but not less than $2,000; the third class shall embrace all those whose annual salaries are less than $2,000 but not less than $1,000; the fourth class shall embrace all postmasters whose annual compensation, exclusive of their commissions on the money-order business of their offices, amounts to less than $1,000."

"SEC. 80. That the postmaster at New York City and postmasters of the first, second, and third classes shall be appointed and may be removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their offices for four years, unless sooner removed or suspended according to law; and postmasters of the fourth class shall be appointed and removed by the Postmaster-General, by whom all appointments and removals shall be notified to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

SEC. 81. That the compensation of the postmaster at New York City shall be $6,000 per annum, and the respective compensations of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes shall be annual salaries, assigned in even hundreds of dollars, and payable in quarterly payments, to be ascertained and fixed, by the Post-master-General, from their respective quarterly returns to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, or copies or duplicates thereof, for four quarters immediately preceding the adjustment or readjustment, by adding to the whole amount of box-rents, not exceeding $2,000 per annum, commissions also not to exceed $2,000 per annum on the other postal revenues of the office, at the following rates, namely: On the first $100 per quarter 50 per cent. on all over $100 and not over $400 per quarter, 40 per cent. on all over $400 and not over $2,400 per quarter, 30 per cent. and on all over $2,400 per quarter, 10 per cent. And in order to ascertain the amount of the postal receipts of each office, the Postmaster-General may require postmasters to furnish duplicates of their quarterly returns to the Auditor at such times and for such periods as he may deem necessary in each case: Provided, That whenever, by reason of the extension of free delivery of letters, the box-rents of any post-office are decreased, the Postmaster-General may allow, out of the receipts of such office, a sum sufficient to maintain the salary thereof at the amount at which it had been fixed before the decrease in box rents.

SEC. 82. That the compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be the box rents collected at their offices and commissions on other postal revenues of their offices at the rate of 50 per cent. on the first $100 or less per quarter; 40 per cent. on the next $300 or less per quarter; 30 per cent. on the excess above $400 per quarter; the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor in the settlement of the quarterly accounts of such postmasters: Provided, That when the aggregate annual compensation, exclusive of commissions on money-order business, of any postmaster of this class shall amount to $1,000, the Auditor shall report such fact to the Postmaster-General, in order that such postmaster may be assigned to his proper class, and his salary fixed as heretofore provided.

SEC. 83 That the salaries of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, except that of the postmaster at New York City, shall be readjusted by the Post-master-General once in two years, and in special cases as much oftener as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 84. That the Postmaster-General shall make all orders assigning or changing the salaries of postmasters in writing, and record them in his journal, and notify the change to the Auditor; and any change made in such salaries shall not take effect until the first day of the quarter next following such order: Provided, That in cases of not less than 50 per cent. increase or decrease in the business of any post-office, the Postmaster-General may adjust the salary of the postmaster at such office, to take effect from the first day of the quarter or period the returns for which form the basis of readjustment.

SEC. 86. That the Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail-routes as distributing or separating offices; and where any such office is of the third or fourth class, he may make a reasonable allowance to the postmaster for the necessary cost of clerical services arising from such duties.

SEC. —. That section 240 of said act shall read as follows:

SEC. 240. That when the amount of mail matter to be carried on any mail-route is so great as to seriously retard the progress or endanger the security of the letter mail, or to increase the cost of carriage of the mail, the Postmaster-General shall provide for the separate carriage of the letter mail at the usual rate of speed; and when the cost of transmitting other mail matter than the letter mail is increased by being carried in postal cars, it shall be carried in other cars, but with due regard to expedition. And postal cars shall not be put on any routes, or the number be increased, except when the service of carrying the letter mail requires it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the conclusion of the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit to the Senator, while his amendment meets my approval, whether he had not better offer his as an additional proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. That section 245, section 246, section 247, section 251, and section 253 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, be amended to read as follows:

SEC. 245. That every proposal for carrying the mail shall be accompanied by the bond of the bidder, with sureties approved by a postmaster, and in cases where the amount of the bond exceeds $5,000, by a postmaster of the first, second, or third class, in a sum to be designated by the Postmaster-General in the advertisement of each route, to which bond a condition shall be annexed, that if the said bidder shall, within such time after his bid is accepted as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, enter into a contract with the United States of America, with good and sufficient sureties to be approved by the Postmaster-General, to perform the service proposed in his said bid, and, further, that he shall perform the said service according to his contract, then the said obligation to be void, otherwise to be in full force and obligation in law; and in case of failure of any bidder to enter into such contract to perform the service, or, having executed a contract, in case of failure to perform the service, according to his contract, he and his sureties shall be liable for the amount of said bond as liquidated damages to be recovered in an action of debt on the said bond. No proposal shall be considered unless it shall be accompanied by such bond, and there shall have been affixed to said proposal the oath of the bidder, taken before an officer qualified to administer oaths, that he has the ability, pecuniarily, to fulfill his obligations, and that the bid is made in good faith, and with the intention to enter into contract and perform the service in case his bid is accepted.

SEC. 246. That before the bond of a bidder provided for in the aforesaid section is approved, there shall be indorsed thereon the oaths of the sureties therein, taken before an officer qualified to administer oaths, that they are owners of real estate, worth, in the aggregate, a sum double the amount of the said bond, over and above all debts due and owing by them, and all judgments, mortgages, and executions against them, after allowing all exemptions of every character whatever.

SEC. 247. That any postmaster who shall affix his signature to the approval of any bond of a bidder, or to the certificate of sufficiency of sureties in any contract before the said bond or contract is signed by the bidder or contractor and his sureties, or shall knowingly, or without the exercise of due diligence, approve any bond of a bidder with insufficient sureties, or shall knowingly make any false or fraudulent certificate, shall be forthwith dismissed from office, and be thereafter disqualified from holding the office of postmaster, and shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

SEC. 251. That after any regular bidder, whose bid has been accepted, shall fail to enter into contract for the transportation of the mails according to his proposal, or, having entered into contract, shall fail to commence the performance of the service stipulated in his or their contract as therein provided, the Postmaster-General shall proceed to contract with the next lowest bidder for the same service, who will enter into a contract for the performance thereof, unless the Postmaster-General shall consider such bid too high, in which case he shall readvertise such service. And if any bidder, whose bid has been accepted, and who has entered into a contract to perform the service according to his proposal, and in pursuance of his contract has entered upon the performance of the service, to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General, shall subsequently fail or refuse to perform the service according to his contract, the Postmaster-General shall proceed to contract with the next lowest bidder for such service, under the advertisement thereof, (unless the Postmaster-General shall consider such bid too high,) who will enter into contract and give bond, with sureties, to be approved by the Postmaster-General, for the faithful performance thereof, in the same penalty and with the same terms and conditions thereto annexed as were stated and contained in the bond which accompanied his bid; but in case each and every of the next lowest bidders for such service, whose respective bids are not considered too high by the Postmaster-General, shall refuse to enter into contract and give bond as herein required for the faithful performance of his contract, the Postmaster-General shall immediately advertise for proposals to perform the service on said route. Whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail-route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when a new route shall be established, or new service required, or when from any other cause there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster-General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding six months, until a letting under advertisement can take place: Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not employ temporary service on any route at a higher price than that paid to the contractor who shall have performed the service during the last preceding regular contract-term. And in all cases of regular contracts hereafter made, the contract may, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, be continued in force beyond its express terms for a period not exceeding six months, until a new contract with the same, or other contractors, shall be made by the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 253. That hereafter all bidders upon every mail-route for the transportation of the mails upon the same, where the annual compensation for the service on such route at the time exceeds the sum of $5,000, shall accompany their bids with a certified check or draft, payable to the order of the Postmaster-General, upon some solvent national bank, which check or draft shall not be less than 5 per cent. on the amount of the annual pay on said route at the time such bid is made, and, in case of new or modified service, not less than 5 per cent. of the amount of the bond of the bidder required to accompany his bid, if the amount of the said bond exceeds $5,000. In case any bidder, on being awarded any such contract, shall fail to execute the same, with good and sufficient sureties, according to the terms on which such bid was made and accepted, and enter upon the performance of the service to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General, such bidder shall, in addition to his liability on his bond accompanying his bid, forfeit the amount so deposited to the United States, and the same shall forthwith be paid into the Treasury for the use of the Post-Office Department; but if such contract shall be duly executed and the service entered upon as aforesaid, such draft or check so deposited, and the checks or drafts deposited by all other bidders, on the same route, shall be returned to the respective bidders, making such deposits. No proposals for the transportation of the mails where the amount of the bond required to accompany the same shall exceed $5,000, shall be considered, unless accompanied with the check or draft herein required, together with the bond required by a preceding section: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or intended to affect any penalties or forfeitures which have heretofore accrued under the provisions of the sections hereby amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I understand the Senator from Minnesota, this is simply a bill proposing to guard against straw bids.

Mr. RAMSEY. That is it. It is the House bill on that subject, substantially, with an amendment added by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment, the committee having examined it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to move a further amendment. On page 3 of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, in line 10, I move to strike out the words "or as an exchange."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be so modified.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like the attention of the Senate for three minutes in regard to the amendment. I wish them to understand that it is an important amendment in its effect on the revenue.

The attention of the country has been called to the rapid increase of the deficiences in the postal service. For the last month or two I have given the matter considerable attention for the purpose of providing a remedy, if possible. In doing this I have availed myself with great liberality of the work of the Post-Office Committee of the Senate, of the Post-Office Committee of the House, and also of the House of Representatives. The substance of the amendment I offer is two bills that came to us from the House of Representatives, which I understand have the approval of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of this body.

Mr. RAMSEY. They have been reported by that committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Therefore those features have had the sanction of the House of Representatives and of the Postal Committees of both bodies. I have looked at them simply in their financial aspect, to see whether or not they would improve the revenue.

The increase of the deficiency in the postal service is stated very strongly by the Postmaster-General in his annual report. Two years ago it was $4,000,000; last year it was $6,100,000; for the next fiscal year it is estimated to be $8,150,000. The causes of this increase have been, first, the expense and the rapidity of the railroad service, which has been vastly improved; second, the increase of the pay of postmasters; third, free city delivery and loss of box-rents; fourth, the total inadequacy of newspaper postage. This amendment of mine deals mainly with the last item, the postage on newspapers. It is a remarkable fact that although of the postal matter of the country 89 per cent., or nearly nine-tenths, is in the form of newspapers and periodicals, yet the whole amount received by the Government of the United States for carrying all this vast volume of matter is only $835,727. Under the law all this matter is carried without being prepaid, as letters are required to be.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator state what proportion that bears to the whole postal revenue?

Mr. SHERMAN. It pays less than 3 per cent., or as 1 to 26. The revenue from newspapers and periodicals is only as 1 to 26 of the whole amount of revenue.

Mr. RAMSEY. Of the bulk of the mails 76 per cent. is matter of the second class.

Mr. SHERMAN. I again repeat, from the Postmaster-General's report and from the statement of Mr. DONNAN in the House, that the bulk of the printed matter carried through the mail is 89 per cent. of the whole mail matter, while the revenue is only about 4 per cent., or 1 to 26.

Besides, the postage on newspapers is not prepaid, and the Postmaster-General reports that according to the estimated revenue that ought to come from newspapers it ought to be $2,704,000, while the actual amount received is only $835,000, so that the amount lost by fraud and by the neglect of postmasters in making returns is $1,869,000. It is not necessary to go any further to show the absolute necessity of changing this system.

This amendment now offered by me puts newspapers and periodicals on the same footing as all other mail matter; it requires the postage to be prepaid at a very low rate. The amount that will be paid on newspapers and periodicals will not be one-fourth of the cost of carrying that matter through the mails. In other words, the discrimination even by my amendment will be at least three-fourths to one in favor of the newspapers and other printed matter, but I suppose there is an object in permitting the general diffusion of printed matter through the mails, and therefore there has been no attempt to make the people pay the actual cost of carrying newspapers and periodicals. The rates proposed are, all over the United States, from New York to California, because we can make no discrimination on account of distance, on all printed matter in the form of newspapers and periodicals four cents per pound, which I am told on the largest paper printed in the United States, which weighs about two ounces, is about one-half a cent. That is all that is to be charged for carrying the largest paper in the United States from the extreme end of the country to the other, and on country papers, which are small, the charge will be very much less. The rate of four cents per pound will in all probability increase our revenues some three or four million dollars, and make the postage depend on the weight of the matter, and therefore be more equitable. Now a newspaper carried from one town to another within twenty miles, though printed on a little half-sheet, as many country papers are, pays the same rate of postage as the New York Independent, which weighs very heavy, when carried from New York city to Portland, Oregon. This is a gross and scandalous inequality about which the country press have complained.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to ask the Senator a question. His amendment reads: "On newspapers and periodical publications, four cents for each pound or fraction thereof." If a newspaper weighs only one-fourth of an ounce, will it not have to pay four cents postage under that?

Mr. SHERMAN. No. The next clause provides for newspapers where they go singly. That is all guarded against very carefully. The Senator will see that the provision is "that the rate of postage on newspapers or periodicals not exceeding two ounces in weight, and circulars," shall be so and so. That first clause only applies to newspapers and periodicals sent from the office where they are printed.

That on all newspapers and periodical publications mailed from a known office of publication or news agency, and addressed to regular subscribers or news agents, the postage shall be charged at the following rates.

All other newspapers are carried as formerly. And the next section provides:

That upon the receipt of such newspapers and periodical publications at the office of mailing, they shall be weighed in bulk and postage paid thereon by a special adhesive stamp to be furnished by the Postmaster-General.

The details of this amendment are carefully prepared by the Committees of the two Houses, and have passed the House of Representatives already and have been reported favorably by the Post-Office Committee here. I have in offering this amendment raised somewhat the rate they proposed on newspapers.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the third page of his amendment, line 18, where there is this provision:

And if any person shall knowingly and willfully mail any matter without the payment of postage, as provided by this act.

I suggest that he ought to insert there "with intent to defraud the United States."

Mr. SHERMAN. The words "knowingly and wilfully" in legal language are equivalent to those words. The usual language is that if a man knowingly and willfully does so and so, he shall be punished. Those are the legal words proper to be used. I will say also that that is the language of the present law, so that in that particular this amendment does not change the present law.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator might probably say to the Senate that although this proposition is substantially a bill which has passed the House of Representatives and has been considered by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, yet there are one or two important changes which he has made. For instance he proposes four cents per pound upon newspapers and periodicals, instead of one and a half cents a pound on all newspapers, and three cents a pound upon all ordinary periodicals as proposed by the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say that my only doubt about this matter is whether I have not put the rate too low. There is no reason why newspapers should be carried at one-half the rate of periodicals.

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not mean to say that; but I say simply that the Senate ought to know the change the Senator has made in the House bill on this subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, and I will inform the Senate of another matter. The present pay of postmasters is entirely too high in the intermediate grade of cities. In little towns of Ohio having from five to ten thousand inhabitants, where the people read a great deal, the salary of postmasters is from three to four thousand dollars a year—higher than we pay our highest officer. The amendment I propose does slightly reduce the rate of pay of postmasters of those grades.

Mr. RAMSEY. As illustrating this matter, I beg leave to present the following tables:

Table showing the annual circulation of newspapers and periodicals in the year 1870, number of copies passing through the mails, their weight, the amount of postage that should have been collected under present rates, the amount per pound which should be collected under present rates, and the amount of postage which could be collected at different rates with advance payment.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 10, 1874.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator from Ohio probably is not aware that his amendment as to the pay of postmasters affects simply postmasters of the fifth class as graded in the amended House bill. In regard to the bill providing for the readjustment of postmasters' salaries, and reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and which the Senator from Ohio makes part of his amendment, I will say that there are connected with the Department about thirty-four thousand five hundred postmasters; of this number about thirty-three thousand are postmasters under the present classification of the fourth and fifth classes. It is the principal object of this amendment of the postal code to benefit this large class of officials, by giving to them that compensation which the law contemplates that they should receive, and remove from them a just cause of complaint. Under the present law their compensations, like postmasters of all other classes, are fixed salaries, adjusted only biennially, and during the intervening period remaining the same except in special cases, notwithstanding any increase in the business and revenues of their respective offices. This evil must continue under the present law, and can be avoided only by a change in the mode of compensation. It is this change as its leading feature which the amendment contemplates, to change the compensation from a fixed salary to a compensation governed by and according to the quarterly revenue of the offices as shown by the quarterly returns of the postmasters made to the Auditor. As the change is to affect all postmasters whose compensations are under $1,000, and embraces those of the fourth and fifth classes, under the present classification the division into two classes became unnecessary, and they have been consolidated into one, the fourth. In the present law the amount of stamps canceled is made an item of the revenues of the office. Experience has shown that the amount of stamps sold is a more reliable and accurate evidence of the revenues of an office, and therefore it is proposed to substitute the amount of stamps sold in the place of the amount of stamps canceled as an item of revenue.

To effect these several changes, as simple as they appear to be, required modifications of many sections of the code. On making these modifications, in order to preserve the order and symmetry of the code, it is deemed advisable to re-enact the entire sections as they are modified, and in one instance, for a more logical arrangement, to transpose sections, as that of the eightieth and sixty-third. On account of the large number of persons to whom the postal code is a guide in their official conduct, it is most desirable, so far as it is practicable, that the present sectional arrangement should be preserved. Hence the form in which the amendments are presented. The importance of the amendments proposed, so far as they will affect postmasters of the classes intended to be reached by them, must be obvious without remark. But there is another most important result anticipated from the amendments in the saving of labor and expense to the Government, and the Department from great trouble and annoyance.

In the large number of thirty-three thousand post-offices, and increasing daily, to be affected by these amendments, there must be a large proportion, particularly in the newly settled and rapidly growing sections of the country, at which the revenues will be increased quarterly to an extent (see section 82) which would entitle the occupants of them to an immediate re-adjustment of their salaries, and which could not be denied them under the imperative terms of the present law on proper application. To meet promptly and justly the necessities of such applications would require the whole time of a very large proportion of the entire clerical force of the Department. And even now to make the biennial readjustments provided by law requires the extra time and labor of ten clerks for six months preceding such readjustment, while two clerks would be ample to perform all the labor requisite to the readjustment of the salaries of all other postmasters.

The amendments proposed are commended to favorable consideration not only by their justice to the large number of postmasters to be affected by them, but in addition by the saving of labor and expense to the Government which will result from them.

The transposition of sections 63 and 80 is made in order that the classification may precede appointment. The consolidation of the fourth and fifth classes into one, the fourth is made because the amendment proposes to affect all postmasters whose compensation is less than $1,000. The change of compensation to the fourth class is made to avoid frequent readjustments. The changes in the other sections are made to make them conform to the changes in this section.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Ohio—I think he has no objection to it, and I have consulted many Senators, and I hope there will be no objection—by making the salary of the postmaster of the city of New York $8,000. He is to receive now no box rents. Justices of the peace in the city of New York receive $3,000 and $10,000 a year. Several postmasters receive $5,000 a year, and the labor and responsibility resting upon this officer is many times greater than that resting upon any other postmaster in the Union. I spend no time upon that. I think there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. It occurs in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio first on page 4, line 9, section 63, striking out "six" and inserting "eight," and it occurs again on page 5, line 31, striking out "six" and inserting "eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have another amendment, and only one more, to offer to this bill. I offer it separately because I do not know whether it will meet with the approval of the Senate. I am very much in favor of it myself. It is to add as a new section:

SEC. —. That all public documents printed by order of Congress for distribution shall be transported in the mails without prepayment, and shall be delivered to the person to whom they are addressed upon the payment by him of the lawful postage thereon; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and required to make and enforce suitable rules and regulations to carry this section into effect.

Mr. RAMSEY. Does the Senator mean to restore the franking privilege?

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean to do one of two things without circumlocution: I mean either to stop the printing of public documents and loading us down with matter that costs the Government a large expense or to provide some way of getting rid of them. This does not restore the franking privilege; it simply authorizes this matter to be carried in the mail and delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, and requires him to pay the postage, so that the Government loses no revenue. It only does by public documents what has been the law of the land all the time for periodicals and newspapers; and I say that when Congress goes to the expense of printing public documents they ought to be transported in the mails, and the person who receives the benefit of them ought to pay the postage on them.

So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to vote for this proposition, and then I am perfectly willing to vote against every publication of every public document unless some mode is provided for distributing it. I have here hundreds of volumes and I am transporting them to Ohio now by railroad cars and by express. There is no reason why the Government of the United States having a Post-Office Department should not carry those documents to the persons who ought to receive them, and why the persons who receive them should not pay the postage on them. I would go a little further and require them to pay the cost of printing.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator came in this morning and moved what was really a great reform, but now he throws it all away. The great reform he moved was to require the prepayment of postage on newspapers and printed matter going through the mails. The House have passed that measure, the Senate committee have agreed to it, and the Senator from Ohio offered it as an amendment to this bill. I think the Senate ought to accept it, and it ought to become a part of the law of the land. Unless you do insist on prepayment you get no postage or no approximation to what you should have from the postage upon printed matter. Now, the Senator goes right back upon that record which he has made to-day and proposes to allow all this printed matter to pass through the mails without prepayment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only public documents.

Mr. RAMSEY. How much you will receive from it you can very well conceive when I tell you that you have collected only about one-third of the postage on printed matter that your law provided for during all these past years. With all the precaution and watchfulness of the Post-Office Department it could never collect more than about one-third of the postage to which it was entitled, and for that reason your deficiencies have been growing from year to year. The Senator has commented on those deficiencies, and now he comes in with a proposition to allow documents to go without prepayment of postage.

Mr. WEST. It occurs to me that although the amendment of the Senator from Ohio may be in the direction that many Senators consider desirable, it is certainly capable of a most pernicious construction, and that is that the mails of the United States shall be cumbered up with such documents as Congress shall deem it prudent to print and members of Congress shall deem it judicious to send to their constituents, leaving those constituents to judge whether they want them and whether they will pay the postage on them.

I have long held that if there could be any modification of the franking privilege that would contribute to the interest of the people by laying before them such information as they might desire, that object could be obtained by one very simple process, the same process that was at one time applied to the distribution of the Congressional Globe. Constantly propositions are made in this body to print documents. Whenever Congress shall determine that a document is sufficiently valuable to print, why not determine at the same time that it is sufficiently valuable to transmit through the mails free of charge; so that we can say, when the chairman of the Committee on Printing offers a resolution here, that so many thousand copies of a document shall be printed for the use of the Senate and the House, "and the same shall be transmitted through the mails of the United States free of charge," making the application of that privilege of transit depend upon the value and the use and the necessity of that document? That can be applied in every instance. Whenever we want to send a document abroad we can at the same time say that that document is sufficiently valuable to justify its transmission through the mails at the government expense.

What do we have here? An opportunity for Congressmen, first, to print everything, and, next, to send everything out and cumber the mails with these documents and then leave the men to whom they are addressed the option to take them out of the mails or not. What will be the consequence? Your post-offices will be the receptacles of this vast amount of printed matter lying useless there, useless for the reason that the people to whom it is addressed will not take it from the office. We know that will be the case, just as our establishments were cumbered with these documents before. Of all the methods of restoring free transmission, so called, of public documents through the mails of the United States, this undoubtedly is the most pernicious, and I do not believe the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I cannot agree that the Senators and Representatives will be so foolish as to be loading the mails down with public documents which their constituents do not want. There is some discretion left in the representatives of the people. The provision which is contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is that when one of our constituents writes to us for a book we can send it to him. I would add, for I introduced a bill which I have in my hand, and which has never been reported, that postage should not exceed twenty-five cents a volume in any case; and if the books were not taken out of the post-office in ten days they could be sold by the postmaster and accounted for to the Department. I will read the bill which I have drawn up:

That hereafter the requirement that postage shall be prepaid shall not apply to public documents certified to be such by any member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, or by the President or head of any Executive Department, or other person entitled to the franking privilege when the law was passed abolishing the same; and the postage on no single public document shall exceed the sum of twenty-five cents, and the same, if not prepaid, shall be payable by the person to whom the same may be directed and received; and the words "Public document" written or printed on the envelope containing any public document, and subscribed by the member or other person mailing the same, shall be deemed a sufficient certificate that the same is a public document; and the term public documents shall be deemed to include all publications printed by order of Congress, or either House thereof, or of any Department of the Government. And if any such documents shall not be taken from the post-office to which the same shall be directed within ten days after being received thereat, the postmaster may sell the same for the amount of the postage due thereon, and shall account to the Post-Office Department for the proceeds thereof.

That does not abolish the franking privilege; it does not cumber the mails; it does not put the Government to any cost. It does distribute the public documents, and at the proper time I will move it as an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to accept that as a modification of my amendment if the Senator will let me look at it so that I can examine it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President——

Mr. RAMSEY. If the Senator from Ohio intends to insist on this amendment I suggest to him to let it expire with the transmission of the documents already printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. RAMSEY. I simply wished to make this suggestion. I do not intend to take up the time of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator from Minnesota is through, I will make the observation I rose to submit. I should regret to see the proposition of the Senator from Ohio put on this bill. We had been so greatly exercised over the free transmission of public documents through the mail; it had become in public estimation so opprobrious; members of Congress had been so much scandalized for the abuse of that privilege, that I should regret exceedingly if within twelve months or so after our protestations that we never intended to have anything more to do with it, that we would wash our hands of it, that so far as we were concerned we would not encumber the mails, we should now, while this is all fresh in our memories, propose to give these things free passage through the mails again.

Mr. President, the postal service is becoming one of the most important in the country. From very small beginnings it has gone up rapidly, and in the few last years with marvelous rapidity, until now its revenues are more than the revenues of the entire Government of the United States were under the administration of John Quincy Adams, and its disbursements are larger than the whole expenditures of the Government at that time, and it is increasing at a rate of some four millions a year, expanding in all directions.

Mr. President, what is the principle upon which we ought to run the mails? Ought we to run the mails out of the Treasury of the United States, or ought that service to be predicated upon the idea of being self-supporting? One of the two principles we must sooner or later adopt. In the beginning this branch of the service was self-supporting, and it was designed to be self-supporting. That feature was retained in this branch of the service down to 1815, I think, without a single exception, and it continued chiefly from that time down to 1857. Since that period we have departed from the idea of its being self-sustaining and we have relied upon making appropriations sufficient to meet the demands of the service, so that the appropriations for deficiencies range all the way from three to five million dollars a year.

Something has been said in this debate with which I am entirely in sympathy, and that is, that we overload the mail with matter which does not properly belong to the mail; we subject the mail proper to an unreasonable and unjust burden. It has been stated by the Senator from Ohio, and I believe accurately, that some 79 per cent. of the amount of all mailable matter carried through the mails only pays about a million dollars out of the thirty millions and more which this mail service costs. I submit to my honorable friend from New Jersey whether he is in sympathy with that fact. I repeat, the statistics show that, taking the bulk of mailable matter that passes through the mails, newspapers and pamphlets contribute about 79 or 80 parts in a hundred of the entire bulk that is carried through the mails. They contribute to your revenues only about one millon dollars out of thirty millions.

Now, is it a fair proposition that a paper weighing four ounces, as many of the metropolitan papers do, may go through the mails for a cent and a half, while the letter of the poor man, weighing half an ounce, must be taxed three cents? On that portion of the public service there is collected a sum of twenty-two millions, while something less than a million is realized from the papers and pamphlets that pass through the mails.

I do not see upon what principle it is possible for us to conduct the service in that way. If we intend to make this service entirely free, very well; let us curtail the service down to the absolute needs of the people, and run it in that way out of the Treasury of the United States, as you do the Army and Navy precisely. Call it an establishment in the interest of the people, for the education of the people, and make it an appropriation absolutely from the Treasury at large, and there may be some justice in that; but what sense or justice is there in running the mails at an expense of thirty millions to float seventy-nine hundredths of newspapers and pamphlets that pay a mere fraction of the cost of the service?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If I get the point of my friend, it is that it is unfair to make the poor man pay three cents for a letter while newspapers and periodicals go at a much less rate. I think the answer to that is that the man pays his three cents as a tax for the promotion of general intelligence throughout the country, and I believe that the circulation of newspapers and periodicals and the documents which we publish is of great value to the people, and that they can well afford to pay the expense of it by paying three cents for a letter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Would not my honorable friend think it more just, then, to pay it out of the general Treasury?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know that it would be. I do not know that you can get an easier tax, for if you pay it out of the general Treasury you have got to impose a tax to get it into the Treasury, and I do not believe there is any tax you could levy to get the money into the Treasury which would be more easily borne and less felt than the three-cent postage on a letter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not for myself believe there is any justice in imposing upon the people of this country a tax of $22,000,000 for the carrying of letters for the sake of floating seventy-nine one-hundredths proportion of the whole service of the country in the case of newspapers and pamphlets. We shall have to come to one of two things: either devolve the whole expense of this Department, as we do of the Navy and the Army, upon the Treasury of the United States, or return to the early policy of the Government and make it self-supporting; and no man can doubt, in my judgment, that the economy in the whole thing is to return to the early policy of making it self-sustaining. Then you will hear nothing about free transportation through the mails. The franking privilege abolished, let everything that passes through the mail pay its tribute to the service on which it calls for transportation. That is the sound rule; but above all, Mr. President, I should regret extremely if the proposition of my honorable friend from Ohio for the free passage of documents such as we see fit to publish here through the mails should obtain the acceptance of the Senate.

Moreover, I do not see that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey improves it much. As I understand, by his proposition these documents are to go through the mails at twenty cents a volume.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Twenty-five cents.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Twenty-five cents per volume. If my honorable friend will examine this question he will find that some of the documents that we shall pass through the mail weighing four or five times as much as that, [holding up a volume of the Statutes,] according to the present rates which are paid by the people upon other documents, upon other books and other printed matter, would cost from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars. Can anybody say why there should be a discrimination in favor of public documents and against that general intelligence so precious in the estimation of my honorable friend and which the people are hankering for so much? It comes back precisely to that discrimination which the people of this country have held to be invidious, and which they have frowned upon and which became a public scandal, in favor of public documents, in favor of the privileges, as they were understood, of Congressmen. The bill which was reported by the chairman of the Committee on Printing contains in my judgment the true principle upon which we should send out these public documents. Allow them to go through the mails prepaid, as you do other publications precisely; allow whoever applies for them and pays their cost and the postage to have them; but that there should be a discrimination in favor of any public document against any other publication which is permissible to go through the mails, I submit is without just distinction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RAMSEY. What is it now as modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If it is in order, I will move the amendment I suggested as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from New Jersey is in order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute is before the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN to the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN, which was to strike out all of that amendment after the word "that" and insert in lieu of the words stricken out:

Hereafter the requirement that postage shall be prepaid shall not apply to public documents certified to be such by any member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, or by the President or head of any Executive Department, or other person entitled to the franking privilege when the law was passed abolishing the same; and the postage on no single public document shall exceed the sum of twenty-five cents, and the same, if not prepaid, shall be payable by the person to whom the same may be directed and received; and the words "Public document" written or printed on the envelope containing any public document, and subscribed by the member or other person mailing the same, shall be deemed a sufficient certificate that the same is a public document; and the term public documents shall be deemed to include all publications printed by order of Congress, or either House thereof, or of any Department of the Government. And if any such documents shall not be taken from the post-office to which the same shall be directed within ten days after being received thereat, the postmaster may sell the same for the amount of the postage due thereon, and shall account to the Post-Office Department for the proceeds thereof.

Mr. WEST. I understand that the Senator who offers that amendment is willing to change the time at the termination of which the postmaster shall sell the documents from ten days to thirty days. I ask the Clerk to make that change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Post-Office Committee whether any provision has been made or is to be made touching the official postage of members of the Senate?

Mr. RAMSEY. Do you mean compensation to Senators for their postage?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAMSEY. I imagine not. There is no such purpose on the part of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, nor do I suppose there is on the part of the Senate. I presume that when the franking privilege was abolished Senators and members all knew very well that they would have to pay their own postage. There has been no proposition from any quarter to give compensation for it. Indeed, if my recollection is right, the Senator from Vermont had an amendment placed on some bill, probably on an appropriation bill, prohibiting any compensation for postage hereafter.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Minnesota bestows I think the last sad commentary upon the experiment of abolishing the franking privilege. I am one of those who never lost an occasion to vote for the abolition of that miscalled privilege; and if ever I voted under a delusion, I am compelled to admit that I was deluded every time I gave such a vote. I believed in the petitions which came here. I believed somewhat even in those petitions which, printed at the public expense and sent out by the Post-Office Department, under the franking privilege, and committed to the army of postmasters the country over with instructions tantamount to an order from an official superior to disseminate and obtain signatures to them, which sent back here under the franking privilege, were presented by hundreds and by thousands. I believed somewhat even in the language of those petitions, and so believing I expected by my vote to aid in eradicating a real abuse, although I differed from the prevalent theories as to the particulars in which the abuse consisted. But it was my hope that there would be no more seeds sent out, never to come up; no more books printed and sent out, never to be read; that the whole business of bulb-propagating and seed-collecting and distributing, book-making, and book-giving would cease; that the mails would be employed in the exchange of correspondence, and the franking privilege would cease.

What has been the result? What decrease has there been in book-making, book-printing, and book-binding? What decrease has there been in the Agricultural Department, so called, in the bulbs, the seeds, the vines, the agricultural and horticultural products? What has been the case in reference to saving anything to the Government upon the correspondence coming to and going from the representatives of the Government? In one word, Mr. President, this great reform, this reformation about which so much has been said, has resulted in no cheapening of postage, in no saving of public expense that I can discover, in nothing except to impose upon members of Congress letter postage, and to impose upon every one-armed soldier and sailor, and upon his widows and orphans if he be gone, postage upon the letters which they write inquiring as to matters of deepest concern to them. That is the outcome of this reform.

Why do I say so? The Senate hears continually resolution after resolution to print this, that, and the other document and book with extra copies. The Senate listens, whenever there is occasion for the information, to statements showing us that in the Executive Departments, first, the expense is incurred of printing stamps; second, the expense is incurred of employing clerks to lick and to stick those stamps; that the danger is incurred of printing these official stamps in great numbers and distributing them, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] tells me to not fewer than fifty thousand officials, by the sheet or by the handful, with all the opportunity that is thus afforded for abuse, lax practice, and fraud.

Thus the Post-Office Department comes to enjoy, I admit, a sort of apparent benefit. It is a trick of book-keeping. It is taking it out of one pocket and putting it into the other. The Post-Office Department is receiving revenues from these stamps, which revenues are being paid by the other Departments; in other words, being paid by the people, by the revenues in the beginning and in the end; that is all. If the purpose were to enable the Post-Office Department to make a flattering balance-sheet, to make an exhibit to the country showing that it is self-sustaining, showing that the Post-Office Department, as one entity in the Government machine, costs nothing, I admit this would be, as Artemus Ward said about his father's grave, a success. It would be a success; but when you consider that the legislation is in behalf of the people, and when you remember that it costs precisely the same thing with the expense of printing the stamps and employing the clerks to apply them besides, certainly in that direction the result is not flattering.

What else do we find? These books being printed are allotted to Senators to distribute them. How do they distribute them? The Senator from Ohio tells us that he is employing the express and the railroad to carry his books to Ohio, and when they reach Ohio I do not know whether he means to employ a wheelbarrow or a hand-cart or a drayman to take them around and deposit them at the doors of those to whom he proposes to give them. But here they are. A printed statement laid upon our tables shows that the books allotted to us up to that time and not distributed involved the payment of $930 postage for every member of this body. So the printed statement, coming I believe from the Post-Office Department or under its authority, informs us. During some weeks of this session, I am told by Senators, their official postage, postage upon letters coming to them, the postage being only partially paid by the senders, and upon letters which they are compelled to write and pay for, has amounted to eight or nine dollars a week.

Within the narrow limits fixed by the rule relative to debate on this bill, I cannot go into the subject at large, but I beg to address to every Senator who hears me one question: Is there any reason why the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Treasury, or the head of a Bureau, or any other executive officer of this Government, more than a Senator, should be paid his official postage? Turning it the other way, is there any reason why my friend from Connecticut should pay the postage upon the letters which he officially is compelled to write any more than why any head of a Bureau or an Executive Department should do the same thing? And yet to this day that great public which stands behind these galleries does not know that we are compelled to pay out of our own pocket the enormous accumulation of postage rolled upon us.

I received to-day a letter from a gentleman, as noted for his culture and politeness as he is for his great wealth, about a matter wholly personal to him as far as it is personal to anybody, having nothing to do with me except that it is one of the manifold duties imposed upon me because I am a Senator. He wrote to me one of a series of letters requiring an answer, and in no one of his letters has he ever inclosed a postage-stamp—not that he would be rude enough to impose upon me the payment of his postage, knowing at the same time that all the other correspondents that I have in a constituency numbering about five million people may be doing the same thing; but to this hour he, a reader of newspapers and a man of intelligence and thought, does not know that I am compelled to pay the postage upon every letter that I write, sometimes amounting in a single day to a hundred letters; and that in addition to that I receive by nearly every mail packages upon which one rate of stamp has been put, three cents or perhaps six, and they come to me marked "due nine cents" or "due twelve cents," sometimes "due eighteen cents," each of which packages requires me frequently to transmit the contents of it or a part of them somewhere else, upon which I pay postage over again. And yet although that is our attitude, and although the Senator from Minnesota tells us that it is not proposed to do anything by which the widow or the orphan may write, without paying postage, to us in respect to his or her pension, although it is not proposed to do anything by which our official postage may be paid, nevertheless the abolition of the franking privilege he intimates has done its office when we sit here legislating to furnish official stamps to everybody in the service of the Government except members of Congress, and racking our ingenuity to enable everybody except ourselves and our correspondents in some way or other to go scot-free of postage.

Mr. President, this brings me to the pending measure, if I have a moment or two left to speak of it. What is it? I take the amendment of my friend from Ohio. I believe it is like that of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WEST. There is no ten-minute rule on this bill yet.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator says there is no ten-minute rule on this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. O, yes, there is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A resolution was adopted making it in order to move the ten-minute rule; no motion has yet been made to apply the rule to the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon; but I will not inflict the Senate with a speech for that reason. Had I known that I was not confined to ten minutes, I should have made my position a little clearer.

I wish to devote a few moments to the pending proposition. It is that hereafter all public documents may be deposited in the mail, no postage being prepaid upon them, and when they are called for by the person to whom they are addressed, he is to pay the postage upon them. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether in substance that is it?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from New York will allow me, this is the precise principle of the law which existed during the late war in regard to soldiers' letters. A soldier at the front might send a letter to his home, and it was carried home and the postage was there collected. This is the same principle that was adopted in that case.

Mr. CONKLING. With a slight variation, Mr. President. The letter which came from the soldier in the front and went to those who waited for it around his own fireside was not a public document; it was a private document and a sacred document. Those who would pay postage upon it waited and longed for it, and no uncertainty could arise in regard to it when once it reached its destination. What is proposed now? To send public documents here and there over the country. To whom? To those who write for them merely? Is that the suggestion? If it is, you will find they will be applied for by book-jobbers, by book-stall keepers, by buyers and sellers and traffickers in documents. The result will be to turn over largely to dealers in these articles the books which we are making here, they paying nothing for them except the cost of transmission? Is that intended? If it is not intended to confine them to those who write for them, does the Senator mean that a Senator shall sit down and send indiscriminately to persons who have not applied for them books burdened with a considerable amount of postage, which they are to be called upon to pay, and either submit to paying or be guilty of the apparent rudeness of refusing to take them from the post-office?

Then my friend from New Jersey, as I understand, provides, looking to that contingency, that when they do refuse, when some man in New Jersey says, "Well, really, this is very considerate of Senator FRELINGHUYSEN to send me a book which I have never asked for, and do not want, with twenty or thirty cents postage upon it; when I want him to impose that postage upon me, I will let him know; and in the mean time I will fall back on my reserved rights and tell the postmaster that I do not want this book and refuse to take it out"—looking to that contingency the Senator provides that these books are to be sold. To whom are they to be sold? I think it quite likely that here and there a man or two will go into the business of picking up these books, and from such persons bids will come. What will be the bids? Is there anything here holding out a promise of their selling even for enough to pay the postage? In some post-offices a hundred documents accumulate. The postmaster is to sell them. How is he to sell them? By private sale?

I recollect a case in which a gentleman who once held distinguished rank in this body, as well as in the other House, received from the far West a large box of prairie-hens with a letter, as he told me, requesting him to dispose of those prairie-hens to the best advantage and remit the proceeds to the sender, which I believe he religiously did, that being but one box of prairie-hens. But when the postmasters of the country are required to make the best disposition they can of these documents coming along all the time, are they to go around by private negotiations, as in the case of the box of game, and see who will take one and who will take another, or how are they to dispose of them? Perhaps by ringing a bell and proclaiming a sale by public outcry, at public vendue. How much are they to bring? Can anybody suppose that the class of people who would value these books, men of business, farmers who want the Agricultural Report, many of whom send two, three, four, or five miles to the post-office for their mail, are to attend these sales, are to go in person, and watch and see when they can buy these books? It seems to me all that is very uncertain, and that it is much more likely that the books will be sacrificed and sold for a song.

And thus we have again, Mr. President, what I insist we have had all the time, an abolition of the franking privilege without the courage or the willingness to stand up to it; upon which I observe that one or the other of two things is right: Either we should restore the franking privilege and allow public intelligence to go through the mails to the end that our principals may know what we, their agents, do here, in place of our being isolated and turned over to the annals or chronicles given by certain party newspapers; or, if the franking privilege ought not to be restored and should have been abolished, then we should accept logically and fully the fact of its abolition and govern ourselves accordingly. But instead of that, we have constantly propositions to print this book because of its exceptional value, and that book because of some special circumstance connected with it, and something else for a different reason, and so we are adding to an accumulation of books the postage upon which was $330 weeks ago for every member of the Senate; and then by way of avoiding a restoration of the franking privilege, and by way of justifying ourselves in going on with the business of book-making, here comes a plan as the most ingenious these learned Senators can invent by which you are to send them through the mail subject to postage at the other end, and providing that they are to be sold at public vendue or otherwise when they are not called for. I do not believe in it, Mr. President. I do believe that if we are to adhere to the abolition of the franking privilege, we should stand by it. As the tree has fallen, so it should lie. I do believe that instead of receiving, as I receive continually, a package of seeds and a package of other agricultural products from the Agricultural Department, which I do not know any disposition to make of—for I have no idea what to do with them—we should cease to be the recipients of these contributions.

Mr. President, this subject connects itself with one or two other topics upon which I think it would be appropriate at some time for somebody to comment. We said at the beginning of this session that we would fix the salary of Senators at $5,000 a year. What did that mean? It meant apparently that that sum was to be received. Every man who hears me knows that unless we leave the seeds and the documents to perish or to be disposed of under some such scheme as this, which I think would probably carry a large part of them to book-jobbers and document-venders to make money of, in place of the salary of a Senator being $5,000 it is not $3,500 after he has paid his official postage. Every man knows that is not right; every man would be ashamed of it in the case of anybody else; and every Senator knows the reason why that fact is left to exist. Perhaps I should take a liberty with the Senate if I were to state it; but I think I may say this much: that were it the case of any other public officer, or of any citizen, were it the case of an executive officer of the Govment, as we do furnish him official stamps to carry on his official correspondence, so we should furnish official stamps to him if he held the place we hold. In other words, it is a constant confession that what is right in respect of others, we do not do, perhaps I may not say we dare not do in respect of ourselves.

But, Mr. President, with less courage than any other member of the Senate, with so little that in these times I often feel the need of something to lean upon even in occasions that are not as trying as this, I think if other Senators should go with me and assist me, I could nerve myself up to voting either to stand by the abolition of the franking privilege and stop printing documents, or if we will print documents, to restore the franking privilege at least in regard to them. I do not know but that I could go a little further. I think I could stand with others around me and close to me in insisting that if the official postage of everybody else from the President of the United States to the last clerk in the last Bureau of the last Department is to be paid—his official postage I mean—thereby meaning postage upon all letters written to him touching the public business and coming to to him in his official character—if that is to be done, I say I might myself hope if my stalwarth friend from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] would stand close by me to vote that we also should be furnished either with official stamps or with some substitutes for them to put on the letters that come to us and go from us in our official capacity; and I should say that the American people are too just, that the American people are too clear-headed to respect or praise any public officer for the cowardice which leads him to submit to gross and palpable injustice which he would not dare to justify in the case of anybody other than himself.

Suppose we were to sit here and vote that the Postmaster-General was to pay out of his own pocket all the postage upon the official correspondence received by him. It would shock the common sense of every page in the Senate Chamber. Every man would say "the Postmaster-General, receiving now $8,000 a year for his services, taxed as all officials are because they are officials, besides now to be compelled to pay postage upon everything sent to him in his official character! It is a swindle; if you mean, that why do you not say honestly that he shall receive but $2,000 a year or $4,000 a year, or whatever would remain to him after paying his postage?" The boys that run our errands could tell us that; and yet I inquire again what the difference in principle is between a Senator paying nine dollars a week, as I have heard Senators say they have paid postage during some weeks of this session, not upon public documents but upon correspondence alone, and the Postmaster-General or the Secretary of the Navy, or any other gentleman who holds a distinguished executive position under the United States paying his official postage? There is not any.

But, Mr. President, why multiply words? All these things are part, as I insist, with deference to the Senate, of that illogical, confused, haphazard policy which has been adopted on this subject. They all grow out of the fact that when we abolished the franking privilege we did not stand to and abide by the logic of that act. If we had done so the provision made for the Executive Departments as to their postage would have been made for us also, either individually or collectively, and then all unnecessary matter for the mails, like books furnished at the public cost, would have ceased to go to the mails, because our orders would have ceased under which they are printed, bound, and published. Therefore my conclusion is that the sooner we come back to the one position or the other the more logical we shall be, the more just to ourselves and to everybody else. This proposition in either form I cannot vote for, believing as I do that it would make still worse a matter already bad.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think the best way to legislate is to legislate in view of existing facts. We have two facts which are undisputed. The franking privilege does not exist; the public documents are printed and we have them on hand to be disposed of; and now the question is how shall we afford the requisite facilities for their distribution? As to this discussion as to courage, I do not think it is a question of courage. I voted against the abolition of the franking privilege before. I spoke against it. My friend from New York voted for it and spoke for it. But I do not think it is a wise plan, when a thing is done, not to accept it and to be finding fault with the state of things. I accept it that the franking privilege is abolished; but we have these books now, and the question is how shall we distribute them? The Senator from New York thinks that we should be imposed upon by the book-jobbers. Not at all. The way that I should undertake to administer the distribution of documents under this law would be this: I would write to some leading person in one township and to somebody in another to send me a list of the names of those who would like the Agricultural Report and pay the postage on it, and then I would fill up that list and so circulate those books; and if they are not called for, what is the provision? Not that they shall be put up at auction, but that they shall be sold for the postage, no more, no less, and that would effect the distribution of these books.

Mr. WEST. Suppose they do not bring the postage?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That would be a loss in that contingency.

Mr. RAMSEY. The charge of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] so often repeated, that the repeal of the franking privilege was owing to the circulation of petitions sent out by the Post-Office Department is calculated to make a wrong impression on the minds of those who were not here during the consideration of that question by Congress. The truth is that the repeal of the franking privilege was urged upon Congress by the President of the United States; it was urged upon Congress by Postmasters-General of the United States for over twenty-five years; it was urged upon Congress by the two leading political organizations of this country in their national conventions at Cincinnati and Philadelphia; it was pressed upon the Congress of the United States by one million people of these United States affixing their signatures to petitions for its abolition. All these things were done—not by the Postmaster-General. It is true that in answer to importunities from the people to send them some sort of petitions he had blanks printed and sent to them. That was all he did. No one can pretend that American citizens were compelled or coerced by postmasters to sign those petitions; they knew what they were about. A million of people in the United States arenot to be dragooned in that way.

Again, it is not a singular thing that we do not enjoy the franking privilege. There is not a civilized and cultivated country on the earth that allows it to its representatives. Whenever they were once in the enjoyment of it they have been compelled, as we have been compelled by public opinion, to abandon it; and why did we abandon it? Because it was a grievous wrong, a great abuse in itself. Properly construed and properly conducted it might not have been so; but in the lapse of time it grew to be a great abuse, and the people compelled its abolition. I am sorry that the Senator from New York after having done that good work should be perpetually sighing for the "flesh-pots of Egypt."

I would ask the honorable Senator from New Jersey if he proposes in this amendment of his to have it still read "that the postage on no single document shall exceed the sum of twenty-five cents?" Probably he means "no single volume," and he should so modify his amendment. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I suppose will consist of four or five volumes for the session; the Globe has heretofore been four or five volumes per session; and it is not possible that he means to send all those volumes for twenty-five cents. Again, the Medical and Surgical History of the War comprises two large volumes weighing ten or fifteen pounds at least, and he would not send both of those volumes for twenty-five cents postage. He means each volume of a document probably.

I think it is unfair to have one system of postage for the people and another system for the officials of the country. I do not believe that will be agreeable to the people. If we adopt such a system, probably we shall be as hasty in our retreat from it as we were in the "back-pay" business. I hope we shall not make such a mistake now.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the rule be applied to the post-office bill limiting discussion to ten minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves the application of the pending rule limiting debate on amendments to ten minutes to the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I have not been deceived in the result of the abolition of the franking privilege. I foresaw that it would be a sham, and it is an immense sham. But so far as the printing of public documents is concerned, the prevention of that and of their distribution is a real reform. It is a great mistake to suppose that we have been printing documents at this session for distribution. It has not been done that I am aware of in any case.

Mr. CONKLING. What are all these extra copies printed for?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The extra copies we now print are the last sad remains of documents that were ordered at previous sessions of Congress. I am utterly hostile to reviving the book-making business on the part of Congress, and yet I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the facts in this case so far as it is a reform on the part of the Post-Office Department.

It was represented to us that if we would abolish the franking privilege there would be a saving of something like $4,000,000 a year. Thus far all the contributions of members of Congress to the revenues of the Department are of course to be added; and in addition to them we are to add $1,865,900 that was last year appropriated for stamps for the Departments of State, of the Treasury, of the Navy, of the Interior, the Agricultural and other Departments. That added to the amount we appropriated for supplying deficiencies last year made the sum we appropriated last year for deficiencies in the revenue of the Post-Office Department seven million two hundred and sixty-two thousand and odd dollars. We appropriated directly from the Treasury $5,396,602, and then appropriated for the stamps of the several Departments $1,865,000. Now, after making these large appropriations, this bill provides that we are to appropriate $100,000 more than we did last year, notwithstanding the contributions of members of Congress and notwithstanding the franking privilege has been abolished, and for last year, as I stated, we appropriated $5,396,602, and this year $5,497,000.

Mr. WEST. But your service has increased 8 per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Very well; if the service has increased 8 per cent. so have the revenues increased or they ought to have increased.

Mr. WEST. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Under these circumstances it is apparent that the Post-Office Department is an expensive institution, and that it ought to be brought back to the original plan of the institution where it was kept for something like three-quarters of a century as a self-sustaining establishment.

I hope that we shall not brush aside the only reform that was made in abolishing the franking privilege, which was the suspension of the book-making business on the part of Congress. We have not yet introduced it at this session, and I trust that we shall not provide for it in the post-office appropriation bill by providing that the documents may be distributed only so far as documents that are now on hand are concerned. I am quite ready to provide some scheme by which the documents on hand which were previously ordered should now be distributed at some reasonable rate.

Mr. WEST. As some allusions have been made in this discussion to the question whether the repeal of the franking privilege has resulted in any benefit to the revenues of the Department or contributed in any degree to its more economical administration, I think it proper to state some facts in connection with that subject which have come to my notice in the examination of the expenditures of the Department.

The Postmaster-General in his report in his allusion to that question says, "it is too early now"—mind you his report was made in November of last year, when the repeal of the franking privilege had only been in operation for a few short months, and he called our attention to the fact that it is impossible to judge from the revenues of his office how far a benefit in the direction of economy had accrued. But I ask Senators to examine the data that I submitted here in my remarks when this bill was first presented to them. I showed you that the increased service throughout the country has been from 7 to 8 per cent. in response to the demands from all portions of the Union that additional mail service shall be put here, that additional mail service shall be afforded there, and that additional facilities shall be supplied here and elsewhere. I pointed to this fact that the increased expenditures of the Department this year are 5½ per cent. while the increased service is 8 per cent. What is the deduction therefrom? That there must have been some increase of revenue elsewhere. Then I call your attention to the fact that if the management of the business of the post-office is not in the direction of economy, most assuredly the percentage of deficiency should keep pace with the percentage of expenditure. You have 5½ per cent. increased expenditure and you only have had 1¾ per cent. increase of deficiency, and that in face of this other and very important fact that Congress at its last session authorized an increase of compensation to the railroad companies all over the country. That was because it was made evident to Congress that in the compensation the Post-Office Department was conferring on the railroad companies it was not equitable and was not just. We have under that provision that we should pay an additional sum to the railroad companies, an increase of $1,750,000 railroad compensation for the next year that does not appear in the expenditures. Our expenditures are so much less, or proportionately so much less, and yet you are paying the railroads on their contracts $1,750,000 more than you did last year. Then, irrespective of whether it is advisable to restore the franking privilege, we must not lose sight of the fact that the country is gaining financially by its abolition. That is evident from the facts I have stated, first, in the reduced percentage, and second, that we have increased the railroad compensation $1,750,000 for reasons that we could not avoid. The railroad companies would not carry the mails unless we did it. There is part of the money saved from the franking privilege.

As for the $4,000,000 that the Senator from Vermont alluded to, I do not know where he got his facts from, because we have here an assurance from the Postmaster-General that if that mail matter was paid for it would increase the revenues $2,500,000; but it does not go and it does not pay anything and it is not carried in the mails, and consequently we have saved that much money.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced an amendment, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to allow documents printed at the public expense to be sent through the mails, the postage to be paid by the persons receiving them. I think hereafter there will be much more circumspection in the printing of public documents than there has been in the past, and that only the more valuable will be published. Some of these documents contain information that cannot be had elsewhere. Book publishers will not publish books containing this information. If it is not published by Congress it will not be published at all, and if the people cannot get it through this source they cannot get it at all. Some of this information is very valuable to the country, and the people are willing to pay for it. Now, why not give them a chance to get it? It is a hardship and a burden upon members of Congress to send these documents at their own expense. They cannot very well afford to do it. It amounts to an onerous tax. Now, why not allow us to send these documents to persons who want them or who will be willing to take them and pay for them, or that have written to us for them, letting them pay the postage? I have received many letters during this session, and I presume every other Senator has, asking for certain books, and I believe in not a single instance have stamps been sent to pay the postage. I will not say why this omission has been made; but such is the fact. Some write to us "Send them at my expense." But how can we send them without sending a bill for the postage, which we are not likely to do?

Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, though it does not go far enough. The Senator from New York made an argument which would prove, if it proves anything, that the franking privilege ought not to have been abolished. He voted for it and so did I. I voted for it because that privilege had become a scandal that could not be answered. It became a necessity on the part of Congress to abolish the franking privilege, and there is no reason why members of Congress should not be provided with postage for that correspondence which necessarily grows out of their office any more than that the Postmaster-General or the Secretary of War should be provided with postage. To require them to pay postage on the official business of their Departments would be ruinous to them. As was argued, is there any more justice in requiring us to pay postage growing out of the office and in consequence of it? I am prepared, when some member shall offer such a measure properly considered, making provision for our postage, to vote for it. It cannot be done to-day, and it will not be done, but here is a step in the right direction for the present. Let us provide that those persons who want these public documents may get them by paying the postage on them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend the amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not amendable, because a further amendment would be in the third degree.

Mr. SARGENT. I will suggest a modification. Before the word "public," in line 9, insert "volume of a," so as to read "no single volume of a."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, as modified, as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

A division being called for, there were—ayes 13, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the proposition be read. I do not think the Senate understands it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that"——

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe I have the right to accept that amendment, and to save time I will accept it as a substitute for my amendment, and call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of it.

Mr. WEST. No; let us have the vote on this amendment and not have it adopted with the Senator's consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose to have the yeas and nays on the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey. I will withdraw my amendment and let the vote be taken on the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WEST. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS. Now let it be read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to amend by adding a proviso to the end:

Provided, That this shall apply only to documents ordered to be printed previous to the passage of this act.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it in order to move a substitute for the whole amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order at present.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will send to the desk and ask to have read for information the amendment which I wish to propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That an act entitled "An act to abolish the franking privilege," approved January 31, 1873, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the franking privilege as the same existed prior to the passage of said act, is hereby restored.

SEC. 2. That if any person entitled to use the franking privilege shall frank any matter or thing other than is allowed by law, or shall allow any person to use his frank for any purpose whatsoever, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction before any court having jurisdiction of such offense, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and may be imprisoned at the discretion of the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is to add to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey the following proviso:

Provided, That this shall apply only to documents ordered to be printed previous to the passage of this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now read the original proposition.

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended as proposed the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will read:

That hereafter the requirement that postage shall be prepaid shall not apply to public documents certified to be such by any member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, or by the President or head of any Executive Department or other person entitled to the franking privilege when the law was passed abolishing the same. And the postage on no single volume of a public document shall exceed the sum of twenty-five cents; and the same, if not prepaid, shall be payable by the person to whom the same may be directed and received; and the words "Public Document," written or printed on the envelope containing any public document and subscribed by the member or other person mailing the same, shall be deemed a sufficient certificate that the same is a public document; and the term "public document" shall be deemed to include all publications printed by order of Congress or either House thereof or of any Department of the Government. And if any such document shall not be taken from the post-office to which the same shall be directed within thirty days after being received thereat, the postmaster may sell the same for the amount of postage due thereon, and shall account to the Post-Office Department for the proceeds thereof: Provided, That this shall apply only to documents ordered to be printed previous to the passage of this act.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont for the reason that it diminishes the evil of this amendment. The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] absent at this moment, said by accident or design that I had made an argument which if it proves anything proves that the franking privilege ought not to have been abolished. If the Senator from Indiana heard me make such an argument as that, it shows at least keenness in his ears. If he was able to extract from anything I said an argument like that, it shows what an enormous capacity of mental digestion belongs to that Senator. As I see he is now present in the Chamber, I beg to say to him that I have made no argument in favor of restoring the franking privilege, and no argument against the wisdom of its abolition. I had been voting for the abolition of the franking privilege in Congress about thirteen years at the time when its abolition took place, and certainly I am not in a mood to make an argument against all the votes on the subject which I ever gave.

I said, however, and I repeat, that the promise held out to us in the abolition of the franking privilege had not been kept, because the book-making, and book-binding, and book-publishing still went on; and I think the Senator from Indiana must have heard very much awry what I said if from that he could suppose that I was, under cover or openly, making an assault upon the abolition of the franking privilege.

Now, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, and approved as I understand by the Senator from Indiana, is the first step paving the way to the restoration of the franking privilege. Unless it be restricted as the Senator from Vermont proposes to documents already in existence; if it is to go on as an allurement, a justification, an implication, that we are to print more documents hereafter, then I say to the Senator from Indiana that if he and I live for a short time we shall see that we have put our hand between the belt and the wheel, and we shall be drawn in from one step to another until in large part or wholly the franking privilege will be restored. By as much as the amendment of the Senator from Vermont makes it take hold of documents which are already printed and stop there, I say it is a good thing and I shall vote for it. By as much as it is made to go further than that, it is an implication by the vote of the Senator from Indiana and my vote if I vote for it and that of every other Senator who approves it, that we intend that book-making shall proceed hereafter, because such a provision will be very idle unless we are to furnish the books to be carried under the arrangement made.

Mr. President, I say again that I make no argument in favor of the franking privilege at this time. I make no argument against our act in which I have had my full responsibility as the Senator from Indiana says, of abolishing that so-called privilege. I simply contend that we shall adhere to it while the abolition continues, and that we shall not be incessantly frustrating it and acting against the policy which underlies that legislation by feeding out books and feeding out documents in extra numbers to be carried in some way or other through the mail.

Mr. MORTON. I did not intend to misrepresent the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator did misrepresent me, although I suppose he did not intend it.

Mr. MORTON. I did not intend it. The Senator made an argument here to prove the hardship and injustice of requiring members of Congress to pay their postage, and showed what a large sum it amounted to, that it substantially reduced our salary to $3,500 a year, all of which I thought in my simplicity went to prove that the franking privilege ought not to have been abolished. I may have been wrong, but I supposed it proved that if it proved anything.

Mr. President, I do not think that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is in the line of restoring the franking privilege. It is not proposing to send matter through the mails free, but simply to change the place of payment. Sometimes documents will be sent that will not be taken out. I have no doubt of that, but I think that will not occur very often, especially where men write to you for them, and members of Congress know their people so well that they will not be very apt to send valuable books to persons who do not want them or who are not liberal enough to take them out of the post-office by paying the postage. I think I shall make very few mistakes of that kind. That is not restoring the franking privilege or even approaching it. It is simply to allow our constituents who want the books to pay for them. That is all.

It is only a few years ago that the postage on all letters was paid by those who received them. I believe the reform requiring the prepayment of postage on letters is not much more than twenty or twenty-five years old, perhaps not that old; and yet when letters were to be paid at the other end of the line, that was not called the franking privilege, and it was not the franking privilege any more than this would be to allow public documents to be paid for at the other end of the line.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Can the Senator and I differ about a proposition so simple as this? Was it not one great part of the alleged abuse of the franking privilege that books were published and printed and bound by the Government to be sent out? And if so, is it not a perpetuation of that abuse if we provide for sending such public documents through the mail without prepayment of postage, to be received by those to whom they are directed, for postage merely? Is not such a provision an absurdity for the future unless you presuppose that the books are still to be printed and go out?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Besides that, if my honorable friend will allow me to say a word, they are to go out at very much reduced rates. They are to be a favored class of documents because they are our documents.

Mr. CONKLING. Precisely. In other words, we are to print them for nothing; we are to receive nothing in return; then we are to cheat the mail of the postage in part by imposing a specially reduced rate upon them; and then the recipients of these books are to receive their postal matter at that reduced rate as a favored class when neither the orphan nor the widow can write about a pension without paying full postage rates; and yet my honorable friend from Indiana says that there is nothing in all that, as I understand him, which is inconsistent with the doctrine upon which we undertook to cut up the frankling privilege root and branch, with all its variations and modern improvements of seeds, books, and public documents.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the whole substance of that argument amounts to just this: that if we provide for sending books through the mails, the postage to be paid by those who get them, we therefore provide a temptation for ourselves by which we shall be tempted to vote for the publication of a great many books and documents that otherwise we would not. If we carried that principle a little further, it would interfere very materially with everything we do here if we are to guard against temptations to ourselves; the business of book-making will go on, and to a certain extent it ought to go on, because there are certain books published here that if not published here would be published nowhere, that are valuable to the whole country, and that the people in every part of the nation want to get. I think Congress can be trusted as having some little discretion, some sense in regard to the character, the quality, and the quantity of the books that may be published; and because we provide that our constituents may pay postage on those books it is said that therefore we give way to a temptation for the publication of books we ought not to publish. As far as that is concerned I think there is not very much force in it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I do not say that this is an insidious attempt, for I know better than that. The Senator who introduces the proposition has no method of that kind in his treatment of public affairs; but I say that the tendency of this movement is to reintroduce the franking privilege; and accompanied by the sentiments uttered on the floor this afternoon I do not doubt and I insist upon it that it is an absolute shame and it ought to shame every man of us to talk about a restoration of the franking privilege in any sense whatever, directly or indirectly. It became a public scandal, and every soul of us here was arraigned throughout the country as participators in it; and this arm of mine will drop from its socket before I give a vote at any time, unless I am instructed by my people directly, to restore that privilege, in whole or in part, in any sense whatever.

I voted for its repeal against my judgment, but it was the judgment of the people that it was an abuse, and when my honorable friend from Indiana asks can we not be trusted, I say no; we were not trusted. No matter how honest we were, we were abused throughout the length and breadth of the land, and the country believed we were guilty of an abuse of this privilege. Did we not put it into our party platforms, did it not go into the platforms of both parties that this practice was a great public abuse? Were we not arraigned everywhere by the press and by local communities? And now we on our knees are to creep back little by little, twenty-five cents to be paid for a document that cannot be carried on the principle that the poor man has his message carried, for less than $2. What is the justification of that? Twenty-five cents for a document that according to this service will cost $2, and then next year we shall have to vote out of the people's Treasury six millions to pay the deficiency! Sir, all I have to say about that whenever that proposition is put to me directly or indirectly is, thy servant is not a dog and he will not do this thing.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to make a confession. I wish that I could give a vote to-day that would annul the vote I gave last year in reference to the franking privilege. Foolishly I made a speech at one time favoring its abolishment. Using the idea of the Senator from Maine, I would prefer that my arm should leave its socket rather than I should give a vote to abolish the franking privilege, and there are a good many who will say the same thing when they think of it. I believe that it is necessary for a republican government to have a distribution of intelligence as well as a distribution of power, and I believe that since the abolishment of the franking privilege the people of this country have not communicated with their representatives, that they have withheld their requests, their requirements, their desires, their interests, their opinions, and their views upon public questions growing out of this abolishment. I know there has been no saving to the Government in any respect. There has been no system better than there was before inaugurated in the Post-Office Department. The mere abuse which grew out of matters in relation to the political parties and political questions was nominally nothing in comparison with the cessation of the diffusion of intelligence and free communication between the people and their representatives in a republican government.

We are different or ought to be different in every respect from a government which assumes to be of a different class and character from ourselves. We need the strengthening influences of the people; we need their views; we need their opinions; we need their desires to be made known to us upon all occasions without any check or interference. If I had a vote to give to-day or a hundred votes, I would give them all for the resuscitation of that law whereby every member of Congress and Senator might have the privilege of sending under his frank anything in the way of communications and of receiving them from his constituents.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I am one of those who voted for the repeal of the franking privilege, and like my friend from Maine I voted against my judgment. I had not the slightest idea that there would be any saving to the Post-Office Department or any saving to the Government by the repeal of that privilege. Notwithstanding that I am not in favor of restoring the privilege, especially that part of it which was personal to members of Congress. I am not in favor of restoring any privilege that shall carry private correspondence through the mails; but at the same time I am more opposed to the new franking privilege than I was to the old.

Under the system as it now exists, whereas there were seven heads of Departments who had the franking privilege on official correspondence, there are now more than forty thousand officers of this Government who have official stamps and can use them with the official envelopes just as they please, and there is forty times the danger of abuse under this new franking privilege that there was under the old. Under the old there were about four hundred men, including members of Congress, who had the franking privilege. Now we appropriate $2,000,000 annually, or we did last year, to print and furnish official stamps to the heads of Departments. They distribute them to the different officers connected with those Departments throughout the length and breadth of this country. The Post-Office Department, which furnishes the greatest number, furnishes to 35,317 officers these official stamps; and I have myself seen in the hands of a single official of that Department $1,600 worth of official stamps for distribution among the subordinates. You may tell me that these men are more honest. I admit that they are just as honest as members of Congress; but their number is multiplied by thousands, and if they have not already they will ultimately abuse this privilege and use these stamps for private correspondence. I am told they are doing it now to some extent.

Mr. RAMSEY. Does not the Senator know that all these parties had the official frank before?

Mr. CRAGIN. I know that none of them had it before except the heads of Departments. The heads of Departments and Bureaus could frank official correspondence, and people all over this country could write to them under that privilege; but your more than thirty-three thousand postmasters had not the franking privilege. Your route agents, your special agents, your mail agents of all kinds had not this privilege. They could write to the head of the Department or the head of the Bureau on official business, because they had the franking privilege; but now all they have to do is to pull out of their pocket an official stamp and send it on a letter to anybody they see fit. Look at your revenue officers; look at your collectors of internal revenue and your deputy collectors of internal revenue; they have their pockets filled with official stamps, and they use them on all official correspondence. If they write to a postmaster inquiring if A B is selling liquor or tobacco, they use an official stamp and send one to their correspondent to pay the return postage. This is the new franking privilege that I complain of, and that in the end will raise a storm in this country a thousand times more fierce than the old franking privilege.

Mr. RAMSEY. Here is another repentant sinner like the Senator from New York. [Laughter.] He also voted for the repeal of the franking privilege, and he laments it now.

Mr. CRAGIN. I do not lament it so far as members of Congress are concerned. I would restore it to the heads of Departments, and that is as far as I would go.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator says that these parties that he has named had not the franking privilege. They all had the authority to communicate with their official head here on official business without paying postage.

Mr. CRAGIN. Now they have authority to communicate free by using official stamps.

Mr. RAMSEY. Now they put on the stamps; and you limit the amount of that correspondence by the amount of stamps you allow them to have. Before there was no limit at all. You give them so many stamps now, and they cannot exceed the number you allow.

Mr. CRAGIN. I ask the Senator if a deputy collector of internal revenue could write to the postmaster in my own town or any town under the old franking privilege without paying postage? Now he puts on an official stamp if he writes inquiring whether any man is violating the revenue laws in the town.

Mr. RAMSEY. But does not the Senator admit that he must put on an official stamp?

Mr. CRAGIN. Certainly. And can he not put it on a letter written to me or you without anybody knowing it?

Mr. RAMSEY. It would be a violation of law.

Mr. CRAGIN. So it was a violation of law for a member of Congress to allow A B and C D to use his frank.

Mr. RAMSEY. But A B and C D could write ten thousand times a day and put on a frank; but here the officers are limited to the amount of stamps they receive.

Mr. CRAGIN. Early in this session I introduced a resolution in the Senate calling upon the heads of the different Departments to give us a statement of the number of officers in those Departments who were furnished with official stamps. I hold in my hand the letter of the Postmaster-General in answer, and I will read simply the enumeration of the men who are furnished with these official stamps by that one Department:

Postmaster-General	1
Assistant Postmasters-General	3
Assistant Attorney-General for Post-Office Department	1
Superintendent of foreign mails	1
Superintendent of money-order system	1
Chief clerk of Department	1
Chief of division of mail depredations	1
Postage-stamp agent at New York	1
Postal-card agent at Springfield, Massachusetts	1
Special agents	73
Railway post-office head clerks	343
Route agents	917
Mail-route messengers	193
Postmasters	33,780
Total	35,317

Thirty-five thousand three hundred and seventeen officers connected with the Post-Office Department are supplied with official stamps paid for out of the Treasury of the United States, and this is your great reform! So follow it through all the other Departments. Every revenue officer is furnished with these stamps, Navy officers, Army officers, Indian superintendents, and all the officers connected with the various Departments are furnished with these stamps.

I admit, Mr. President, that up to this time there has been very little fraud practiced, in my judgment; but if this system continues it will certainly grow into fraud. It cannot help it. Human nature is the same now that it ever was and always will be. To show you the beauty of this new system, let me state one fact within my knowledge. A short time ago a correspondent of mine sent to your Treasury Department and requested that a bundle of papers which he had left there might be sent to me for safe-keeping. The Treasury Department forwarded them to me from the Treasury to this Capitol, and the official postage-stamps amounted to seventy-two cents. Seventy-two cents on a package of papers sent from the Treasury Department to the Senate Chamber! They might have hired a boy to do it for fifteen cents, or have put it in the charge of an express for less than twenty-five cents. This is a specimen of your reform.

I wish to say here and say distinctly that I am unalterably opposed to the restoration of the franking privilege to members of Congress for the sending of private correspondence or of speeches or of any campaign documents; but I am in favor of restoring it to the heads of the Departments for the purpose of transmitting official correspondence through the mails. We appropriated last year $2,000,000 out of the Treasury to pay for these official stamps. In other words, as was said by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] we took so much money out of one pocket and put it into the other. The receipts of the Post-Office Department are swelled by that amount, or nearly, for it costs something to print these stamps, something for the paper, something for the engraving, something for the clerks to put them on, and so much is absolutely lost, except that before the franking privilege was a burden and required somebody to attend to it. I admit that there were abuses under the franking privilege, and I am not sorry that the thing was broken up; but I do believe the time will come when this official-stamp business will be abolished, and when the heads of Departments will be authorized to send official correspondence through the mails free and to receive answers. So much in my judgment should be done.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As the Senator from New Hampshire has been talking about the abuses of official stamps, I wish to call his attention to a statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. LEWIS] the other day, that the stamps now furnished are used for political purposes, and that the parties now having a right to use official stamps are using them not on the official business exclusively, but are using them for political purposes.

Mr. CONKLING. Who said that?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Virginia, [Mr. LEWIS,] who has now in his possession documents of a political character exclusively, received with the Government stamp upon them. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to that.

Mr. CRAGIN. I stated that I believed very little fraud up to this time had been practiced under the use of these stamps. I have no personal knowledge of the facts stated by the Senator from Delaware. I only intimated that in my judgment this system was liable to fraud and much more liable to it than the old system, because it is in the hands of forty thousand men, whereas before it was in the hands of a very few hundred.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from New Jersey give way for a moment? I made a statement the other day during the course of a speech of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCORN] when he said these stamps were being sent out; I wish now to correct the statement in part that I made then. I then said they were post-office stamps. I should have said that they were revenue-stamps, sent out from the office at Lynchburgh, and I have a number of them in my possession still in my room. Some of them I have lost. They were sent out covering electioneering documents in the last gubernatorial canvass in Virginia.

Mr. CONKLING. Stamps emitted by which Department?

Mr. LEWIS. By the revenue department at Lynchburgh.

Mr. WEST. How could a revenue-stamp carry a document through the mail?

Mr. LEWIS. I cannot tell you; but one came to me, and afterward a number to officials. I have them in my possession.

Mr. WEST. That must be a mistake. A revenue-stamp will not carry anything through the mail.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Louisiana wishes to see them I will bring them up in the morning. They came through the mails to me and to others marked "official business," when there was no official business in them.

Mr. CONKLING. May I understand the Senator now? Does he mean that the stamp he saw upon those documents was a revenue-stamp so called, or does he mean that it was a postage-stamp issued to the Revenue or Treasury Department?

Mr. LEWIS. That was the character of the stamp.

Mr. WEST. The Postal Department does not issue any stamps to the Revenue Department.

Mr. LEWIS. I said most distinctly that they were not post-office stamps, but stamps issued to the Revenue Department, and sent out by the secretary of a political organization at Lynchburgh.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] said that whatever was the design of this measure, its effect was to reintroduce the franking privilege. There is just where I differ from him. If I wanted to restore the franking privilege to the country, I would make every possible inconvenience to grow out of it: I would make everybody dissatisfied with the abolition of that franking privilege. Then it might be restored, and that is the policy which is adopted if we refuse to afford any facility for the distribution of public documents. The franking privilege being abolished will create little inconvenience to the country if you adopt this measure, and there will be no disposition to restore it. The people of the country will find that by paying a moderate and fair postage they can receive the publications of the Government. The idea that the effect of this measure is to continue book-making and book-publishing, I think is very far-fetched. Does anybody expect that this Government is going to give up book-making and book-publishing? Are not the reports of our Treasury Department, and Agricultural Department, and the messages of the President to be disseminated among the people; and must they not be printed?

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not prevail, for after this measure expires as it would by his limitation with the circulation of the documents already ordered, this whole subject is again revived, and then there is a cry, "Give us the franking privilege." Let us have done with the franking privilege; but to accomplish that we must have some convenient mode for distributing these public documents. The idea of the Senator from Maine that we ought to charge the people of this country $2 a volume to get information as to what is being done in their Government seems to me so far-fetched, so extreme, that it can hardly meet his own approval and judgment.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President, this earnest debate must contemplate something, but I can scarcely arrive at the point. Surely it does, particularly when we look around and see from whence it arises. In the first place the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance introduces an amendment. Directly thereafter a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee introduces one. Previously—perhaps I am going too fast—my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections introduced one.

Mr. MORTON. That was a good while ago.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Yes; I put you wrong; you came early. On my extreme left the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. ROBERTSON] introduces one. Now, what do they all tend to? What is contemplated? Is there any dissatisfaction abroad? This is a post-office appropriation bill which is before the Senate, and on it properly arises this vexed question of the franking privilege. We see that in its various shades here. We see distinguished Senators coming up and acknowledging candidly that they voted for the repeal but recently and they confess their error. I voted for that repeal. I voted for it understandingly, and at the time announced clearly and distinctly that we would get in just the difficulty that now surrounds us. I recollect telling my distinguished friend from New York that the voice of this mighty people would uprise and demand the restoration of it just as readily as the citizens of the great city of New York that he represents so ably would cry out for water if the Croton River was cut off from them. The people of this mighty nation require information, and they will have it.

I may be told and I am told sincerely, and it is thus understood by the distinguished Senators introducing the amendments, that they are candid and that the measures they propose do not tend to a restoration of the franking privilege. I cannot understand them so, and yet it is so understood by them. Really the most candid amendment that is proposed here is by my friend from South Carolina. There can can be no caviling upon his proposition. It is one thing; it is not the one or the other. There is no intermediate proposition in it. It is simply a restoration of the franking privilege, and I assure you that I have no hesitancy in saying that at no distant day that will prevail. It may not be ripened now, but we see the dissatisfaction there is abroad generally, and the question will be canvassed here until it will cost the United States large amounts of money regularly every session until it is done.

But, Mr. President, there is an idea that I want to keep in line with, and that is consistency. The Post-Office Department is one great arm of this mighty nation; millions are contemplated in that branch of the Government. It is necessary to systematize it. In the absence of system it would ingulf this nation in bankruptcy. It has been the object of the Postmaster-General, the able head of this branch of the Government, to systematize it. He has labored hard to do it, and, I think, well has he performed the duty; and that system as adopted up to this time requires the prepayment of postage, and I think it ought to be strictly adhered to until it is proven conclusively that it is working wrong; and whenever that is apparent, the sense of the Government through its representatives will demand a change, and then it may be made. Until that shall be, I am directly opposed to any inroads being made upon it, any qualifications in any way, manner, or shape to the very smallest or the very largest volume of letter, paper, or what not. Let prepayment prevail, and then it will all be simple and move on harmoniously; and that is just what is not now being proposed. Postage prepayment is required in almost every instance; and yet a qualification comes in here, and how long will it be before another one will be presented, and then this precedent used, and the next will prevail, and thus we shall go on from time to time.

I for one shall vote against every one of these amendments; but if the Senate are now ready to come back to where they originally were and where they would have remained but for the cry from the people, as it was said, broadcast through the country demanding a repeal of the privilege, be it so. It never was any privilege, as has been well said by Senators right and left. I for one will stand by the present programme clearly and conclusively; but if the Senate is ready, I would be ready to accept the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina and restore the privilege in full, in toto, without equivocation; but until that time comes I am opposed to all these amendments that make inroads upon the present system.

Mr. CONKLING. Some uncertainty has arisen about a matter which I ask unanimous consent to correct in this bill, which I can do in a moment. We have had in one bill, and I think in two, a provision obviating the necessity of printing in the newspapers officially all the revised statutes of the United States, the codification of the laws. Precisely what has become of that provision in the one or two instances in which it has been introduced, where it has been lost between the two Houses, after a somewhat diligent search several of us are unable to learn, and therefore I ask, although there is an amendment pending, to be allowed to move an amendment which I will read, as an additional section to this bill:

SEC. —. That the revised statutes of the United States shall not be published by the Secretary of State in newspapers, anything in existing laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

I am told that it will cost about half a million dollars to print these laws in newspapers. This amendment is simply to obviate the necessity which might otherwise rest upon the Secretary of State, to hand over this great body of laws to be printed in the newspapers.

Mr. SARGENT. I think all laws requiring the publication of the statutes in the newspapers are repealed. That is my impression.

Mr. CONKLING. That was my impression; but I have received a communication from the executive department to-day saying that no such thing has come to the President to sign; they have been looking at the bills, and if it appears anywhere in a bill to which both Houses have agreed, it has passed the finding out of two or three persons.

Mr. SARGENT. By a law of the last Congress I think—the Senator will find it in the statutes, or I think I can find it for him—that was done. I have no objection to the amendment; but I think the repeal was attached to an appropriation bill during the last Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS.) Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it will be considered as agreed to. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to that of the Senator from New Jersey. When I offered the proposition originally to allow the postage on public documents to be collected at the other end of the line, I did not suppose it would raise the question of the restoration of the franking privilege. For many years I voted for the repeal of the franking privilege, and I certainly would not vote to restore it under any circumstances whatever. The people of the United States believed that that was a personal privilege to members of Congress, a right to send their letters free of postage, to whatever subject they might relate, to anybody they chose, giving the same right to them to receive all letters free, whatever might be their contents. That was a personal privilege that I was very glad to see abolished. But to call this a restoration of the franking privilege, as the Senator from New York did, seems to me is a denial of the truth. What is this? I have now in the document-rooms perhaps one thousand volumes of public documents printed at the public expense. They are nothing to me. I do not want them. I have all of them that I desire. What shall I do with them? The duty imposed upon me is to send them to my constituents. I am trying to do it. I send them at my expense or at the expense of somebody through the express to the persons who need them or to anybody who desires them. Still I have great quantities of them, and perhaps one thousand volumes of these books now lie subject to my order in the vaults of this Capitol building. It will take half of my salary to send them, and I will not do it. Senators around me while this debate has been going on have said to me that they did not know what to do with their public documents. I introduced a proposition under these circumstances, to do what? To restore to myself a personal privilege? To restore to myself the right to frank documents and books and papers to whom I chose, for my own benefit or advantage? Not at all; but a simple proposition that my certificate upon the back of a public document printed at the public expense should carry that document precisely like newspapers, pamphlets, and gazettes have heretofore been carried to the people, subject to the payment of the postage at the other end of the line. Is that the restoration of the franking privilege? Not at all. It is no privilege to anybody. It is a privilege that every citizen of the United States of America this day possesses on every printed newspaper, on every printed pamphlet, on every printed book, on every printed document that can be imagined; and the law to-day is that any newspaper, any book, except obscene books, any paper or pamphlet can be sent through the mail by the editor or the publisher or the maker of that book to be delivered at the other end of the line on payment of the postage there.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is mistaken. Nothing but newspapers can be sent without prepayment, and then only to a subscriber.

Mr. SHERMAN. They constitute the great mass of the matter. Some one here said that 76 per cent. of mail matter was newspapers and pamphlets. Three-fourths of the whole mail matter of the United States are now carried to be delivered to subscribers in remote places, the postage being paid at the place of delivery. How ridiculous it is to say that this is a restoration of the franking privilege. Nobody gets this mail matter free of postage; every one who receives it has to pay the postage on it, but simply my certificate carries a document to the man who has to pay the postage, and all the privilege I have is to designate the man who is to receive it. It is no privilege whatever. What will you do if you do not adopt this proposition or some means of distributing these public documents? One of two things must inevitably occur: either you must stop the publication of all information by Congress, stop the publication of all books whatever, however important it may be to carry that information to the people, or you must accumulate them in this Capitol building mountain-high, because there is not one Senator of the seventy-three here to-day who will send out the documents at his expense to the people. He cannot afford it. You have either got to abandon the publication of all documents, or you have got to carry them through your mails in some way and deliver them to the people.

I say that this proposition is a fair one. It simply carries these documents, like newspapers are carried to-day, to the men to whom they are directed, requiring them to pay the postage, or if they fail to do it, they are to be sold at not less than the postage. I have one objection to the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey, that he makes a discrimination in favor of public documents, that he requires them to be carried at a less rate than other printed matter is carried. In my judgment they ought to bear the legal rate of postage, no more and no less.

As to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, that is a privilege in favor of ourselves. We are willing to provide for the distribution of our documents, but we are not willing to provide for the distribution of the documents of our successors.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the Senator will allow me to explain, I think he rather misinterprets my purpose. These documents have been previously ordered to be printed by Congress. Being on hand, rather than throw them away I would allow them to go at this low rate of postage; but I am utterly opposed to printing any more for distribution.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is half true. That is to say about one-half of these documents were ordered to be printed before the 1st of July last, before the repeal of the franking privilege took effect.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Nearly all, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. A great many have been ordered to be published under laws, and every day the question is presented to us. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] has reported resolutions I think to print documents without number, and we have kept him back simply because there was no law providing for their distribution. To-day while this bill has been pending he has introduced a resolution to print five thousand copies of a single book contained in two volumes, or ten thousand copies, to be sent to whom?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Not for our distribution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; the report of the Select Committee on Transportation, the report of a committee of this body, to be distributed by members of Congress. You must meet this question. You must either stop the printing of all public documents or you must provide some way of carrying them through the mails. As it is now the Post-Office Department gets no benefit from printing these documents; they do not get any postage whatever upon them, because they are sent usually by express. The repeal of the franking privilege was a great blessing to the different express companies in the land, but the Post-Office Department does not get any revenue from it. Nobody is foolish enough to pay the Post-Office Department twice or three times the cost of carrying this mail matter by express. As I stated the other day, the Postmaster-General under the law charges for transporting a single copy of the Globe of the last session of Congress from this place to the State of Ohio $2.40, while Adams' Express freely delivers it to anybody for a quarter-dollar a volume. The result is that books published at the public expense, printed by the Government, paid for by the people, cannot be transported through the public mails, but they are freely transported through private express companies and delivered to the people at a little more than one-third the cost of carrying them through the mails.

There is no connection between this subject-matter and the franking privilege. I beg Senators not to take the shadow of an unpopular name—the franking privilege—and cast it upon that which provides for some mode of distributing public documents. If this is voted down, then the next question comes up directly we must print no more books at the public expense; we must not convey to the people knowledge of what we do; no information will be conveyed to them except that which is contained in the daily papers. It seems to me that some such provision as that now pending ought to be adopted. When I offered the proposition I had no conception of raising the ghost of the franking privilege.

One other consideration. Just as sure as fate, unless you provide some mode of distributing these public documents, the franking privilege will be restored; the people will demand it. They will have these documents; they will have some means of obtaining information of what is going on here more than is obtained by them through the daily prints; and they ought to have it. The defeat of this proposition, which will give them the advantage of the public documents at the mere cost of postage, will unquestionably lead to the restoration in some form of the franking privilege, and that I do not desire.

Since this matter has been pending Senators have intimated to me that they intended to vote for this proposition as a means of preventing the restoration of the franking privilege, and no doubt that is the logical shape of the question. If you do not provide some mode of distributing these documents it will lead to a restoration in a qualified form of the franking privilege. By this mode the Post-Office Department will carry these documents to the people to whom they are addressed by members of Congress, the Post Office Department will get the benefit of the revenue derived from transporting these documents; otherwise this revenue will go to the express companies, until finally, on account of the difficulty of distributing them, we shall cease all publications and leave all this mass of matter dead, without the ability on the part of any one to get these documents.

The other day the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] tried to pass a bill which authorized the distribution of the public documents to be paid for by the people, and that was defeated by being loaded down with a proposition to carry these documents free through the mail, and so it will be again. I shall therefore vote for the pending proposition without hesitation.

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me this proposition of the Senator from Ohio is simply an expedient for clearing out the crowded rooms in the basement of the Capitol of the large accumulation of printed matter that is there. Now, shall we do this, and thrust these documents upon an unwilling people? We are within two weeks of the expiration of the first year of the abolition of the franking privilege, and we find ourselves skirmishing around this question of the restoration of the franking privilege; for all these subterfuges or expedients are nothing more than an attempt to anticipate this question of the restoration of the franking privilege, and we may as well view them in that light.

I do not care what you call it; whether it was a surrender of judgment to a storm of popular prejudice, or a yielding to the will of our constituents, or cowardice, or whatever it was, in response to that demand which came pouring in upon us through the Postmaster-General's Department we did abolish the franking privilege. The people told us they did not want documents at public expense; and now, before the expiration of a year, we are called upon to send them out to them; they must take them nolens volens; and the argument is even made by the Senator from Ohio that there will be a great dearth of intellectual light among the people if we do not get out among them the very thing they told us they did not want us to send them. We responded to their demand a year ago and said, "You shall no longer be burdened with receiving documents with our frank which you do not appreciate and which you do not care about."

Now, sir, I am for taking the people at their word. The law has been in operation nearly a year. Has there been a petition laid on our table from any quarter, from Maine to Texas, asking us that we again send the people public documents at public expense, or at their own expense? Has there been one? I say that until the people again move in this matter I shall stand exactly where we put ourselves by the abolition of the franking privilege; I will impose no more documents upon them, and I will continue to pay my postage and theirs too when they write to me, for I have a great deal more of theirs to pay than I have of my own. It generally takes about three times as much to send an answer back with three or four inclosures as they pay to get a request to me. I shall vote to continue the law in that condition until we have some evidence of a change of that public sentiment in response to which the franking privilege, or burden, or whatever it was, was abolished. I shall vote against all attempts to get around the abolition of the privilege; all attempts to approach it by insidious means, and for staying exactly where we are until public sentiment tells us that the people do not like this system that we have adopted in response to their former demands.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Mr. President, I frequently lose my patience when I speak on this subject, but I am always amused when I hear others speak upon it. I do not know anything more delightful than to sit here and hear the confession of faith and of sin, mutual and reciprocal, on the part of those Senators who voted to abolish the franking privilege. It is rich beyond comparison.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] is not going to send the people any documents until the people demand a change of the present system. Let us introduce a section in this bill directing the Postmaster-General to send out circulars to every postmaster of the United States, and solicit the people to send in petitions to restore the franking privilege, and we shall get an expression of public sentiment by the next session that will be perfectly astounding.

Mr. SHERMAN. They will have to pay the postage on them.

Mr. CARPENTER. No; we can provide by law that these circulars shall be franked as the others were. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] suggests that official stamps will do just as well.

I went home to Wisconsin just after we had abolished the franking privilege last year, and I met a man of exceeding good sense on all things. He wanted to know what on earth we meant by abolishing the franking privilege. I said I thought the people demanded it. Said he, "What made you think so?" I rejoined: "If you could see the petitions that were piled upon the Secretary's desk every morning hour of the session you would think they were demanding it." Said he, "How many do you suppose there were in all petitioning for the abolition of the franking privilege?" I replied: "I do not know; perhaps a million, or two millions." "Very well," said he; "did you hear anything from the other thirty-eight millions?" I call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania to that point.

Mr. SCOTT. But the one or two million were all voters.

Mr. CARPENTER. We have got five million of voters. The three million did not say anything about it. The presumption is, as they were teased and coaxed and seduced by the postmasters to sign these petitions and yet held their peace, they did not want the franking privilege abolished. Is not that the fair and logical inference?

I congratulate my friend from Ohio for having attempted by what my friend from Pennsylvania calls a subterfuge to undermine that abolition. I go for all subterfuges in that direction. I go for every measure which is a fraud on that act. I go for every proposition made by anybody here to override it. I go in a word for what I believe to be a sound principle, that the people of this country have a right to be furnished with information as to what is being done in these two Houses of Congress and in the Executive Departments of the Government.

What is the meaning of what we have heard from childhood, that free institutions are based only on intelligence, if we who for the time being and to the extent of our jurisdiction are guardians of those institutions suppress all original information? And yet the Senator from Vermont says that was the only reform that was accomplished by the abolition of the franking privilege, and he wants to choke the matter down still closer and hold it so that Congress shall publish no account of its proceedings.

I want to know what would be the effect upon our institutions of Congress sitting here as a secret conclave? If this doctrine is sound, why not go a step further and sit here, as the Senate in the early days of the Republic used to do, with closed doors? Then the people could not find out why we did things. They might see what we did, because they would see the laws that were passed, but they would know nothing about the reasons for them. What would be the effect of such a proceeding upon Congress to-day? Is there a Senator here who would vote to sit in legislative business with closed doors? How long would the Senate maintain its standing with the people if that were done? We all know not a month. It would become from the very fact that it was a secret institution a suspected institution.

Now, is it not in the same direction, though not as far, to say that you will not publish and distribute any information as to what you do? Every proposition here to cut off the means which the people have enjoyed of informing themselves about the nature of our proceedings is in the direction of closing our doors. If this be sound in principle, closing our doors is only a little sounder, because it insures greater secrecy.

The Senator from Ohio says also that he sends his documents by express. I stated the other day that I did so, and I was brought up by my friend from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who informed me it was a criminal offense to do it. I shall offer an amendment to this bill when it comes to the proper time, and I ask this as a great favor, appreciating how improper it is for a Senator to offer any proposition which is in his favor, in these words:

That any member of Congress may send public documents printed by order of either House of Congress, or of any Department of the Government, to any of his constituents by express or otherwise outside the mail.

I do not want to go to the State's prison for doing that thing, and my friend from Vermont says I am liable to be imprisoned for what I have done, because these documents as they are put up are sealed packages of printed matter and cannot be sent outside of the mails. I have not had time to examine the post-office laws; I do not know whether he is right or wrong; but I do want to make the thing clear hereafter. I have sent off packages enough by express to keep me in jail longer than I have been in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, what are we complaining about? Did we not know just as well a year and a half ago when we abolished the franking privilege that the Postmaster-General had sent out circulars to the people in favor of its abolition, and that these came back here signed? Did we not know just as well when we took that step as we do now the source from which those petitions emanated, and under what influence they were signed? It does seem to me, if we were controlled in our actions by those petitions at that time, and the Senator from Wisconsin admits we were, that we should not now complain of it. If it was not manly to be so controlled in our action, we should not have been so controlled.

Sir, I think that the demand which was made upon Congress at that time by the people for the abolition of the franking privilege was intended by them, and that those who did petition Congress represented a great many others who did not sign their names to those petitions. Whether the public were wise or otherwise in this matter, I have no doubt there was a general sentiment among the people of the country that we were doing some very enormous things under the cover of the franking privilege; that we were sending old boots and shirts and articles of furniture through the mails free, and they supposed other absurd things with reference to the abolition of the franking privilege. They had been taught that this was so month after month by the opponents of the franking privilege; not by the Postmaster-General, for I do not know that he ever made any misrepresentations about it, but by some members of the press, either designedly falsifying the facts or being themselves uninformed, and consequently an opinion had grown up in the country and prevails yet that the franking privilege was a great abuse and ought to be abolished. I have no doubt that when our convention met in Philadelphia—I speak now of the republican, and I believe the other convention passed a similar resolution—and resolved that the abolishment of the franking privilege was a reform that Congress ought to enact, they really spoke for their constituents, and that their action bound us.

I do not feel like complaining at this day that we followed the requests made to us regularly or irregularly by the people. I do not sympathize at all with my friend from Wisconsin when he gets up here and complains that we were whipped by unfair means into performing an unpalatable job. We did it, and let us stand by it. Let us stand by it long enough at any rate to give it a fair trial.

I insist that there have been some advantages in the repeal of the franking privilege, not perhaps in cheapening the carrying of the mails, but in cutting off a large amount of useless printing, for a great deal of the printing which we do is useless, is not interesting to the people. The extra documents which we send out are, nine out of ten, without any interest to them. I do not believe they would pay for the postage on them under the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. The amount saved of printing of this kind during the present Congress has been more than the cost of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that is hundreds of thousands of dollars, and more than the cost of the printing of the Congressional Globe heretofore has been. We have had printed all we desired for the use of Congress, all the ordinary documents, all the reports that come in, everything which gives us information; and we have had quite a large number of volumes of a more interesting character for distribution by the Departments or by ourselves where we desired to do so. Everything that seemed to be valuable and necessary to get to the people we certainly have printed; but we have cut off the extra printing of dull, prosy documents, of columns of figures which nobody cares for, except to know that they are in existence and by some exertion he can get at them, which are seldom referred to, and when referred to are valuable provided they are kept in the Library of Congress or in the document-room and are accessible; but for popular reading among the people they are of no account whatever. This class of printing we have cut off very largely under the abolition of the franking privilege.

Furthermore, we have cut down the cost of carrying the mails under the amendment which we adopted to the postal code last year which provided that the amount of compensation should be regulated according to the amount of weight carried by railroads. If you now restore the franking privilege and cast upon the mails the enormous bulk of matter which used to go free before, you necessarily lift up the cost according to the amount which you may print, and you necessarily incur furthermore the greater expense of running your Public Printing Office.

These are advantages not so great as those which were predicted would follow from the abolition of the franking privilege, but they are advantages of great importance. We save in both directions. We probably have saved to the Treasury by means of the abolition of the franking privilege in these two respects about a million and a quarter of dollars. It seems to me that is a reform which is worth the change of the law we made.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SARGENT. In one moment. I know it is inconvenient to Senators to be compelled to pay postage on all their correspondence. It is very inconvenient to myself to answer at my own expense somewhere from a dozen to twenty letters every day upon matters which do not interest me a bit, written on public business or business of my constituents; my own letters perhaps not averaging one a day on my family affairs or my own private business, while I must write fifteen or twenty relating to my constituents. I think this is an unjust tax upon me, and I would cheerfully vote for a provision which would place an amount of official stamps at the control of members of Congress to be used on their honor for answering or writing letters which relate to public business in the same manner that you allow the President or a Cabinet minister to use stamps for public purposes; but I would not restore the franking privilege, so that the signature of a Senator or member put upon paper or parchment could send anything, public or private, free through the mails. I think it is liable to abuse and that it has been abused, not by sending old boots or articles which are not allowed to travel through the mails by the policy of the law, but by sending millions and millions of documents in political campaigns, in presidential elections, which ought to be paid for by the different political parties by honest and fair assessments upon themselves and which the people generally ought not to be burdened with, and the various other matters for which the franking privilege was used aside from its usual purpose.

Now, I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator has passed the point to which the question related, but it was this: If we save so much money by ceasing the printing of the documents he referred to, why not carry it a step further and not print the RECORD at all?

Mr. SARGENT. Extremes never prove anything. I believe in printing for the use of Congress every report of a committee, because we need that to refer to, we need it in a convenient form to be bound up and referred to fifty years hence; but I do not believe there is a necessity for sending the report of that committee under every Senator's frank all over the country, because it would not be interesting, except in a few cases.

I further believe that it is necessary for us to print our bills. It is the most convenient form for reference; it is the cheapest printing we do, as it tends to secure accuracy of legislation. I believe it is necessary and highly essential that we print the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in order that we may have the means to refute any misrepresentation as to words that may be said in debate on this floor. I think that is a legitimate expenditure of money. Therefore I reply to my friend from Wisconsin that while I am in favor of the entire abolition of the franking privilege, yet it is only the cost of printing these extra copies, which we have cut off, we have saved.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, everything that can be said on the subject of the amendment now under discussion has been said except on one point, in which there is an outlook on this subject which I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the Senate. I stand here either for or against the franking privilege. I think when Congress undertook to say that the franking privilege should terminate it should not have stopped short of the full adjustment of the question, so that no person, no official in the Government, should have had the privilege.

I stated the other day that under the franking privilege as it existed before the abolition two sessions ago, while there were abuses it was a good means of disseminating intelligence among the people, and that neither political party, no odds who was in power in the nation, could monopolize the privilege that was thus secured; that the minority party in the nation had the full benefit of the franking privilege, and through its means they could disseminate information to every portion of the land; and that while there were abuses in this privilege, the privilege had its compensations nevertheless.

But how is it now, sir? The franking privilege belongs now to the party in power, and whatever party may in the accidents of the fluctuations of political fortune in this country hold possession of this Government, holds a lever, an engine by which it can disseminate information favorable to its own interest and suppress information, or at least tax all information that is opposed to its interest.

You have thousands and tens of thousands of men, as the Senator from New Hampshire said in his forcible presentation of the facts to the Senate; yes, sir, more than forty thousand men in this country who have franks issued to them at the expense of the Government; and thus it is that the people are cheated with the idea that the Post-Office Department foots up a credit when in truth and in fact it is simply taking money from one Department of the Government and giving to the Post-Office Department, charging the Government with the expense of printing stamps. Why do you charge the Government with the expense of printing these stamps? Why is not the frank of the different Departments as good as the printed stamp? It costs less. It only requires a little ink, a pen, and a little muscular exertion in order to write a frank on the back of a letter or document; but here you go a roundabout way, having stamps printed at the expense of the Government, and then give the officer a stamp to carry in his pocket and use precisely as he pleases, the people all the while being told that the franking privilege is abolished!

Sir, the franking privilege is not abolished. It exists to-day in a more odious form than ever before in the history of this nation. The franking privilege exists to-day in a form that will work corruption in this nation and will give a control, whenever the party in power sees proper to exercise it, that will be felt throughout the length and breadth of this land.

But, sir, I did not rise to speak at length on this subject. The point I wanted to make was this: that less than twenty years ago the measure that the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from New Jersey now proposes was the law of this land with regard to all documents. No prepayment of postage was required then under the post-office law of the Government. Letters were sent without prepayment. In truth and in fact it was not the law of the case to prepay letters. Letters, books, documents, everything was sent without any prepayment of postage at all. The franking privilege at that time existed.

When the revolution ended the Government found it necessary to increase the elective franchises, the Government found it necessary to invest with a share of the political sovereignty of this nation four millions of people who had led a life of slavery. The theory of our government is that republican institutions are based upon the virtue and rest upon the intelligence of the people; but when the war had ended and we had received into the body-politic and made citizens of four millions of people who had been slaves, who were without property, who to-day depend upon the labor of their hands, upon their own muscles and the sweat of their brow for the bread they eat, and when these people required the light of intelligence and that information which belongs to the nation to be disseminated among them, as it had been disseminated among the white people time out of mind; when that necessity arose and stared Congress in the face to disseminate information among these people, straightway came the Postmaster-General with his contributions from these people of the country and demanded of Congress that the franking privilege should be abolished. And now here to-day we are told by a Senator on this floor that every book that is sent out from this Capitol ought to cost the man who gets it two dollars. The prosperity of the State which I have the honor in part to represent depends in a great measure upon the intelligence of the colored people of that State; for weal or for woe the fortunes of the Southern States depend upon the people who are in that country, colored as well as white; and yet to-day when they are stricken down by the hand of war, when you have uplifted by the power of the nation the colored race, and the white people are stricken down into the lowest measure of poverty, you come here and repeal the franking privilege and say to them, "If you get a book from this Government that is printed at public expense you must pay two dollars for it."

Why, sir, look at it. If I were anywhere else but in the Congress of the United States, if I stood anywhere except in the presence of Senators, I would say there was a degree of humbuggery in this sort of legislation that has never been excelled, that is insulting in truth to the intelligence of the people of this nation. I will not say that, however, because I am in the Senate, and I know that cannot be; but if I was upon the hustings I would proclaim it, and the people would believe me.

The honorable Senator from Maine, for whose opinions I entertain the very profoundest respect—he is always logical, eloquent, and powerful when he undertakes to discuss a question before the Senate—tells us that before this franking privilege was abolished Congress was slandered, and that we all stood here abashed by the slanders uttered by the American people against Congress on account of this franking privilege. I beg to inquire whether the reputation of Congress has been very greatly promoted by reason of the abolition of the franking privilege. I appeal to the Senator to know whether there is any large improvement in the character and standing of Congress before the American people to-day. If there is any very great improvement I have not been able to discover it. I do not read the newspapers of the country correctly as the medium of intelligence if the character of Congress before the people of this nation stands very greatly improved.

I am correct in the supposition that there has been no very great improvement in that regard; my argument is somewhat strengthened when I appeal to the Senate to permit my constituents to receive documents, published at the expense of the nation, necessary to be published for information among the people. The Senator from California says that he wants the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD published so that he can stand vindicated if he should be charged with having done that which he did not do. He wants it for his own benefit, his own advantage, his own protection. He wants to bear it away with him as a shield, as a protection, so that if he is charged with having done a wrong he can pull out the RECORD and say, "No; it is not true; here is the record of what I did." I apprehend that is not the design and purpose of publishing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is published for the benefit of the people, for the purpose of disseminating information among the people; and that is the cause that moves the publication of all public documents by the Congress of the United States, not especially for the benefit of members of Congress, but for the purpose of disseminating information among the people of the United States, of disseminating knowledge, of increasing intelligence, of preparing the people more and more for the great responsibilities that rest upon them in upholding the republican institutions of the country.

Sir, I go for the restoration flat out of the franking privilege. If I cannot get that, as I know very well I cannot, then I go for the next best thing, and that is no privilege at all; that is, to take off the privilege from the Departments, because I say to you that that infamous system which is now being fostered and cared for and maintained will in the end develop into a power for evil in this country that will be felt throughout the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.]

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 21——

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. We may as well have the yeas and nays first as last.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. A single word. As this is unquestionably the point of departure as to whether we shall revive the franking privilege or not, I desire to see a record of the vote. This proviso that I have offered simply provides for getting rid of the documents that were left over to use from previous sessions of Congress. I do not understand that we have to any considerable extent proposed at this session to print documents for distribution. Therefore, if the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is to be adopted, I propose that it shall be limited to the documents now on hand.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Mr. President, I am one of those who did not give very much heed to the petitions that were sent in here in favor of the abolition of the franking privilege. I voted on all occasions against its abolition. I know that on two or three occasions, whenever I was present and had the opportunity to do so, I voted against its abolition. I knew and felt at the time that there were great abuses in the system, scandalous abuses, and I desired their correction and a modification of the privilege; but that is a very different thing from voting for the system now and upon this bill.

I think it proper to state that I shall vote against anything looking to the modification or the restoration of the franking privilege upon this bill. It is a measure of sufficient importance to justify a bill by itself, and I trust, if the public sentiment of the country has changed so as to demand a return to the franking privilege, that those gentlemen who heed this change of sentiment will introduce a measure calculated to that end. But upon an appropriation bill at this late period of the session to undertake to restore the franking privilege I consider unjust, unwise, and impolitic in every aspect of the case. It is a question that we should consider, and fairly consider by itself. We should avoid the scandalous abuses of the system when we undertake to reestablish it in a proper way and in a proper manner. Now, if I understand the amendment of the honorable Senator from New Jersey, it is impliedly or unqalifiedly restoring the franking privilege as it stood before.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not at all.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. If I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, it is to qualify that so as that it may relate to the books already published and upon hand when the abolition of the privilege took place. I should be opposed to either proposition, but I prefer the last as a qualification to the first. Let us stand by the system as we inaugurated it until the sentiment of this Chamber and of Congress and the public sentiment shall induce us to consider the whole question in a separate measure in order that we may evolve out of this chaos of confusion something definite, something correct, and something right; and then I am sure my honorable friend from Mississippi will be dealt with fairly, and his constituents, too, to whom he desires so much that information shall be sent from this body. I hope they may have the benefit of everything that is right in the premises, and that he shall have no further cause of complaint.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I only wish to say a word. The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Maryland both state that the amendment which I have introduced is restoring or tending to restore the franking privilege.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The book-making business I should have said.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is a statement so wide of propriety that I feel bound to contradict it. Any person who wants to restore the franking privilege will make its abolition odious to the people by withholding from them all ability to get at the proceedings of Congress or of the Government. If you adopt this measure, so that for a reasonable compensation, twenty-five cents a volume, they can get that information, they will not want the franking privilege restored.

My friend from Vermont qualifies what he said and says that it tends to the establishment of book-printing. I hope the day will never come, unless it be that day when, as the Senator from Wisconsin suggested, we shall sit here with closed doors, when we shall stop book-printing. The people of this country have a right to know what transpires in the various Departments of the Government, what transpires here in Congress, and that information can only be given to them by a system of the economical dissemination of public documents.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does not follow as a matter of course that if you do not adopt the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey documents such as Congress may print in relation to the current affairs of business will not be accessible to the people. The proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, is one which would furnish the people all the documents which they desire at the cost price upon a perfect basis of equality. We print these documents. If any American citizen desires them he can have them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Paying two dollars a volume for the postage.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. He can have them at just what other people pay who choose to get their books through the mail.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And that my friend tells us is two dollars a volume.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That will depend upon the size of the volume; but whether it is much or little, it is no injustice to any man who chooses to have his volume go through the mail; and any other system than that is unjust, partial, and unequal. This whole system of the distribution of public documents gratuitously, as a matter of patronage in the hands of members of Congress, never was and never can be justified upon any principle of equality. What do we do with these books that are published? There are only a few of them anyway. We give them to our especial favorites and friends. That is what it must be; that is what it always has been; that is what it always will be; and it is charged upon the public Treasury.

I think myself that the whole scandal which came upon Congress arose from that particular fact. We publish the Globe or the RECORD, it is said as an educating process; that it is a great educator of the American people. How many people ever read the Globe? Not a man, woman, or child in this broad land, to my belief, ever read the volumes of the Globe published at any one session in the last ten years.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am surprised to hear the Senator from Maine. He certainly is very illy informed on this subject. I have come across constituents all through my State who have told me, not that they commenced at the beginning of the Globe and read it through——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I supposed there was some substance in what the Senator was saying; and that the question was whether they had derived intelligence from reading these books. The people read these books a great deal more than my friend imagines.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What a marvelous educating sort of document is the President's message and accompanying documents. The President's message and accompanying documents make about seven huge volumes, as big as Webster's Unabridged nearly. Does my honorable friend believe he can find a man, woman, or child in this country who ever reads those volumes? They went out under our franks, distributed to our party followers. What became of them? In my country, where the peddlers go about the country, they are brought back as rags and sold.

Mr. ALCORN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him at that point?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. ALCORN. I will state with regard to those executive documents, as he compares them to Webster's Dictionary, that they were read precisely as Webster's Dictionary is read. Whenever a citizen desired information on a particular subject he referred to the executive documents to find it. It is true I suppose, that no one ever took up an executive document and read it through as he would read through one of Dickens' novels.

Mr. MORTON. I would ask the Senator if he would abolish Websters' Dictionary because nobody ever read it through?

Mr. ALCORN. I was coming to that point. I was going to ask the Senator from Maine whether he would abolish the dictionary because nobody had ever taken it up at the beginning and read it through.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would say to my honorable friend, in answer to that, that his constituent would come out as the man did who read the dictionary through; he said it was a most excellent work, but he could not see the connection exactly. [Laughter.] It is absurd to talk about educating the people with this partial distribution of these documents. With all the opportunities for education, with the publishers all over this country, any book, any document anywhere that is worth publishing is seized upon by the local press and local publications everywhere and sent broadcast over the land. And here we publish a few hundred sets of a public document; and we are going to educate the whole American people by such a process as that! The only proposition it seems to me which is at all allowable here is that which has obtained in all other countries—make your public documents accessible to the people; print them, and allow the people to have them at cost price if they want them. That is precisely the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, which was debated the other day, but which was voted down and passed from the consideration of the Senate. I hope this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, it is said that "all roads lead to Rome," and so all bills here seem to lead to a discussion of the franking privilege. There is one peculiarly pleasant feature to me connected with all these discussions. It was always a matter of regret to me that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] was placed in the Chair, because we lost his presence on the floor, but we can always be sure of his presence on the floor when any bill comes up, in the various ways which lead to Rome, which involves the franking privilege. We can always have the pleasure of hearing him when that question by any accident is brought before the Senate.

I rise, Mr. President, not for the first time to express my view in reference to the abolishment of the franking privilege and in reference to the amendment offered by my colleague. At the time the law abolishing the franking privilege was passed, it was supported by a great many members of Congress and Senators for the purpose of getting rid of the evil of franking and passing through the mails what were not public documents. That reason actuated my vote. No pressure, no instigation from the Postmaster-General or from anybody else influenced my action, and so I stated at the time, as the Globe will show. It was because of the misuse of it which I had no power to prevent, and when I could join with the majority in the Senate to prevent that continued misuse by voting to abolish it, I deemed it my duty to do so; and so far from apologizing, as other Senators do, for the course I then pursued, I feel now that I did at that time what was just and what was wise.

But when Senators on this floor rise and insist that the object of those who voted to abolish that privilege as it is was called, which was being misused, which was being by common cansent and common custom applied to purposes for which it never was intended, was to prevent our constituents from receiving the public documents which were published by Congress at their expense, they certainly misstate the views with which I and others voted for the bill. In that respect I agree with my colleague entirely. When gentlemen rise now and say they want no partial reintroduction of the franking privilege, that they do not wish to reintroduce it piecemeal, and intimate that they want the people to feel what they have done and they want the people to come here and beg them personally that the privilege shall be restored to members of Congress before they can get the documents published with their money, my impression is that they do not put their case well. I agree with my colleague in that.

Sir, the people of the United States have a right to the documents you have published with their money, and they have a right, if they desire it, to have them go free through the mails; and they have the right to have them go free through the mails without the indorsement of your frank. How did we do with the Congressional Globe, as I said on a previous occasion? You voted only the other day to do the same thing with the Agricultural Report. You have a right to do it with all the documents you publish. Then the question comes fairly and squarely before you, what documents ought we to publish; what documents is it right for us to publish? And in reference to that question we are to vote. The Printing Committee report their judgment of what it is proper to publish and distribute at the expense of the people.

You may say that we have no right to print Agricultural Reports and circulate them among agriculturists at the expense of the shoemaker, at the expense of the haberdasher, at the expense of the smith. That may be true. If that is so, why do you establish an Agricultural Bureau? Do you not make the haberdasher and the smith pay taxes to support your Agricultural Bureau? Why do you not have a Bureau for shoemaking? Why do you not have a Bureau for haberdashing? You tax the whole people to support a Bureau for one particular class. Does not that same principle apply then when you come to distribute the report of that Bureau? What is the theory of it? The theory of it is that one of the great interests of this country is the agricultural interest. It is an interest perhaps paramount to all others, because all others are built upon it. It was the original employment of man. It is one of his noblest employments, and upon it is built nearly every other art and nearly every other pursuit in life. You have said that in this great country, so vast in its territorial extent, in order to encourage and stimulate agriculture and a wise cultivation of land, you will establish a Bureau and you will send out the report of that Bureau, and the whole people shall pay for it.

Now, how can you come in and find fault with the circulation through the mails of that report and ask the individual who wants it to pay for it?

These remarks were suggested to me, Mr. President, by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of my colleague. I cannot agree with the Senator from Vermont that this distribution should be restricted to the documents that have already been printed. I would much prefer the amendment of my colleague if he would modify it—and if he does not, I shall make such a motion if no one else does—by striking out those words which require the payment of twenty-five cents postage on the receipt of these documents. There never was anything in the support that I gave the abolition of the franking privilege which required the people of the United States to pay for the transportation by mail of the documents sent to them. There was nothing in one word I ever said to embrace that idea, and I do no mean to have any such imputation put on me.

I said on a previous occasion that I voted for the abolition of the franking privilege. In that I was strictly and technically mistaken, which I only found out afterward. I meant to vote for it and did speak in favor of it, but I did not happen to be in the Senate at the moment the vote was taken, as I find by the record. I would have voted for it if I had been here, and I defended it in some remarks I made in the Senate. It never occurred to me, and I am perfectly persuaded that a majority of those who voted for it did not do so at all on the ground of preventing the people of the United States from receiving these documents.

I do not mean to say that more documents than were necessary may not have been published. I do not mean to say that the Committee on Printing have always been wise in their recommendations for the printing of documents. I do not mean to say that there may not have been abuses; but I do mean to say that the promulgation of what is going on in Congress by the RECORD, the promulgation of such information in reference to agriculture as is carefully collected, so long as we have a Bureau to collect it, is a duty of the American Congress, approved by the American people, and is not condemned at all by any vote we ever cast to abolish the franking privilege.

I cannot understand what objection there can be to such an amendment as my colleague has offered, striking out, as I suggest, the provision requiring a payment of twenty-five cents or any other sum, and letting these public documents go free. It is insisted by some Senators that that should not be done because that is restoring the franking privilege by piecemeal. I deny it entirely. I insist upon it that the proposition on the other side is simply saying to the people, "Until you change your mind, until you come here by your petitions saying that the petitions which the Postmaster-General got you to send to us were all wrong and you ought not to have signed them, until you yourselves say that we were mistaken in abolishing it, you cannot get any public documents; therefore you must raise another pressure and give us the courage to undo what we have been doing."

I think the gentlemen who voted for the repeal of that privilege at that time, if they will look back at their own record and what they stated at that time, will find that they can be placed in no such position. The proposition then was simply to take away from not only members of Congress but from all other officers the privilege of franking. I hardly dare mention from memory the number, but I think it was stated at that time that there were forty thousand people who possessed the privilege of franking in the United States. To begin with, every postmaster in every little town and village in the whole land had the power to frank. How many thousands there were I do not know; I do not state it as a fact; but my memory brings back to me the number as forty thousand. At any rate it was an immense number. This power to frank spread all over the land, it was charged and was known to be true in a great measure, was a violation of what was meant by the law; but it had grown up by custom, and it could only be weeded out and cut down by taking it up by the roots. So I said at the time, and that bill never would have passed the Senate if it had not been for Senators voting for it who voted for it with that motive and no other, who never would have voted for it to prevent the people from receiving documents they were in the habit of receiving, and which Congress saw proper to publish.

I therefore hope that my colleague will accept my suggestion. If he does not, I shall at the proper time, if it is not in order to do so now, offer an amendment to his amendment, by which public documents, printed and stamped with a Government stamp, shall pass through the mails free to those persons to whom they are addressed. That question does bring you, as has been well said on both sides of this discussion, directly to the proposition, will you print public documents or will you not? If you print them you must circulate them, or let them lie idle.

The Senator from Maine says it is a matter of favor; we send them to our friends. Well, sir, I should not be surprised if in some sense that was true. I suppose that all of us, the Senator from Maine included, have tried to avoid sending these documents entirely to our political and personal friends; but yet when you sit down to send a document to any person and think to whom you will send it, the name of a friend is likely to come up first. That is human nature, and I do not think it is bad human nature.

You may say it is not wise to distribute them in this manner; it is not wise that Senators should have this power of discrimination, for they will send them to their friends. Well, sir, as Congress is generally divided more or less equally between gentlemen of different parties, perhaps that thing balances itself. Perhaps in the counties where I send documents to my democratic friends the republicans may receive more documents from my colleague. Perhaps that may be as evenly balanced as can be, and as little wrong and as little unjust as any instrument or any means that you can use to distribute these documents with. But be that as it may, I do not stickle for this. I do not insist that Senators or members of Congress shall have the power of distributing these documents. I do not ask that, nor care for that, nor claim that. I simply ask that gentlemen do not get up incessantly on this floor time after time and insist that when we abolished the franking privilege we did by that act prevent the documents that were printed with the people's money from going by the mails to them free. We voted no such thing; we intended to vote no such thing; at least some of us did not; and so far as I am concerned I am unwilling to be placed in any such position.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator yield to business which I know my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] deems is quite important? It will take but a moment.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Kentucky was at the desk, and I interposed in his behalf.

THE REVISED STATUTE.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have just received a dispatch from the Secretary of State that it is very important that the Senate should to-day pass a bill which I reported from the Judiciary Committee this morning for the publication of the laws. It is essential that it should be passed to-day, because the general act is now before the President and will probably to-morrow or next day receive his sanction. If he should approve of that act before this bill passes, then the newspapers who have the publication of the laws will have a right to publish this act and the Government will have to pay perhaps half a million dollars; but if we pass this bill to-day and send it to the House and it is there passed it will go to the President and he will approve it. Then when this is approved, of course the other act would be approved and the papers would not publish it. I therefore ask to take up the bill that I this morning reported as a substitute for the House bill with a view of putting it on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California withdraw his motion for an executive session?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask now to put on its passage the bill which I reported this morning as a substitute for the House bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3652) providing for the publication of the revised statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

An amendment was proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the existing contract or contracts between the Secretary of State on the part of the United States, and Charles C. Little, Augustus Flagg, Henry T. Miles, and John Bartlett, of Boston, known as the firm of Little, Brown & Co., dated the 28th day of May, 1866, and all other contracts between the United States or any officer thereof with said firm of Little, Brown & Co., respecting the printing or publication of the laws of the United States, are hereby declared to be determined, pursuant to the powers therein reserved.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State is hereby charged with the duty of causing to be prepared for printing, publication, and distribution the revised statutes of the United States enacted at this present session of Congress; that he shall cause to be completed the head-notes of the several titles and chapters and the marginal notes referring to the statutes from which each section was compiled and repealed by said revision; and references to the decisions of the courts of the United States explaining or expounding the same, and such decisions of State courts as he may deem expedient, with a full and complete index to the same. And when the same shall be completed, the said Secretary shall duly certify the same under the seal of the United States, and when printed and promulgated as hereinafter provided, the printed volumes shall be legal evidence of the laws and treaties therein contained, in all the courts of the United States, and of the several States and Territories.

SEC. 3. That the revision of the statutes of a general and permanent nature, with the index thereto, shall be printed in one volume, and shall be entitled and labeled "Revised Statutes of the United States;" and the revision of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia; to post-roads, and the public treaties in force on the 1st day of December, 1873, with a suitable index to each, shall be published in a separate volume, and entitled and labeled "Revised Statutes relating to District of Columbia and Post-Roads. Public Treaties."

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of State shall cause the two volumes to be stereotyped, and such number of each volume to be printed and substantially bound at the Government Printing Office as he may deem needful, for public distribution as hereinafter provided, and for sale by his office.

SEC. 5. That he shall, in like manner, cause to be edited, printed, published, and distributed pamphlet copies of the statutes of the present and each future session of Congress, to the officers and persons hereinafter provided, and bound copies of the laws of each Congress to the number of two thousand copies to be distributed in the manner now provided by law, and uniform with the said edition of the revised statutes.

SEC. 6. That at the close of every session of Congress the Secretary of State shall cause to be distributed pamphlet copies of the acts and resolves of Congress for that session, edited and printed in the manner aforesaid, as follows: To the President and Vice-President of the United States, two copies each; to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, one copy; to the librarian of the Senate, for the use of Senators, one hundred and twenty-six copies; to the librarian of the House, two hundred and fifty copies, for the use of the Representatives and Delegates; to the Library of Congress, fourteen copies; to the Department of State, including those for the use of legations and consulates, six hundred copies; to the Treasury Department, two hundred copies; to the War Department, including those for the use of officers of the Army, two hundred copies; to the Navy Department, including those for the use of officers of the Navy, one hundred copies; to the Department of the Interior, including those for the use of the surveyors-general and registers and receivers of public land offices, two hundred and fifty copies; to the Post-Office Department, fifty copies; to the Department of Justice, including those for the use of the chief and associate justices, the judges and officers of the United States and territorial courts, four hundred and twenty-five copies; to the Department of Agriculture, ten copies; to the Smithsonian Institution, five copies; to the Government Printing Office, two copies; to the governors and secretaries of Territories, one copy each; to be retained in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior, one thousand copies; and the remainder shall be distributed to the States and Territories in proportion to the number of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress to which they are at the time entitled.

SEC. 7. That after the close of each Congress the Secretary of State shall have edited, printed, and bound a sufficient number of the volumes containing the Statutes at Large enacted by that Congress to enable him to distribute copies, or as many thereof as may be needed, as follows: To the President of the United States four copies, one of which shall be for the library of the Executive Mansion, and one copy shall be for the use of the Commissioner of Public Buildings; to the Vice-President of the United States one copy; to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, one copy; to the librarian of the Senate, for the use of Senators, one hundred and fourteen copies; to the librarian of the House, for the use of Representatives and Delegates, four hundred and ten copies; to the Library of Congress, fourteen copies, including four copies for the law library; to the Department of State, including those for the use of legations and consulates, three hundred and eighty copies; to the Treasury Department, including those for the use of officers of customs, two hundred and sixty copies; to the War Department, including a copy for the Military Academy at West Point, fifty copies; to the Navy Department, including a copy for the library at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, a copy for the library of each navy-yard in the United States, a copy for the library of the Brooklyn Naval Lyceum, and a copy for the library of the Naval Institute at Charlestown, Massachusetts, sixty-five copies; to the Department of the Interior, including those for the use of the surveyors-general and registers and receivers of public land offices, two hundred and fifty copies; to the Post-Office Department, fifty copies; to the Department of Justice, including those for the use of the chief and associate justices, the judges and the officers of the United States and territorial courts, four hundred and twenty-five copies; to the Department of Agriculture, five copies; to the Smithsonian Institution, two copies; to the Government Printing Office, one copy; and the Secretary of State shall supply deficiencies and offices newly created.

SEC. 8. That the said printed copies of the said acts of each session and of the said bound copies of the acts of each Congress shall be legal evidence of the laws and treaties therein contained, in all the courts of the United States and of the several States therein.

SEC. 9. That the said laws of each session of Congress shall also be stereotyped and printed for sale as provided in respect to the said revised statutes. And the copies of the said revised statutes and of the said laws of each session of Congress as issued from time to time, shall be respectively sold at the cost of the paper, press-work, and binding, with 10 per cent. thereof added thereto, to any person applying for the same. And the proceeds of all sales shall be paid into the Treasury.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of State shall cause all the copies of the Revision of Indian Treaties, made by Thomas J. Durant, now printed, to be bound, and the same shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior, for the use of the Departments and officers of the Government.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from Kentucky whether there is anything in that bill which repeals the law as to the publication of the laws in newspapers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir; the first section makes that repeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the publication of the revised statutes and the laws of the United States."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and agreed to other amendments of the Senate with amendments, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM LOUGHRIDGE of Iowa, Mr. JOHN HANCOCK of Texas, and Mr. JOHN T. AVERILL of Minnesota, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. No. 7) for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER of Massachusetts, Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE of Maine, and Mr. C. N. POTTER of New York, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1691) for the relief of Thomas Ridgway;

A bill (H. R. No. 2347) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the Connecticut Historical Society certain papers on file as vouchers for the discharged claims of the heirs of Silas Deane;

A bill (H. R. No. 3672) authorizing the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home to sell the property belonging to the Soldiers' Home situated at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky, and known as Harrodsburgh Springs property.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. SARGENT, and Mr. BOGY.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MOIETIES UNDER CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask leave to make a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3171) to amend the customs-revenue laws and to repeal moieties, and I would ask at the request of several Senators that this report may be printed, so that it may be called up to-morrow for consideration.

The report was ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT CRIMINAL COURT.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will ask the Senate to pass a bill providing for a criminal court in this District. It has been examined carefully by the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is very necessary that it should pass.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3503) conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section of the bill provides that the criminal court of the District of Columbia shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the police court of the District of all crimes and misdemeanors committed in the District.

Section 2 applies the provisions of the thirty-third section of the judiciary act of 1789 to courts created by act of Congress in the District of Columbia.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to strike out in line 4 of section 1 the word "concurrent" before the word "jurisdiction," and after the word "jurisdiction," in the same line, to strike out the words "with the police court of said District," and at the end of the section to insert "not lawfully triable in any other court, and which are required by law to be prosecuted by indictment or information;" so as to make the section read:

That the criminal court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of all crimes and misdemeanors committed in said district not lawfully triable in any other court, and which are required by law to be prosecuted by indictment or information.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY.

Mr. HAMLIN. Before we go into executive session, I want the time of the Senate for one minute. To-morrow morning in the morning hour, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up House bill No. 3351 which is in my charge in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It relates to carrying out the recent treaty of Washington and settling the rights of certain settlers under the Hudson Bay Company growing out of provisions in the Washington treaty, and it imposes obligations upon the Government which we cannot fail to carry out and deal justly.

CONGRESSMEN FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 886) to provide for the election of Congressmen at large for the State of Alabama.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the two additional Representatives to Congress allowed to the State of Alabama, according to the apportionment under the ninth census, may be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives to which the State is entitled by the districts as now prescribed by law in that State, unless the General Assembly of Alabama shall otherwise provide before the time fixed by law for the election for Representatives to Congress from said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that after this post-office appropriation bill is completed, I will ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill reported by the Joint Committee of Investigation into the Affairs of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 16, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to aid in the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia comes over from yesterday as unfinished business.

Mr. DAWES. I would suggest that we go to the Speaker's table and dispose of the matters thereon, under what is called the five-minute rule—a five-minute speech being allowed on each bill on each side. I would except from this the civil-rights bill. I ask that the order be made that the House shall proceed under this arrangement, at twelve o'clock, to consider business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I must object, unless the Committee on Elections can have half an hour to dispose of two or three cases.

Mr. COBURN. Is the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that the bills on the Speaker's table shall be taken up and disposed of?

The SPEAKER. It is that they be disposed of either by being referred or by being passed. The Chair would suggest that if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] will make the time for going to the business on the Speaker's table half an hour later the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] the chairman of the Committee on Elections, can have the time he desires before that is done.

Mr. DAWES. I am willing to say one o'clock.

Mr. MOREY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. When we reach a bill on the Speaker's table under the proposed arrangement may we pass it, refer it, or leave it on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Yes; by a majority vote it can be passed, referred, or left on the table.

Mr. COTTON. I must object to this arrangement unless an opportunity is given to the Committee on the District of Columbia to make some reports.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If we have a morning hour it is in the power of a majority of the House at the expiration of the morning hour to go to business on the Speaker's table. This being the case, I must object to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The business on the Speaker's table cannot possibly be reached under the rules in the way suggested by the gentleman from Iowa during the last days of the session.

Mr. DAWES. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of making the order I have indicated; that at one o'clock the House proceed to dispose of business on the Speaker's table, a five-minute debate being allowed on each side, so that by a majority vote bills may be passed, referred, or left on the table, excepting from the order the civil-rights bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Why should the civil-rights bill be excepted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, if agreed to. Excepting the civil-rights bill all other business on the Speaker's table will be taken up seriatim, to be disposed of by a majority vote after a five-minute speech on either side in one of three ways; that is, a bill may be referred to a committee, may be passed, or may be left on the table.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will it require a two-thirds vote to pass a bill?

The SPEAKER. A majority vote will be sufficient.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me to inquire why he excepts the civil-rights bill?

Mr. DAWES. It does not prejudice the civil-rights bill, and I suppose that if I should include that bill in this particular motion I could not get at the other business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GARFIELD. Suppose you try it.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Michigan knows that I would omit no motion that would advance the civil-rights bill, and if the gentleman is apprehensive that I have any purpose hostile to the civil-rights bill he mistakes my motives.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not suppose so.

Mr. DAWES. I make the motion in this way simply because I know that it is the only way in which we can get at the other business on the Speaker's table. I am willing, if any gentleman desires it, to include the civil-rights bill; but I know what the effect of that will be.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will also exclude from his motion the Saint Croix land-grant bill.

Mr. DAWES. A majority can dispose of this whole matter, and therefore I make the motion without any exception.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope the Committee on War Claims will be allowed to report the bill relating to the commissioners of claims, and for other purposes, which I am instructed by that committee to offer.

Mr. DAWES. If I make any exception my motives would be misconstrued, and therefore I make the motion without exception, and a majority of the House can dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes his motion in that form the whole question will turn on the vote on the civil-rights bill, and that bill might as well be taken out and voted upon separately, so as to disembarrass the other business.

Mr. DAWES. Some other gentleman can make the motion; I do not propose to stand here under the imputation of hindering the passage of the civil-rights bill.

The SPEAKER. It would make the entire motion turn upon that one bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. No one has made any imputation on the gentleman from Massachusetts. We have tried several times to take up the civil-rights bill by a two-thirds vote, and it has been demonstrated that it cannot be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was only stating the obvious parliamentary effect of the motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. In order to test the question I move to suspend the rules and take the civil-rights bill from the Speaker's table and pass it.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will withdraw that motion I will adhere to my motion to go to the Speaker's table and take up all business thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first dispose of the unfinished business which was reported last evening on a motion for a suspension of the rules, and comes over on that motion.

FIRE-ALARM TELEGRAPH IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3532) to aid in the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How does that bill come before the House?

The SPEAKER. Last evening the gentleman from New York [Mr. SESSIONS] brought it up on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understood that last evening was given to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I suppose that whatever business from that committee was not completed last evening must fall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was absent last evening, but he understood from the Clerk that it was entertained yesterday afternoon before the recess.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. O, no; it was last evening.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill is not properly before the House. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York to make the motion to suspend the rules later on during the day, but the bill is not unfinished business.

TAX ON SAVINGS INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill for the relief of savings institutions having no capital stock and doing business for the benefit of depositors. I will state to the House that it is a bill which must be passed now if ever. It has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is for the relief of depositors in savings banks, and it must be passed before the close of this session or it can never do any good. The tax has once been paid by depositors, and now it is proposed to assess it on the institutions who have no funds to meet it with.

The Clerk read the bill. It provides that no future collection of internal-revenue taxes shall be made on the earnings of savings-banks or institutions for savings, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits, to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits without profit or compensation to the association or company, whether the earnings of the same have been or may hereafter be divided annually, semi-annually, or at other periods.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 3678) was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3511) regulating the removal of causes from State courts to the circuit courts of the United States.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 321) reorganizing the several staff corps of the Army.

QUALIFICATIONS OF TERRITORIAL DELEGATES.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Elections to report and move the passage, under a suspension of the rules, of a bill defining the qualifications of territorial Delegates in the House of Representatives.

The bill provides that no person shall be a Delegate in the House of Representatives from any of the Territories of the United States who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, have been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be an inhabitant of the Territory in which he shall be chosen; and no such person who is guilty either of bigamy or polygamy shall be eligible to a seat as such Delegate.

Mr. COX. Does that affect the present Delegate from Utah?

Mr. SMITH, of New York. The legal operation of the bill is entirely prospective.

Mr. COX. Then the word "hereafter" should be inserted.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. That does not affect the legal construction of the bill; I have no objection to the amendment.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill as modified (H. R. No. 3679) was passed.

ELECTION CONTEST—GUNTER vs. WILSHIRE.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I now ask that Mr. Gunter, of Arkansas, may be seated as a member of this House. He has been waiting here since last December. My colleague upon the committee from Ohio [Mr. ROBINSON] is instructed by the committee to report in this case.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I am instructed unanimously by the Committee on Elections to submit a report, accompanied by resolutions, in the contested-election case of Thomas M. Gunter vs. W. W. Wilshire, from the third congressional district of the State of Arkansas.

The resolutions accompanying the report were read, as follows:

Resolved, That W. W. Wilshire was not elected and is not entitled to a seat as a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the third district of the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That Thomas M. Gunter was elected, and is entitled to a seat as a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the third district of Arkansas.

Mr. HURLBUT. There is a preliminary question which I wish to raise before the House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman, and then I will call the previous question.

Mr. HURLBUT. In order to raise the question to which I refer I move to recommit this report.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I understand that this report is made under a suspension of the rules; if so I must object to debate.

Mr. HURLBUT. I understand that this is a privileged report from the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged report, and the gentleman making it can yield.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire in this case to enter a motion to recommit this report to the committee with instructions to pass upon a preliminary question.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I do not yield for a motion.

Mr. HURLBUT. I think I have a right to make a motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. Not unless the gentleman yielding a portion of his time consents to the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I do not consent.

Mr. HURLBUT. Then I will state my point to the House and they can do as they like. Under the law of 1851 there is an express provision that the contestant must file his claim and notice of contest within thirty days from the time when the canvass was made. The canvass in this case was made on the 14th of December, 1872, and the contestant did not file the notice of contest for more than ninety days afterward. I desire the committee to pass upon the question whether the limitation prescribed by law is to have any effect or not. That is the simple question I desire to raise, and if the House shall not second the previous question I will move to recommit the report to the Committee on Elections to determine that question positively and distinctly.

Mr. DAWES. The law of 1851 declares that the contestant shall serve upon the sitting member notice of contest, &c. This gentleman was not made a sitting member except by a vote of this House, thus making this a special case to be prescribed for by the Committee on Elections themselves.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections were adopted.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GUNTER then appeared and qualified by taking the modified oath of July 11, 1868.

ARKANSAS ELECTION CONTEST—BRADLEY vs. HYNES.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the case of John M. Bradley against William J. Hynes, a member of this House from the State of Arkansas.

Mr. PIKE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that the rules be suspended so that the House may take up and consider the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments of the Senate were read, and, except in the cases noted below, were, without debate, respectively concurred in or non-concurred in according to the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations.

The forty-second amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in lines 149 and 150 the following words: "thirty-six interpreters, at $500 each; and $600 for temporary interpreters."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. BECK. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] who is managing this bill will give as an explanation of this amendment. Does the Senate add thirty-six additional interpreters?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The statute fixes the pay of these interpreters, I believe, at $500 each in certain Territories. That is the reason the Senate made the change.

Mr. BECK. Is that what swells this appropriation from $29,000 up to $35,000?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. We recommend non-concurrence in the amendment for the purpose of satisfying ourselves whether the amendment is right.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The seventy-ninth amendment was read, as follows:

In the appropriation for the Sacs and Foxes of Mississippi add after the words "physician for the agency," in line 1197, so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

For interest on $800,000, at 5 per cent., per second article treaty of October 11, 1842, $40,000, of which sum $1,500 shall be paid for a physician for the agency, who shall furnish the necessary medicines: Provided, That so much of the appropriation herein made for the Sacs and Foxes on the Mississippi as shall be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding 50 per cent. thereof, may be used, under his direction, for the purposes of education and civilization.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I wish to offer an amendment to this amendment. I am satisfied the Committee on Appropriations will have no objection to it. I did not think of it when the committee had these amendments under consideration. This amendment of the Senate proposes a diversion of the Indian fund; and I desire to provide that it shall not be done without the consent of the Indians, so that they may not hereafter come to Congress and set up a claim for funds that have been diverted. I move to amend the amendment by adding "provided further, that the Indians shall consent thereto."

The amendment of Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

The eightieth amendment was read, as follows:

In the appropriations for the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri add a proviso to the appropriation of $200 for the support of a school; so that the paragraph will read as follows:

For the support of said school for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, as per said article of the treaty, $200: Provided, That so much of the appropriation herein made for the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri as shall be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding 50 per cent. thereof, may be used under his direction for the purposes of education and civilization.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I move to amend this amendment by adding the words, "provided further, that the Indians shall consent thereto."

The amendment of Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, was agreed to, and the amendment of the Senate, as thus amended, was concurred in.

The ninety-first amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase from the Omaha Indians in Nebraska such quantity of land, not exceeding twenty sections, as may be required for the use of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin and for improvements on their reservation, to be appropriated from the residue of the $1,100,000 provided to be set apart for the Winnebagoes by the fourth article of the treaty with those Indians, November 1, 1837: Provided, That such amount as may be paid to the Omahas for the lands required shall be applied for their use, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for general purposes of civilization, $82,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. In this amendment the Committee on Appropriations at first agreed to recommend non-concurrence; and that is the recommendation in the printed report; but on subsequent examination they have decided to ask concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Indian Affairs came before us after our recommendation was agreed on, and showed that this amendment was a mere transfer of funds; that it did not change at all the amount expended. The Committee on Indian Affairs were unanimous in their recommendation, and they satisfied us that they were right.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I move to amend this amendment of the Senate by adding the words, "provided that said Winnebagoes shall consent to said purchase."

The amendment of Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate, as thus amended, was concurred in.

The ninety-seventh amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out $3,000 in line 1792 and insert $2,000; so that the paragraph will read as follows:

Washington Territory:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory, including transportation of annuity goods and presents, (where no special provision is made therefor by treaties,) and for defraying the expenses of removal and subsistence of Indians, and for pay of necessary employés, $25,000; $2,000 of which shall be for the support of schools on the Colville and Chehalis agencies.

The committee recommended concurrence.

Mr. SHANKS. I ask that this amendment be non-concurred in. I have been among those people, and they certainly need from this appropriation the amount of $3,000 for school purposes.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The one hundred and thirteenth amendment was read, as follows:

Insert before the words "necessary traveling expenses" the words "actual and;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the actual and necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors provided for by section 6 of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the fiscal year 1874, $7,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. BECK. I ask that this amendment be concurred in. The Senate has amended so that the phrase will read "actual and necessary traveling expenses." Why should the words "actual and" be struck out?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the word "actual" be retained, then a man may go to the Fifth Avenue Hotel and remain there on business for five or six weeks and charge his actual bills to the Government, whereas under a provision for "necessary" expenses the construction given under the law is that no more than a certain amount per day shall be allowed by the Department. To insert the word "actual" will repeal the present order of things and make it possible to charge far beyond the rates at present allowed.

Mr. BECK. I do not think so, because the word "actual" does not limit the word "necessary." The expenses allowed must be both "actual and necessary." But if we strike out the words "actual and," an inspector may claim anything that he says was "necessary." That is the fear I have.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have a telegraphic dispatch in my pocket from one of the officers of the Department saying precisely the same danger has been incurred in one of our bills now in conference, and requesting me to get the word "actual" out for that very reason.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw my objection.

The amendmendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment 121 of the Senate:

Strike out after the word "while" the words "any portion of;" so that it will read:

That none of the appropriations herein made shall be paid to any band of Indians while such band is at war with the United States or with the white citizens of any of the States and Territories.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me to be an unjust provision and ought to be striken out.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in that amendment and agree to strike out those words, deeming it unjust to leave the provision as it is.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment 122 of the Senate:

Insert the words:

Provided, That hereafter all bidders under any advertisement published by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for proposals for goods, supplies, transportation, &c., for and on account of the Indian service, whenever the value of the goods, supplies, &c., to be furnished, or the transportation to be performed, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, shall accompany their bids with a certified check or draft payable to the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon some United States depository or solvent national bank, which check or draft shall be 5 per cent. on the amount of the goods, supplies, transportation, &c., as aforesaid; and in case any such bidder, on being awarded a contract, shall fail to execute the same with good and sufficient sureties according to the terms on which such bid was made and accepted, such bidder shall forfeit the amount so deposited to the United States, and the same shall forthwith be paid into the Treasury of the United States; but if such contract shall be duly executed, as aforesaid, such draft or check so deposited shall be returned to the bidder.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is to prevent straw bids in the Indian Department, and the committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now move that a request be sent to the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to comply with the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 7) for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain.

The motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3535) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that all communication established, or that may hereafter be established, between the United States and any foreign country by means of telegraphic or magnetic lines or cables laid in any part thereof, in and over the waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit: First, the Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of any such line or cable that may by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever; secondly, citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nations; thirdly, the transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and thirdly, private dispatches; fourthly, the lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinbefore provided; fifthly, before extending and establishing any such line or cable in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by the act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the company, corporation, or party proposing to establish telegraphic communication.

The second section provides that subject to the foregoing conditions, stipulations, and reservations, and subject to such grants as have heretofore been made by Congress, to lay and maintain telegraphic cables from the shores of the United States, the consent of Congress is given to the laying and maintaining of telegraphic or magnetic lines or cables between the United States and foreign countries in and over the waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The third section provides that any person connected with any company engaged in the transmission of news to foreign countries who shall, contrary to his duty, disclose or in any way make known or intercept the contents of any message, or any part thereof, and any person who shall injure or destroy any cable or other property of the company, or interfere with the working, repair, or use of any cable or line connected with such cable, shall, upon conviction thereof, in any district court of the United States, or in any district court of the district in which such cable is landed, be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or both, at the discretion of the court; and the party injured thereby shall have a right of action for damages. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to prosecute all persons offending against any of the provisions of the act in any district court of the United States.

Mr. COX. I only wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that this same bill passed in this House during the last Congress. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs after a careful maturing of the matter. It interferes with no rights now existing, but only gives power to all companies generally, which Congress has the indisputable right to give. It is a general bill. The committee have also authorized me to report all private bills for charters adversely, which I will do when I get through with this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish to antagonize the bill. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York, however, whether under the provisions of this bill the telegraph companies may not extend their lines indefinitely upon the Government lands?

Mr. COX. No, sir; the bill was not intended to do anything of the kind. That was carefully guarded against. This is for ocean telegraphs only.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. COX also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that they do not pass, bills of the following titles; and the same were severally laid on the table:

The bill (H. R. No. 1249) to incorporate the Submarine Cable Printing Telegraph Company, and to promote and encourage telegraphic communication between American and foreign countries;

The bill (H. R. No. 3383) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia; and

The bill (H. R. No. 3398) to secure anti-monopoly ocean-cable communication between Europe, America, and Asia by W. Cornell Jewett and his associates.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were severally laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported adversely on the resolution referred to that committee requesting the Secretary of State to lay before the House the correspondence between the commander of the United States steamer Richmond, Captain Thomas Patterson, and the governor of Santiago de Cuba, in 1873, in reference to three American citizens who were on trial before a military court-martial at that place; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move that the rules be suspended to enable me to report, and the House to pass, a substitute (H. R. No. 3680) for the bill (H. R. No. 1565) heretofore reported by the Committee on War Claims relating to the commissioners of claims.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the time within which petitions for the allowance of claims may be presented to the commissioners of claims be, and hereby is, extended to the 4th day of July, 1875; and that all claims within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of claims which shall not be filed in their office on or before the 4th day of July, 1875, shall be, and hereby are, forever barred, and the commissioners shall not examine the same.

SEC. 2. That every petition or memorial for the allowance of a claim shall contain a statement by items of the several amounts claimed on account of the matters set forth in such petition or memorial, and the aggregate amount so claimed shall not thereafter be increased for any cause. Every such petition or memorial shall also contain an explicit statement of any payments already made by or in behalf of the United States on account of property taken, furnished, or used by the forces of the United States during the late rebellion, and a declaration that the said petition or memorial embraces every just item and cause of claim against the United States for property so taken, furnished, or used.

SEC. 3. That in lieu of the three agents now provided by law the said commissioners shall be authorized to employ five agents to investigate and report upon claims; and the said agents shall have power to administer oaths and take depositions; and, in addition to the clerks now authorized by law, the said commissioners may employ, each, one clerk, at a salary not exceeding $1,800 per annum.

SEC. 4. That whenever the commissioners are satisfied that a claim is fraudulent in whole or in part, or that the claimant is corruptly attempting to procure, by fraud, false evidence, or collusion, the allowance of a claim, in whole or in part, it shall be their duty to disallow the entire claim.

SEC. 5. That every person who knowingly and willfully swears falsely in any oath or affidavit which is or may be authorized by law, or in any oath taken or affidavit made, to be used as evidence in any court, "or before either House of Congress, or any committee or officer thereof," or before any officer or person acting under the authority of the Constitution or law, shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by fine not more than $2,000, or imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court. And in every case where such oath or affidavit is subscribed by the person making the same, proof of such fact shall be sufficient evidence of the official authority of the person before whom the same purports to be made or taken to administer and certify said oath or affidavit. All offenses heretofore committed may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner as if this act had not passed.

SEC. 6. That every person who procures, or endeavors to procure, or counsels or advises another to commit perjury, shall be punishable as if guilty of perjury.

SEC. 7. That the commissioners of claims shall receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims, growing out of the late war of the rebellion, as may be referred to them by either House of Congress, and said commissioners shall make report of their proceedings and of each claim considered by them, with the evidence in relation thereto and their conclusions of law and fact thereon, at the commencement of each session of Congress, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall lay the same before said House.

SEC. 8. That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, in addition to the commissioners of claims now authorized, two commissioners of claims, who shall continue in office until the 10th day March, 1877, with like power and duties and compensation as the commissioners of claims now in office. Any two commissioners, with the approval of the president of the board of commissioners, shall be competent to make a report, and the president of the board shall assign to the commissioners the claims to be by them examined, considered, and reported on.

SEC. 9. That the provisions of an act to prevent and punish frauds upon the Government of the United States, approved March 2, 1863, are extended and made applicable to a time of peace and to persons who shall make, or cause to be made or presented, to the commissioners of claims, or to either House of Congress, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any Department or officer thereof, or any evidence in support thereof; and if any person shall fraudulently withdraw or abstract from the files of said commissioners, or from the files of either House of Congress, or of any committee thereof, any document or evidence, every person so offending shall suffer the penalties and be liable to punishment as in said act provided.

SEC. 10. That every petition presented to either House of Congress for the payment of claims may be verified by oath or affidavit.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the chairman of the committee to yield for a motion to strike out the eighth section, originally numbered section 10. The Committee on War Claims were not unanimous in regard to that section, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBB] had a substitute for it prepared.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not yield for any amendment. The bill is the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is a dispute as to whether this bill is the report of the committee. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] states that it is not. That is a dispute which should never be on the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I stated that the committee were not unanimous in regard to the eighth section.

The SPEAKER. The unanimity of committees is a subject the House has nothing to do with. The report of a majority of the committee is the report of the committee.

Mr. KILLINGER. I ask that the eighth section be again read.

The eighth section was again read.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, there were ayes 85, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I again ask the chairman of the committee to yield to me for a motion to strike out the eighth section.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope that will not be done. It is important for the interests of the Treasury that these claims be examined. Unless this provision is made we shall lose $5,000,000.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The policy of the bill is to increase the demands on the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. If it was all for New York there would be no objection to it.

Mr. CROOKE. I call for the yeas and nays on the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first order a division by tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LAWRENCE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. CROOKE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 130, noes 22.

Mr. MERRIAM. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 12; not a sufficient number.

So the rules were suspended, (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative,) and the bill was passed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT CLEVELAND.

Mr. PARSONS. I move that the rules be suspended and that a bill authorizing the lease of the marine hospital and grounds at Cleveland, Ohio, to the city of Cleveland be passed. This is the bill (H. R. No. 1927) reported by the Committee on Commerce, with amendments suggested by the Secretary of Treasury. I ask that the bill be first read as reported by the committee and that then the amendments of the Secretary of the Treasury be read, and also letters from the late Secretary of the Treasury and the present Secretary in relation to it.

Mr. FIELD. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. SPEER. The House has already refused once this session to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. PARSONS. The House did so under a misapprehension.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into a written contract, on behalf of the United States, with the mayor and common council of the city of Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, providing for a lease of the Government marine hospital and grounds at Cleveland to the city of Cleveland, aforesaid, at and for the period of ninety-nine years, at the nominal rent of one dollar per year, to be paid to the United States by said city; and said lease shall provide that said marine hospital and grounds shall be used during said lease as a general hospital and only for hospital purposes. All sick and disabled seamen and sailors shall be admitted into said hospital in the same manner as is now or may be provided by law for admission into the marine hospitals of the United States; and for the care, board, and medical treatment of said sailors and seamen the United States shall pay the city of Cleveland at the rate of fifty cents per day each, payable quarterly at the office of the district collector of the city of Cleveland. The city of Cleveland shall bind itself to keep said building and grounds in good repair and condition during the continuance of said lease; and at any time, on the failure of the city of Cleveland to perform any of the covenants of said lease or to provide properly, in accordance with law, for the care and attendance of such sailors and seamen as aforesaid, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall make complaint of the same to the United States district judge of Northern Ohio, who shall hear and examine said complaint, and if the same be found true in law and fact, he shall cancel said lease on the part of the Government of the United States, and order the said marine hospital and grounds to be placed, without delay, in the custody and control of the United States. And the city of Cleveland is hereby authorized to extend Summit street across and through the northerly line of the lands owned by the United States and used for marine-hospital purposes as aforesaid.

The amendments were also read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Ohio," insert the following:
If said officers are legally competent as parties to such contract.
After the word "purposes," in line 13, insert these words:
And in any changes in the construction or arrangement of said building and grounds, or in the event of the erection of a new building or buildings for hospital purposes on said grounds during the continuance of said lease, the plans for such changes and new building shall be submitted to and shall be made in accordance with the approval of the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service.
Transpose and amend the phrase "in accordance with law," in line 25, so as that it shall come in after the word "aforesaid," in line 26, and read as follows:
In accordance with the law or laws, rules and regulations governing the marine-hospital service of the United States.

Mr. FIELD. I make the point of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The point of order cannot be entertained. The motion is to suspend the rules.

Mr. PARSONS. I now ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

Mr. FIELD. I object to debate.

Mr. PARSONS. I move that the rules be suspended in order that the letter may be read.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded and the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof.)

The Clerk read the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 4th instant, concerning the proposed lease to the city of Cleveland of the marine hospital and grounds at that place.

I have examined the bill and the report of your committee on the subject, and believing this action to be in accordance with the views expressed in my annual report, I beg to recommend the passage of the bill as calculated to subserve the best interests of the invalid sailor at that port, as well as of the Government in relation to the property.

If the condition of the bill is such as to admit of amendment I should like to suggest the propriety of adding the sentence interlined in the copy herewith returned with the object of securing, in any change of the present building or in the construction of a new one, the supervision of the proper officer of the Department, as was done in the act for a new hospital at New Orleans, (17 Statutes, 511.)

I am sir, your obedient servant,

WM. A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. C. PARSONS, M. C.,
Forty-third Congress.

Mr. PARSONS. There is a letter from the present Secretary of the Treasury supplementary to that, which I should also like to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1874.

SIR: In acknowledging the receipt of your communication of this date, asking my concurrence with the action of my predecessor concerning the proposed lease to the city of Cleveland, Ohio, of the United States marine hospital and grounds at that place, I beg to suggest the propriety of the following amendments to the bill you submit:

1. The introduction of such phrase in connection with the lessees as will avoid making it compulsory upon the Secretary to enter into contract with parties who may or may not have proper authority.
2. A change of the copulative conjunction "and," in line 25, to the disjunctive or.
3. The addition of a clause which will prevent discrimination against marine patients in the treatment in said hospital.

With these changes, in addition to that already proposed, and, as I understand, accepted by you, memoranda of which will be found upon the copy of the bill herewith returned, I take pleasure in renewing the former recommendation of its passage.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. C. PARSONS, M. C.,
Forty-third Congress.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish to say that this comes unanimously from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FIELD. This bill proposes to give half a million dollars' worth of property for a dollar a year for ninety-nine years, and I look upon it as a swindle.

Mr. PARSONS. Now I want a moment to reply to the gentleman from Michigan. My constituents——

Loud cries of "Object!" and "Order!"

The SPEAKER. When debate is objected to gentlemen must not insist on proceeding.

Mr. CONGER. I want to say that the statement of my colleague——

Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. The Chair has permitted an unfair statement to be made by my colleague from Michigan, and it is proper that an answer to it should be made here or that it should be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If all words spoken out of order were stricken from the RECORD it would be materially reduced in bulk.

Mr. PARSONS. Well, I ask unanimous consent to say a single word in regard to this matter.

Loud cries of "Object!"

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was taken on suspending the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 80, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PARSONS and Mr. FIELD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 64.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

THE DELEGATE FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the following preamble and resolution be adopted:

Whereas on the 12th day of May last a resolution was passed by this House instructing the Committee on Elections to investigate certain charges against the sitting Delegate from the Territory of Utah, GEORGE Q. CANNON, and report the result of such investigation to this House: Therefore,

Resolved, That said committee be, and is hereby, directed to report to this House the result of such investigation on Saturday of this week, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that the minority report of such committee, if any, be submitted at the same time.

Mr. SPEER. That is a very extraordinary proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object, if it will interfere with appropriation bills.

On seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. BURROWS and Mr. SPEER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 77.

So the motion was not seconded.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I desire to amend the resolution so that the committee shall report on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I move that the rules be suspended and a bill passed directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity for a public building at Brooklyn, New York.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress, at the beginning of the next session, whether the present needs of the Government require the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, and the estimated cost of the same, including the site.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I will say that the object of this bill is to inaugurate a movement with a view to the erection of a public building in the third city of the Union, a city that has paid $40,000,000 of taxes during the last ten years, and which paid over $4,000,000 last year. We merely want the Secretary of the Treasury to say whether a public building is necessary at that place or not.

On seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York, and Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 51.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was then put upon suspending the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 71.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

EVENING SESSION FOR COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS, ETC.

Mr. RUSK. I ask unanimous consent that there be a session this evening, commencing at half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of considering reports from the committee on Invalid Pensions to be then made, and also such bills from that committee as may now be upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask also that reports from the Committee on War Claims may be considered this evening.

Mr. RUSK. I must object, unless such reports are submitted after the Committee on Invalid Pensions have completed the work which they have.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I desire to say one word. Of course I have no objection to the Committee on Invalid Pensions having the time which they ask. But I had intended to ask the House some time before the close of this session to allow the various committees to be called for reports of a private nature, to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] should name such a time when that may be done.

Mr. RUSK. After the Committee on Invalid Pensions are through with their business I have no objection to any other committee occupying the time of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Then I will ask that after the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall have concluded their reports this evening it may be in order to call the committees for reports of a private nature for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. No action whatever to be taken upon them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman to mean for reference only to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. That is what I mean.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, by unanimous consent, submitted a report upon sundry memorials and charges in relation to alleged irregularities in the conduct of the United States officers connected with the western judicial district of Arkansas, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report be laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

SUGG FORT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, moved that the rules be suspended and a joint resolution passed providing that the Commissary-General shall have and exercise jurisdiction over the claim of Sugg Fort, of the State of Tennessee, for commissary stores furnished and used by the Federal Army; that said Commissary-General shall examine said claim, and award such amount as he may deem just and right in the premises, and the amount, if any, that he shall find due to said Fort shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and that the said Commissary-General shall receive all papers and proofs now on file with said claim, and give them such weight as he shall deem and believe they are entitled to as evidence in the case.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is that the report of any committee? If not, it seems to me we should not pass it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. Why not?

Mr. GARFIELD. Why? That is the question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. This claimant merely asks that the Commissary-General shall have jurisdiction over his claim.

Mr. BECK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is, whether this is reported from any committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not the report of a committee.

Mr. BECK. Then I must object to private claims being put through in this way.

The motion to suspend the rules was not seconded upon a division—ayes 23, noes not counted.

DES MOINES RIVER LAND GRANT, IOWA.

Mr. ORR. I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the House bill No. 1142, entitled "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to indemnify the holders of pre-emption and homestead certificates and certificates of entry and patents upon lands in Iowa within the so-called Des Moines River grant on account of failure of titles, and to procure a relinquishment of the paramount titles to the United States.

Mr. BECK. Is that the report of a committee?

Mr. ORR. The Committee on the Public Lands have unanimously reported this bill, which is now in Committee of the Whole, and the report accompanying the bill is printed and has been upon the tables of members for two months.

Mr. BECK. Is the gentleman authorized by the committee to ask for the passage of this resolution?

Mr. ORR. I am. We have for a long time endeavored to get this question up for consideration. I am willing to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr. KASSON. Or to one hour.

Mr. ORR. It is necessary, of course, to make some statement in regard to the bill.

Mr. BECK. I am only endeavoring to ascertain whether committees are to be allowed to report, or the time of the House taken up by propositions from individual members.

The question was taken upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ORR and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 101, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution adopted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee by order of the House will now proceed to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to indemnify the holders of pre-emption and homestead certificates and certificates of entry and patents upon lands in Iowa within the so-called Des Moines River grant on account of failure of titles, and to procure a relinquishment of the paramount titles to the United States.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that the sum of $404,228, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is thereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of securing a relinquishment of the title to the lands lying north of the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, which may be held by the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, or persons claiming title under it adversely to persons holding said lands, either by entry or under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, in accordance with the report of the commissioners appointed by the President of the United States, under the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to authorize the President to ascertain the value of certain lands in the State of Iowa, north of the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River, held by settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States.

The second section provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall require the persons whose names are embraced in the report of said commissioners, or the persons who may be found by examination to be entitled to the benefits of the act by reason of the failure of title to the several parcels of land embraced in said report, to furnish proof of the character of the claim or title to each of said parcels of land; and when such proof shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the party making the same has complied, so far as it was in his or her power to do, with the laws and regulations for the acquisition of lands of the public domain, and under which the said parties would in the absence of any conflicting claim be entitled to receive an absolute title thereto, he shall cause to be paid a sum not to exceed in amount the appraised value thereof, to the owners in cases where a relinquishment to the United States of their title can be procured for that amount, but otherwise the same amount shall be paid to the persons entitling themselves to the same by making the proofs as aforesaid, taking the receipts of the said parties for the same, provided, that a patent duly issued in the regular form by the President of the United States shall be conclusive evidence of a compliance with the provisions of the section relating to proof; and provided further, that in making payments under the provisions of the act, in all cases where the Government price has not been paid by the purchasers at the time of or subsequent to the entry of the same, that amount shall be deducted from the amount at which such land is appraised by said commissioners, and payment, when made under the provisions of the act shall be only of the amount of such difference.

Mr. ORR. I have no disposition, Mr. Chairman, to occupy unnecessarily the time of the committee. I know the pressure which there is for the consideration of different measures now before the House, but it is necessary for me to make a short statement of the principles involved in this bill. Making that statement as short as I possibly can, I will then submit the question to a vote.

This bill is for the relief of about three hundred and fifty settlers in Iowa, who have purchased lands from the Government of the United States, some of them having occupied them for twenty years and some for less time, the terms of occupancy varying from five to twenty years. More than fifty of these settlers have patents for their lands, others have pre-emption certificates, and still others have homestead claims; all of which have been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States invalid, the court holding that the homes upon which these settlers reside are the property of what is called the Des Moines River Navigation Company.

One of the earliest grants of land made by Congress for purposes of internal improvement by the act approved August 8, 1846, entitled "An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory." (Statutes at Large, volume 9, page 77.)

This act was passed ostensibly in the interest of improvement, and was urged as a measure having for its object the development of a new and unsettled country. It contained nothing suggesting an inference of a purpose foreign to the plain provisions contained in it, and to all appearances it was properly guarded and ample to accomplish what its authors claimed, the making of the Des Moines River navigable from its mouth to the point where the Raccoon River empties into it. The donation was a large one and of sufficient value, but was made upon insufficient information as to the practicability of the proposed improvement, and was exhausted in demonstrating the fact that the object of the legislation could not be attained, and that any attempt to make that river a navigable watercourse was fruitless and chimerical.

The bill appropriated for that purpose a tract of land in alternate sections in a strip five miles wide on each side of the river, which runs through the heart of the Territory, and embracing an extent of lands unsurpassed in beauty and fertility, mostly covered with forests of valuable timber, and underlaid with rich deposits of coal.

Iowa was at that time an obscure and comparatively unknown Territory, and Congress in making this donation evidently did not appreciate the importance of its action nor the great value of the gift bestowed, nor the fact that this strip of land thus given away with so little ceremony would soon become the homes of a vast population

And as if to avoid further trouble and stop any vexations dispute about this seemingly valueless donation, a provision was inserted in the bill "that when the Territory should become a State the land granted should become the property of the State for the purposes contemplated in the act, and no other."

The bill was in four sections; the three last, being only directory, are unimportant. The first section states the designs and objects of the bill and makes the grant, and it is from the calamities which are the offspring of the ambiguities and obscure phraseology of this section that the people who have settled upon and bought the lands contained within this grant now seek through the pending bill to be delivered.

To make the history of this case as well as the remarks I intend to make more clearly understood, I quote from the act making the grant so much of the provision as contains the ambiguous language, the conflicting interpretations upon which resulted in a serious train of evils.

The act reads:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to said Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork (so-called) in said Territory, one equal moiety in alternate sections of the public lands, &c., in a strip five miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory.

The object of the bill is clearly defined to be to secure the improvement of the river from its mouth to a definite point, which is situated not more than half-way up the river from its mouth to the northern line of the State; and there can be no doubt that it was the intention of Congress to make the grant coextensive with the improvement to be made by it. But the wording of the law, so far as it relates to the selection of the lands, is left somewhat obscure.

That Congress intended only to grant lands as far up the river as the improvement was contemplated I think is evident from the fact that when the bill making the original grant was made the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was asked upon the effect of the proposed legislation, and he returned for his reply that it would grant lands only coextensive with the improvement, and made a statement of the number of acres it would take to satisfy the terms of the law, and this letter it is understood was quite influential in passing the bill. The Land Department maintained this construction after the law was passed, and in its instructions to the local land officers permitted no lands to be selected in satisfaction of said grant north of that point. But as the evils growing out of this grant have mainly been the result of legislation subsequent to the original act, it is only necessary to glance at the constructions placed upon the first act in order to obtain a correct idea of the complicated history of this singular case.

The grant was made while Iowa was a Territory, but later in the same year she was admitted into the Union as a State, and soon after her Legislature formally accepted the trust and appointed agents to select the lands, who, in the performance of their duties, followed the instructions of the department, and selected no lands above the limit of the proposed improvement.

This construction formed the basis of action both by the State and the United States for several years, and was undoubtedly the correct one. There being now no dispute about the extent of the grant, both the State and the Government having acquiesced in this construction, the lands above the admitted northern limit of the grant were thrown open to settlement, and on the 19th day of June, 1848, the President issued a proclamation ordering them into market, appointing the sale to take place on the 16th of the following October.

The fact that pre-emptions made upon these lands prior to the day of sale would hold them excluded from the operation of the sale, and the fact that these lands were among the best in the State, or in the entire West, being a belt of timber and coal lands, and of unsurpassed fertility, attracted to them a vast flood of settlers in search of homes, and they were rapidly filled up.

The settler who went upon an odd-numbered section felt as secure as the one who went upon an even section, and both were alike recognized by the Land Office and accorded and believed to be entitled to the same rights and in the enjoyment of the same departmental protection, and both in the same ignorance of the utter desolation in store for that section of country on account of the subsequent fatal change of construction and the congressional acts by which the grant was afterward spread over them, covering them with its blight.

Certificates of location were issued alike to claimants of the odd and the even sections, and they were allowed without distinction, pending the proclamation for the sale, to prove up and pay for their pre-emptions.

The Commissioner must, however, have entertained views inconsistent with his action in authorizing these lands to be proclaimed for sale, for it appears that previous to the proclamation and as early as the 23d of February, 1848, he had written to the secretary of the board of public works which had been organized by the State, reversing the former decision of his office and expressing his opinion that the grant extended to the northern line of the State, extending it thereby some two hundred miles above the point to which the former decision had limited it.

At once the board of public works, desirous of enlarging the grant to the utmost limit, sought a confirmation of this last decision and protested against the sale of any of the odd sections within the grant as thus extended and enlarged beyond its former supposed limits.

This protest, backed up and seconded at Washington by such influence as could be brought to bear, had the effect to procure a withdrawal of all the odd sections from the sale which had been already proclaimed, and also a decision from the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Robert J. Walker, confirming the construction last placed upon the law by the Commissioner, and sustaining the views of the protest made by the board of public works.

Commissioner Shields had at the time the grant was made estimated the number of acres granted at two hundred and sixty-one thousand, but under this more liberal construction the grant, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Congress made on the 11th day of January, 1849, which was two months in advance of the announcement by Secretary Walker of his decision, was estimated as nine hundred thousand acres.

Notwithstanding this change of decision announced by the Commissioner as early as February, 1848, no order was made withdrawing the lands from sale until June 1, 1849, more than a year after this change had been determined upon, during which time these lands were rapidly filling up with settlers.

This construction of the law was adhered to until the organization of the Interior Department, with Mr. Ewing as Secretary, and the transfer of the Land Bureau to that Department, and this question being submitted to him he reversed the decision of Mr. Walker, and the grant was again limited to the Raccoon Fork and made to conform to the limits of the improvement.

From this decision the beneficiaries of the grant appealed to the President, who referred it to the Attorney-General, Hon. Reverdy Johnson, who gave an opinion differing from that of Mr. Ewing; but before its publication the death of General Taylor caused the dissolution of the Cabinet and the retirement from office both of Mr. Ewing and Mr. Johnson, whose places were filled in the formation of a new one by Mr. Stuart as Secretary of the Interior and Mr. Crittenden as Attorney-General.

This question was submitted to Mr. Crittenden, and he, taking an opposite view to that of Mr. Johnson, decided that the grant only extended to the Raccoon Fork, but was overruled by the President and Cabinet, to whom the matter had been referred, which rendered a decision in favor of the claim of the State and reversing that made by Mr. Ewing. Following this action the Interior Department proceeded to certify the lands above the disputed point for the benefit of the improvement.

During all this time the State, through its board of public works, was endeavoring to prosecute this improvement, and did so until the year 1854, when she made a contract with the corporation called the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, but in that country more familiarly known as the River Company, as for convenience I shall hereafter designate it.

To this company the State was to convey the lands of this grant, and in return therefor it was to complete the improvement, estimated to cost $1,300,000.

The State ceased to have any interest in the grant except as trustee for the company and her natural desire to obtain the improvement intended, and the company became interested in the enlargement of the grant to the greatest possible extent and in performing the work for the least possible amount of money or in being exonerated from doing it at all, provided it could be still allowed to retain the consideration.

To the accomplishment of these several objects the energies of the company were thenceforth assiduously directed, and with abundant success, as the sequel will show.

Mr. Johnson, the late Attorney-General, who had expressed such liberal opinions as to the extent of the grant while in office, became the attorney of the company, and under his adroit management its affairs seem to have been conducted to the attainment of results which must have been highly gratifying to its stockholders.

Having obtained possession of the grant, the fulfillment of the conditions imposed occasioned the company but little concern, for it required less effort and expense to get relieved of the performance of them by congressional action than to perform them.

Of the fifty-two dams contemplated in this improvement only two were ever completed, and they in such a manner that they became an obstruction rather than a help to the navigation of the river; and when in 1856 Mr. McClelland, who had become Secretary of the Interior, refused to certify any more lands, the company declined to proceed with the work and effected a settlement with the State, confirming to it all the lands thus far certified, and establishing the basis upon which any legislation which might be obtained favorable to the State should inure to the benefit of the company.

In this settlement is foreshadowed the tactics of the company, which were to secure title to the lands, so far as certified, and obtain all the interest of the State resulting from any subsequent legislation, and transfer to other shoulders the burden of the improvement.

A railroad company had been organized to construct a road along this identical strip of land, which was willing to take the residue of the grant not already certified and deeded to the River Company, to aid in the construction of its road, and hence this settlement provided:

That if Congress shall permit a diversion of the lands of said Des Moines River grant, or the title thereto shall become vested in the State so as to become subject to grant, the said remaining lands, after the payment of all the liabilities as aforesaid, &c., shall be granted to the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad Company, to aid in the construction of a railroad up and along the Des Moines River.

This part of the agreement was upon the condition that Congress should assent to it, but it is not difficult to see what such assent would imply, or how the River Company should gain by it. It implied an abandonment of the improvement of the river, but gave the company all the lands thus far certified, amounting to over six hundred thousand acres, for the small amount of work it had done on it. It gave the company any possible interest the State might have in any future legislation of Congress touching this grant, and the power to use the name of the State to secure enactments for its own benefit. And thus unloaded of all liability imposed by the grant, it would be left free to enhance its own interest by any means its agents or attorneys might suggest, and to that end they for several years vascillated between Congress and the Legislature of the State, and finally secured the assent of Congress to this arrangement by an act passed July 12, 1862.

In the mean time, however, a new complication entered into this question, for on the 15th day of May, 1856, Congress granted lands to aid in the construction of four railroads through the State running from east to west, three of which passes through the river grant cutting it at right angles, since its general direction was from north to south.

The river grant was ten miles in width while the railroad grants were each fifteen miles in width, so that at the crossing of each a quantity of lands embraced within a rectangle ten by fifteen miles in extent was covered by both grants. At the time of the passage of this grant to the railroad companies those lands were all held by the Department to belong to the River Company, and its title was generally acquiesced in; but to remove all doubts a provision was inserted in the grants to the railroads, intended to expressly exclude them from the benefits of any claim to lands on their lines within the river grant, which reads:

> That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be, and the same is hereby, reserved to the United States from the operation of this act.

This provision was supposed to be a complete and ample protection to the title of the River Company, which had established an office and was selling and conveying these lands as fast as it could find purchasers and the Department had certified them.

The railroad companies, notwithstanding the provision above quoted, resolved to contest with the River Company the ownership of these lands so far as they fell within their respective grants, and a case was taken to the Supreme Court by the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company in an action in which Edwin C. Litchfield, a grantee of the River Company, was made a party, and the court decided that Litchfield had no title because the grant to the River Company, under which he claimed, did not extend above the Raccoon Fork.

This was the first judicial construction of the extent of this grant, and reversed the ruling of the Department under which these lands had been certified.

This would have been a finality of this question so far as the River Company is concerned, and a happy consummation so far as the settlers were interested, had the matter rested here and no subsequent legislation been sought or obtained in the matter.

The River Company, in obedience to this decision, ceased to pay taxes upon these lands or exercise any acts of ownership over them. And although the court did not pass upon the title of the railroad companies, yet its decision was so accepted and the lands were believed to have passed to them, and the Interior Department under this belief certified them to the railroads notwithstanding it had formerly certified them to the River Company.

Offices for the sale of these lands were established by the railroad companies, and many parties who had once bought their lands of the River Company now bought the same lands again of the railroad companies.

The fifteen-mile limit of the railroad grants did not cover the entire number of sections in the river grant, and there remained within it about seventy thousand acres which were not reached by the last grant. This land had been certified to the River Company and was not contested by the railroads, for it was outside of their limits, but the Supreme Court had decided that as it was not in the river grant it was improperly certified under it.

The first effort of this corporation was directed to the acquisition of this land and the attainment of such congressional action as would validate these certificates, so far as they did not conflict with those made to the railroad companies.

With this supposed intention and modestly disavowing any design beyond that, the company secured the passage by Congress in 1861 of a resolution entitled "A joint resolution to quit-title to lands in the State of Iowa," intended by Congress to have the scope and effect above indicated, and the action was thought to be fair and equitable, inasmuch as it would, as far as Congress had the power, correct an error of the Department and enlarge the grant only by the addition of lands to which no other claim could attach. Its passage was urged on the ground that the State, in the belief that she had the right to do so, had sold these lands to actual settlers, who were supposed to have occupied them as purchasers of the State and whose failure of title would be cured by this action of confirmation to the State, and in order to remove any doubts as to its effect the resolution was worded so as to apply to lands held by "bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa," and these words were inserted, as the discussion on the passage of this resolution shows, for the protection of actual settlers.

But Congress acted upon insufficient as well as erroneous information, and the language inserted as a safeguard had an operation exactly the reverse of what was intended.

The State had not sold any of these lands to actual settlers, but had conveyed the entire grant so far as certified—and hence as far as this resolution would apply—to the River Company. If any settler occupied any part of this land he had bought it of the River Company or of the Government prior to its withdrawal from pre-emption entry, and if he had bought of the Government and his pre-emption was contested by the company this resolution did not protect him, but did protect bona fide purchasers from the State, of which there was but one, and that was the River Company.

But this resolution had a much wider scope or purpose than to secure the fragment of lands falling outside of the railroad grants. It had a design far beyond the penetration of the Congress which passed it; and while it seemed applicable only to the seventy thousand acres not in conflict, yet it actually relinquished to the State, for the use of its grantees, the entire grant, and cured the erroneous action of the Department in certifying them to the River Company. It made its title absolute to the lands not in contest, and as to the remainder dependent only upon such judicial decision or congressional action as might be secured to invalidate the claim of the railroad company to them. It conferred upon the State all interest the United States retained in this grant; and although based upon the supposition that the great majority of it had passed to the railroad companies, the application of the common-law rule, that an after-acquired title inures to the benefit of the grantee, would at once invest the River Company with an absolute title to all of it the moment that of the railroad company should be declared invalid.

In this supposed settlement of this question all parties appeared to acquiesce. The River Company ceased to assert any ownership over any of these lands inside of the railroad limits but, yielded to the claim of the adverse owners, ceased to pay taxes, or protect the timber or coal upon them. The railroad companies assumed this ownership, sold and conveyed the lands, and located towns upon them, and cut and used the timber upon them in the construction of their roads with that freedom which would very naturally result from a belief in an absolute and unquestioned ownership of them.

In the next year, 1862, this River Company again invoked Congress for more legislation on this question, but for what purpose or what reasons were urged for it does not appear, for the act was passed without debate. Its object was made apparent when afterward, in 1864, the Supreme Court passed upon its provisions. It extended the grant of 1846 so as to cover the entire belt of land up to the northern line of the State, and, except as to the rights of the cross-railroad companies, recognized the largest claim ever urged by the River Company as valid, and gave it the lands of which it had been deprived by the Supreme Court in the "Litchfield case." It gave the assent of Congress to the diversion of the uncertified portion of the grant to the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad Company, which had been prepared for and foreshadowed in the joint resolution of the State Legislature of 1858, before referred to. It gave the company 297,600 acres of land as indemnity for that amount certified to the railroad companies, but which would have otherwise inured to it by virtue of this enlargement of its original grant. And it provided indemnity for any possible reduction of the amount of its full claim by any cause whatsoever.

With the passage of this act the final preparation of the company for testing its rights and those of its adversaries was consummated, and re-enforced by this supplemental legislation it again went to the Supreme Court of the United States in a cause which brought directly in issue the validity of the title of the several railroad companies to lands certified as inuring under their several grants within the enlarged limits of the river grant where it was crossed by them.

A tract of land thus situated within the river grant was conveyed by the River Company to Samuel G. Walcott. The same tract was also within the grant to the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad and claimed by that company, and since the decision in the Litchfield case the latter claim had been by the Government recognized as valid, and on that theory Walcott brought suit against the River Company for breach of covenant and alleged failure of title. The court decided that there was no failure of title; that the several railroad companies took no title by virtue of the grant to them in 1856 to any lands within the limits of the Des Moines River grant.

In its review of the laws bearing on this question the court in this case disposes of the claim of the railroads upon these lands in a few sentences, and decides that the proviso in the act of 1856, to which I have heretofore alluded, operated to expressly exempt these lands from the provisions of that act, and further says:

> That in reading it in connection with the act of 1846 we think it difficult to resist the conclusion that Congress in the passage of this proviso had specially in their minds this previous grant.

For this decision the River Company had fully provided, as we have shown, by the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862. By the terms of the latter act the grant had been extended to the northern line of the State, and the construction upon the original grant of 1846 by the Supreme Court, limiting it to the Raccoon Fork, avoided. Under the joint resolution of 1861 the lands thus added to the original grant were confirmed to the State for the benefit of its bona fide purchasers, and the River Company alone occupied that relation.

The decision of the court in the Walcott case and the construction given by it to the several acts of Congress affecting this grant would no doubt have been final and would have been acquiesced in by the Department in the disposition of these lands had any question been raised during this whole controversy involving the rights of pre-emption or homestead claimants of any of them, or the right of any settler claiming under the Government; but no such case had yet been adjudicated, and in all this legislation the rights of settlers had been left singularly unprotected. It would seem after this decision that the duty of the Department would be plain in its further disposition of these lands, and so I concede it would, had not a new complication entered into it.

The State, grown tired of this vexatious dispute, which was harassing and likely to ruin many of its citizens, and the River Company, annoyed by the uncertain tenure by which it held its claim upon them and desirous to avoid the disposition to lawlessness manifested toward it by many settlers on the lands, concluded to bring the whole matter to a final arbitration and adjustment with the Government; and accordingly the State, prior to the decision in the Walcott case, had appointed an agent and given him power to proceed to Washington and make a final settlement with the Secretary of the Interior of this whole matter. He performed that duty and made with the Secretary of the Interior such a settlement, binding the State and through it the River Company, to take in full satisfaction of its claim under all the acts of Congress relating to this grant a stipulated amount of land amounting to 558,004 acres, of which the lands claimed by the railroad companies did not constitute any portion.

This land the settlement conceded to the railroad companies, and the Government gave, and the River Company accepted in lieu of it, an equal quantity in another part of the State.

This is the contingency for which the act of 1862 heretofore referred to had so shrewdly provided.

This settlement was ratified by the Government through the Secretary of the Interior, by the Legislature of the State, and agreed to by the company.

Each party having taken every step necessary to make the contract binding and by it the River Company having solemnly relinquished its claim to all the land involved in this controversy, the whole contest was considered at an end. This settlement was made in May, 1866, and the Walcott decision was made at the December term of the same year.

Upon the announcement of this decision by the Supreme Court it became incumbent upon the Secretary of the Interior to again decide upon the status of the lands held by the railroad companies, whose titles under the decision had failed.

It was evident that the effect of the decision would have been to restore them back to the River Company's grant; but it, through the State, had just concluded a settlement by which it had agreed to a satisfaction of its entire claim by taking other lands for them, and hence in the opinion of the Secretary it was barred from making any claim it might have under the resolution of 1861 or the act of 1862; and he decided that they became a part of the public domain and subject to homestead and pre-emption settlement.

Persons holding pre-emptions upon some of these lands desiring to prove up and obtain patents for them presented themselves at the local land offices and were allowed to do so, and on appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Browning, the pre-emptions were held good and the tracts ordered patented. Following this the Secretary of the Interior ordered the local land officers to admit pre-emption and homestead applications upon these lands, and upon being soon after notified that the River Company had enjoined them from carrying out the order of the Secretary, he ordered them to disregard the injunction and continue to receive the applications. The Secretary, confident of the correctness of his position, adhered firmly to his order allowing these lands to be taken up by settlers, and it was in obedience to the instructions at this time issued that the majority of the claims were made which afterward proved invalid, and for the failure of which relief is sought by the pending bill. These entries were all taken in the usual way and allowed by the authorized officers of the Government who acted under the mandatory order of the Secretary of the Interior, and the purchasers of them complied with every requirement the law imposed to perfect their entries.

Although the Supreme Court had made two decisions upon questions arising out of this grant, in neither of them had the validity of a title to a settler derived under a pre-emption entry or a direct purchase from the Government been involved.

In the case of Hannah Riley vs. William B. Welles, which was tried at the December term, 1869, the court held the title of the company good against the plaintiff, who had derived her title by a pre-emption which had been proved up and patented to her by the department. In this case the court disregarded the settlement made between the Government and the State and gave the company the lands in place, although it had previously taken other lands as indemnity for them. It held the title of the company absolute against all classes of claimants, and in the several cases which followed this one the same positions were maintained and reiterated. Under this ruling all entries in conflict with the grant to the River Company have been vacated and the lands passed to that company. The patents which had been issued to settlers have been canceled.

These lands are all occupied by settlers who have spent years in their improvement and the erection of comfortable houses as homes for their families. Actuated by the belief that they were secure in their occupancy and their titles were perfect, they have devoted themselves more to their permanent improvement than to cultivation for immediate profit. Decrees have been rendered against all of them, and notices served informing them that writs will soon issue for their forcible ejectment from them. This decision has been followed in the several cases upon which the Supreme Court has since passed, but it was not until the last term of the court that all hope of getting it reversed was entirely abandoned by the settlers; but this same question having now been so often decided, it would seem useless to expect relief through that means. It is in my opinion useless to expect that an opinion so often reiterated by the court will ever be changed; but these unfortunate settlers must submit to be driven from their homes or purchase them of the River Company, which, for want of means, a majority of them are utterly unable to do.

These persons, as shown by Executive Document No. 25, of this session, are all actual residents upon the lands they claim, who have made their entries in good faith, and strictly in compliance with the regulations and decisions of the Interior Department. They hold the patents or certificates of the Government containing its promise to give to each of them a title to the land he claims. That promise the Government has now no power to fulfill for the reason that the Supreme Court says that the lands which she sold to the settlers she had already granted away to another.

The question now presented by this bill is whether the Government will in some measure protect the persons who hold her violated promises and upon which they have so long relied. The errors of which these people were the victims were not theirs, for they have made no claim not sanctioned by the Land Department, but were those of Congress or the officers whose duty it was to execute its laws.

Had the act of 1861 never been passed the lands under the decision in the Litchfield case could never have gone to the River Company, and had not the act of 1862 been passed the grant would have been forever limited by that decision so as not to include these lands. And whether Secretary Browning did or did not err in giving validity to the settlement to which the company had agreed is not a question now necessary to discuss, for he was overruled by the tribunal of last resort, which seems to have given no consideration to it, but in violation of it gave the company the lands they had relinquished.

Had the errors committed by Congress ended here the Government might still have retained out of this grant enough to remunerate these settlers for the homes they had lost, for this grant was not yet all beyond reach.

It will be remembered that the company had taken under the settlement indemnity for the lands it had relinquished to the contesting railroad companies, and afterward under the Walcott decision it obtained the lands in place, and it became apparent that it could not hold both without additional legislation. The attorneys of the company proved equal to the emergency and secured the desired congressional action, the effect of which was to give the company the last acre of the land, including the indemnity, and leave the settlers nothing out of which any protection might be derived for them.

At the close of the Forty-first Congress a bill prepared by them was passed which no doubt owed its passage to its deceptive title. It has been said that we use language for the purpose of concealing our ideas, but I am of the opinion, derived from a study of the legislation in this case, that it can be with the same propriety said that titles are given to bills for the purpose of concealing their objects or intentions. It was entitled "An act confirming the title to certain lands."

I do not believe a single member of the House understood the import of that bill, but all understood that it was merely to correct an error of the Department. Its effect was to give the company the two hundred and ninety-seven thousand acres of land certified to it as indemnity for that much land it had relinquished after the relinquished land had been given to it by the decision of the court, or in other words it gave the company the lands in place, and the indemnity also. It gave the company six hundred thousand acres of land, and at the same time ratified its agreement to take in full satisfaction half that amount. The Supreme Court was soon afterward called upon to put a construction upon this act, in a cause decided at the December term, 1872, known as the Homestead case, in which Justice Davis says:

> Although the ratification of the adjustment and the grant to the Valley road would seem to be inconsistent acts, yet Congress with full knowledge on the subject, on the 3d of March, 1871, confirmed the title to the State and its grantee.

Continues Mr. Davis:

> Congress therefore, with full information that the State of Iowa was not entitled to these indemnity lands by reason of any previous legislation, thought proper nevertheless to give them to the State.

With this act ends a long series of legislative acts and departmental and judicial decisions, which combined have operated to give away over one million acres of the best lands in Iowa, receiving what proved in the end to be no consideration whatever, and to include among them those lands which the Government has sold and patented or certified to actual settlers, and in all these many transactions this class of persons seems to have been overlooked and forgotten.

To secure justice to these settlers is the object of this bill. They have occupied these lands under the solemn sanction of the General Land Office, from which many of them have received patents in due form. Upon these patents and certificates they have relied for years, and believing themselves protected by them they have invested all their means and spent all their labor in improving them. In these homes these people have their entire wealth, and as their titles have failed through no fault of theirs, it is the solemn duty of the Government to see that they shall not be driven from them.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. ORR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I simply wish to get a right understanding of this case in order to support it if I can and if it is shown to me that it is just. I want the gentleman to explain to the House how we can, as a deliberative body, after refusing yesterday to pay for land for which we have refused to pay for forty-four years, vote consistently to pay for those lands in reference to which there is not any more honest claim than in the other case. If the gentleman can explain that I hope he will.

Mr. ORR. I do not wish to discuss the Choctaw claims in connection with this matter. I do not know but the House have done many things which it ought not to have done.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The two matters have no connection with one another.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to yielding for a question, but I desire to occupy as little as possible of the time of the committee in presenting this case.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the bill contemplates the payment of a greater sum to these settlers than they have paid to the Government?

Mr. ORR. It does. I will come to that by and by, and expect to explain it. Now, I believe I have stated how these parties got into possession of these lands. They are on these lands with the authority of the Government. The accredited officers of the Government have allowed them to make these settlements. They have relied upon them for years; and not only that, but they relied upon them under the decision of officers who were supposed to know what they were deciding. I ask the committee if the different Secretaries of the Interior and the judges of the Supreme Court were to differ, as they have differed, in regard to whether this was Government land, or whether it belonged to the grant—I will ask how a settler, who never looks beyond his certificate, never looks beyond the office in which he secures his title, is to know whether the land is Government land or not? It is enough to say that the decision of Secretary Browning was overruled by the Supreme Court.

Mr. CONGER. Why do you not bring in a bill determining the rights of the settlers as against this navigation company?

Mr. ORR. Because the Supreme Court has decided that the title was absolute, and we cannot set aside a decision of the Supreme Court. The property belongs to the company, and it has been so decided by the Supreme Court. That decision I do not understand that this House has any authority to set aside. This House has authority to grant relief to these parties. And these parties having relied on the promise of the Government for fifteen years, it seems to me it would be unworthy of the Government of the United States, when these parties come and present their patents and ask their homes, to make to them the reply of Shylock, and say that it is not so nominated in the bond.

Now let me say a word as to the question propounded to me in regard to the amount of consideration. As a legal proposition I admit that these parties have not the kind of claim which would enable them to collect in a court of the United States what this bill gives them. As a legal question the man who entered his land at $1.25 per acre fifteen years ago could enforce the repayment to him of that $1.25. But what relief is that to a man who went in the prime of life on his land twenty years ago, paid his $1.25 per acre, improved it, and at the end of twenty years finds his patent void? What advantage is it to him that under such circumstances he should be allowed to go to the Treasury of the United States to draw his $200 for his quarter-section?

At the last session of Congress a bill was passed and became a law providing for the appointment by the President of a commission composed of three men, for the purpose of ascertaining the value, exclusive of improvements, of such tracts of land within this grant as had been sold to actual settlers whose titles had failed.

This commission was appointed in pursuance of this act, and have discharged the duty assigned them, and their report has been presented to the House, and is Executive Document No. 25.

They have faithfully performed the trust and scrupulously protected the interests of the Government, by placing upon the lands a moderate estimate as to its value as well as by excluding from their list all cases which were not of undoubted merit. The value they have in all cases placed below that at which they can be obtained from the owners.

Mr. WOODFORD. Does this propose to pay for the improvements as well as for the lands?

Mr. ORR. This does not include any payment for improvements. The commissioners were required to appraise the land exclusive of improvements. Of course if the parties were dispossessed they would have a right under the occupying claimants law of Iowa to recover for their improvements from the River Company; but we all know how it is. Here is a wealthy corporation, with attorneys employed by the year, while each settler is single-handed and alone, needs all his earnings for the improvement of his land, and a long litigation would mean ruin and bankruptcy to him.

Mr. BARBER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORR. Certainly.

Mr. BARBER. Suppose a homesteader has gone on there under a mistake of the land office and has acquired a homestead on these lands and has never paid the Government one dollar and has been ousted; is it right that the Government should now turn round and pay him the appraised value of that land, when they have never received one dollar from him?

Mr. ORR. Of course it is right. It is not a mere consideration of money. It makes very little difference whether a man paid $200 ten years ago or not. He is ousted from his home and he has relied on his homestead certificate, when he had that certificate from the register and receiver indorsed by the Commissioner of Public Lands, just as much as though he had paid $200 for his land.

Mr. KASSON. It is the Government perfecting a title, just as in the Mississippi cases.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Before the gentleman passes from that point I desire to ask him a question, and it is this; Does not this bill involve the establishment of the principle in our legislation that when the Government sells land to settlers for a nominal price, still it is called upon to make good the title to that land at any future time when that land may have increased in value or to pay the actual value of the land, and does the gentleman consider that a proper principle to establish? Suppose the Government sells land for $1.25 an acre, or the mere expense of surveying all the public lands throughout the entire unoccupied region of country; are we to accompany that sale, which is a substantial gift to the settler, with the principle that it is a warrantee deed, so that whenever in the future the title fails, although the value of the land has risen one hundred or a thousand fold, we are to pay the whole value at the time the man is ousted?

Mr. ORR. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] I have this to say, that this is a peculiar case. I have no doubt that most cases of conflict of title are settled by the Department Bureaus. But this is a case involving the claims of about three hundred and fifty settlers, who claim their titles all in the same way. Their hardships have been brought upon them by a mistake, not by a clerical mistake of the Department, but a mistake of law. The Secretaries of the Interior and the Commissioners of the General Land Office have differed in their constructions of the law, and the settlers having acted under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in one case, and that action having been reversed by other Commissioners, and finally by the Supreme Court of the United States, I have no hesitation in saying that in such cases it would be right to establish the precedent that these people should be paid as this bill proposes.

In the year 1802 Georgia ceded her territory situated in what is now the State of Mississippi to the United States. This cession included lands which the Legislature of Georgia had sold to several land companies for what appears to be a small consideration. These land companies sold the land to other parties. The State of Georgia afterward repealed the act by which the sale to these land companies was made, and it is said the more effectually to remove the evidence of it from the power of use, the records of the transaction were destroyed by fire drawn from heaven by means of a sun-glass.

The United States having accepted from the State of Georgia this territory, proceeded to dispose of it to those who desired to purchase these lands.

The Supreme Court in the case of Fletcher vs. Peck (7 Cranch, 166) held the grant by the State of Georgia to the land companies good, and that its repeal by the Legislature did not destroy the rights of innocent purchasers from them; and hence the title of those to whom the United States sold these lands failed, and Congress made an appropriation of $3,000,000 to procure a relinquishment of the title of claimants under the land companies.

This relief was based upon equitable and not upon purely legal grounds, as the report in that case will show.

Another precedent is furnished from Ohio, circumstances of which are these: When Virginia ceded to the United States her western territory she did so under the belief that the military warrants she had previously issued could all be located on the south side of the Ohio River, but provided that if these lands should prove insufficient to absorb all these warrants the residue of them should be located on lands between the Miami and Scioto Rivers in Ohio, which was set apart as a reservation for that purpose, and to determine the extent of this reservation a line, known as Ludlow's line, was run from the source of the Miami to the nearest point on the Scioto River. Subsequently a new boundary line of the reservation was established, known as Roberts's line, which ran from the source of one river to the source of the other, and included about fifty-five thousand acres more land than the former survey, a large portion of which the United States had sold to settlers.

The Supreme Court held in the case of Dodridge's Lessees vs. Thompson & Wright (9 Wheaton, 469) that the latter was the true boundary; that the settlers to whom the Government had sold these lands had no title. Congress made an appropriation May 26, 1830, which was used to purchase the superior title and procure a relinquishment to the United States of the same in favor of the settlers to whom she had sold them.

In this case the legal rule which only required the return of the purchase-money was not applied, but the value of the land exclusive of improvements was ascertained by a commission, and the assessment put by them upon the several tracts of land was paid, regardless of its original cost, in order that the covenants of the Government should remain unbroken with its own purchasers.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORR. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMALL. It is whether these settlers, for whom this relief is asked were upon these lands at the time this grant was made in 1846?

Mr. ORR. No; there were no settlers on the lands then.

Every consideration of equity, justice, and right dictates the passage of this bill. To do so is to make good the sacred promises of the Government now violated, and secure to over three hundred families the homes they have long thought their own. To refuse it is ruin and bankruptcy to them, and a lasting disgrace to the national honor.

During the examination of this bill by the committee the opinion of the late Commissioner of Public Lands was asked upon it, and I will close my remarks by sending to the Clerk's desk to be read a portion of his reply touching the propriety of the passage of this bill, a part of which I now ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A copy of the decision of Mr. Secretary Browning, dated May 9, 1868, in the case of Herbert Battin, was furnished Hon. Mr. ORR on the 10th instant, which will more fully explain the view entertained.

In 1869 the Supreme Court declared the patent issued to Hannah Riley, October 15, 1863, void, thus disposing of alleged pre-emption rights prior to the act of 1862; her settlement having commenced in 1855.

In 1871, March 3, Congress legalized the selection of indemnity taken by the State as recognized in the Harvey adjustment.

Under this act the Supreme Court, at the December term, 1872, has decided that the entire interest relating to all the lands has passed to the State.

Thus the settlers are without remedy to save their homes, which they have been practically invited by officers of the Government, acting in their official capacity, to rear upon these lands.

It would require long time and labor for me to follow the records, page by page, to ascertain the particulars of each individual case, with date of settlement, value of improvements, &c., as requested by you.

Congress has assigned to a proper commission power to make the inquiry upon the ground, and their report has been presented. From a hasty examination, I am satisfied the work has been faithfully performed.

The commissioners say: "The persons whose names we have listed either hold patents or the usual receipts from the local land offices at Fort Dodge and Des Moines, showing that they had filed their declaratory statements, and that the regular fees for the same had been paid to and accepted by the Government."

The bill before me provides for a still further examination into the merits of each case that shall be presented if it becomes a law. No probable opportunity for fraud seems to be afforded. In my opinion, some compensation is due these settlers for the material injury inflicted upon them by the agents of the Government.

What shall be the measure of this reparation is for Congress to determine. As you will see from the foregoing, this is a case upon which the most profound jurists of the country have differed in judgment. These settlers took the law from the Government officers after appeal to the highest departmental authority, and had a right to repose confidence in their decisions. Yet we have seen the courts steadily denying those conclusions, and in the final result the poor, unlearned settler is still further impoverished, and his labor is swallowed up by an enriched corporation.

Considering the fact that these settlers have acted in good faith, relying upon the decisions of the Government officers, who were supposed to know the law, I think they are entitled to relief; and although under ordinary circumstances and in cases involving less extreme and peculiar hardship, I would not be willing to recommend compensation in money for losses sustained by settlers upon lands which Congress granted away, I think in this instance, as the Government cannot perfect the titles which it undertook to confer upon these settlers without an appropriation of money, and as the settlers in going upon the lands had a right to believe that their titles would be perfected in the ordinary manner, and have invested their labor and means in improvements which they cannot abandon without ruinous loss, an exception to general rules and practice should be made in their favor, and therefore I approve and recommend the passage of the bill under consideration as the only practicable measure of relief under the circumstances and at this late day.

In the act of March 31, 1814, a precedent for reimbursement in money for failure of title to public lands was established. To what extent it has been followed in subsequent legislation I have not had time to ascertain by examination of succeeding statutes, that being a matter not necessarily connected with the administration of this office.

Very respectfully,

WILLIS DRUMMOND,
Commissioner.

Mr. ORR. I have nothing to add in relation to this bill except that it has received the entire approval of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House and the Commissioner of Public Lands.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I think it is worth our careful attention to determine whether we are establishing in this case a correct measure of damages. From some examination which I have given to this case I am not able to see but that the flaw in the title as claimed here has been established by the Supreme Court. The United States, in other words, has undertaken to give title to certain settlers to lands which were at the time supposed to be public lands, and that title has failed by reason of a grant which Congress itself had made prior to the time when these settlers supposed they were getting a title from the United States. The decision of the Supreme Court in unraveling this title, has established as a matter of law that certain settlers, who went upon lands which they had good reason to suppose were lands of the United States (because the officers of the United States, including the Department here at Washington so treated them) have no title to the lands they have occupied; that the Des Moines River Navigation Company really owns the land.

At the same time there is much in the history of this case which is worth considering. In the first place, this grant of land has been a very large one. The State of Iowa has received from the United States a large grant in addition to what it had deeded away to the Des Moines Navigation Company. And perhaps it is worth while to remember (although it is altogether too late to shed tears over the fact) that the grant of land did Congress no good so far as the navigation of the Des Moines River is concerned, notwithstanding something like five or six hundred thousand acres have been granted by the Government in connection with this improvement.

But the title to these lands having failed, and the Government being, as I think it is, fairly in fault in the matter, what should be the measure of damages? In other words, what, if anything, should the Government return to the settlers who have gone upon those lands and are now liable at any time to be dispossessed? I understand that the bill provides for allowing to them about ten dollars an acre; a little more possibly. The commission which was sent out to appraise these lands found that their present value was a little more than an average of ten dollars an acre, and this, as I understand, was irrespective of any buildings or improvements of that sort upon the lands.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman will permit me to make at this point a single statement, lest the House might be led into a misunderstanding. The commission reported the owners' price—the price at which the land could be bought from the owners—as $14.25 an acre.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. But I understand that the commission reported about ten dollars an acre as in their judgment the present value of the land, though the settlers in most cases ask considerably more.

Now, as I was about to remark, I do not understand that it has been the practice of the Government—certainly it has not been the uniform practice—to pay back to settlers under these or similar circumstances anything except the amount which the Government actually received from them. In this case it is proposed to pay to these settlers the present value of their lands—ten dollars an acre.

In determining this question it should be taken into consideration that the Des Moines River Navigation Company has now, I suppose, absolute title to these lands and can eject any of these settlers by bringing suit; so that while this money will go to the Des Moines River Navigation Company, it is really for the benefit of the settlers—for buying these lands over again from the Des Moines River Navigation Company. The appropriation in the bill, as I understand, is to pay this money to that company, provided it will release all claims to these lands and give them up to the settlers.

Now, sir, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ORR,] who I presume will speak upon this case still further, to this single point—the question of damages—how far the United States should go, in case of a failure of title like this, in reimbursing the settler, in indemnifying him or paying him damages? We hold in other cases that a person having a claim against the United States, though that claim is thirty years old, shall be paid no interest upon it. We only allow him what we adjudge to have been due to him at a certain time; and we strike out ruthlessly all interest. I suppose, therefore, that we should strike out all damages that may be claimed by reason of lapse of time, because interest is damage by reason of lapse of time. These settlers have had the use of this property for ten years, probably more. Settling upon these farms they have paid no rent; many of them have paid nothing at all except the mere entry fees, as I understand; they have not paid the $1.25 per acre as homestead settlers. They have had the use and occupation of the land from that time till the present; and now, when they are liable to be ousted, they ask that we pay them what the commissioners have appraised as the present value of the land.

This is a case not only important enough to be properly settled on its merits as involving a large amount of money, but also important because, whichever way we settle it, it will undoubtedly be drawn into a precedent. If we agree to pay these settlers ten dollars an acre for their lands, it will be taken as a precedent that hereafter in any case where the title granted by the United States has failed the Government shall hold itself liable to pay the present value of the land. If, on the other hand, we in this case, as in most other cases, pay to the parties merely what they have themselves paid into the Treasury, I suppose it will establish no new precedent. I am not prepared to say how I shall vote on that question if fairly presented. I wish only now to call attention to it.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman say he considers this as an original precedent?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have not had my attention called to precisely a similar case.

Mr. KASSON. This follows the precedent where $5,000,000 were appropriated. But I will take an opportunity to explain in reference to this matter, as my own constituents are interested.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. My object only is to call attention to this point, so that all the facts may be fully brought out.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a short time. It would be too tedious for me to enter into a discussion of all the history of these lands, or to undertake to state the various conflicting decisions made in regard to the extent of the land grant of 1846. It is sufficient for the purposes of the bill to say that here are a number of settlers who have been upon these lands for five, ten, fifteen, and some of them for twenty years, and who all went upon these lands upon the faith of the decision of the proper Department of the Government that they were public lands and that they could acquire a right to them by entry or by pre-emption or homesteading. They went upon them in good faith; they went upon them upon decisions of the proper authorities of the Government. They have lived there for a long period of time; they have raised their families there; they made their homes there; they have cultivated their farms, built their school-houses and churches; many of them have buried their children there.

After all this, Mr. Chairman, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States declared that they have no title to these lands, which they supposed they held by virtue of a valid patent from the Government of the United States in many cases, and in other cases by an equally valid certificate of homestead or pre-emption. That decision declared these lands to be the property of a corporation, holding under grant made by Congress. Now it is said, and I suppose it will not be questioned, that the Government owes to these people indemnity; that it is neither fair nor just nor equitable, the Government of the United States having allowed these people to go upon these lands, having issued patents and other evidences of title to them, having given them assurance that their titles were perfect, after having remained on these lands for this long series of years—I say it will be conceded that it is neither fair nor just nor equitable that the Government of the United States shall permit them to be ejected and driven from their homes without anything in the way of indemnity.

My friend from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD,] I have no doubt, has given this case a careful consideration. It is not questioned by him that it is the duty of the Government to respond to these people in damages. The only question he raises is one as to the measure of damages, how much shall be paid by the Government of the United States to indemnify these settlers. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the amount to be paid ought to be whatever is fair and reasonable as the actual damages these people have sustained. It will not do to say, sir, because they gave $1.25 per acre when they entered upon these lands, they should be turned out now on the repayment of $1.25 per acre even if you add 6 per cent. interest. That is no indemnity at all. We are bound to consider the fact that these people are living there in their homes and are by the fault of the United States about to be ejected. The courts of the country have issued writs of ejectment, and those writs on the 1st of August next will be executed by turning all these three hundred families out of doors unless this matter is adjusted by some such legislation as this in the meantime. The Government of the United States can afford to establish a precedent by doing what is right and just and equitable in a case like this, and that is to pay these people a fair valuation for their lands at this time.

The commissioners appraised these lands at their value, exclusive of improvements, for agricultural purposes only. Any gentleman who will examine the report will see these lands are actually and intrinsically worth a great deal more than the commissioners have allowed. Some are situated near large and flourishing towns and cities, and the valuation placed on them is only what they are worth for agricultural purposes; that is about ten dollars an acre. I apprehend every acre of these lands is worth at least that sum for that purpose. As a matter of justice and equity I say the fair amount to be paid to these people is what is necessary to indemnify them, to pay them for the loss and damage sustained by reason of the failure of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MCKEE. Is the gentleman willing that there shall be meted out to the Indians who have been ejected from their lands the same measure of justice?

Mr. MCCRARY. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." When the Indian question is up then will be the time to discuss it.

Mr. MCKEE. What is the difference between this case and the Choctaw case which was before the House yesterday?

Mr. MCCRARY. I do not consider that there is any parallel between the two cases. But however that may be, we are discussing this bill and not the Choctaw bill.

I say that this is a matter of equity. Congress has already taken pains to ascertain what is the reasonable amount to be paid. And beyond that my colleague has shown that the precedents are all in favor of the payment of the reasonable fair value at the time of the ejectment of the settlers in cases of this kind; and there have been a number of such cases. I hope the bill will pass as reported.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] whether any of these parties have been ejected from their homes?

Mr. MCCRARY. Several of them have been ejected. One, I believe, has been imprisoned for resisting, as he supposed in his ignorance he had a right to do, the officer who was turning him and his family out of their home.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Have not the mass of the settlers on those lands been able to compromise with the navigation company and remain on their lands?

Mr. MCCRARY. Not at all. All efforts at compromise have failed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is it expected that all those parties will have to leave their lands?

Mr. MCCRARY. They will have to leave their lands on the 1st of August. The writs are all issued, and they are notified to leave at that time.

The committee rose informally to receive a

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 7) for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain, asked a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. SHERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 3354) to legalize entries of public lands under the homestead laws in certain cases, with amendments in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1691) for the relief of Thomas Ridgway;

A bill (H. R. No. 2539) relinquishing the rights of the United States in certain lands in the State of Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 2653) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings;

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862;"

A bill (H. R. No. 3090) to authorize the issue of duplicate agricultural land scrip where the original has been lost or destroyed; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3672) authorizing the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home to sell the property belonging to the Soldiers' Home, situated at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky, and known as Harrodsburgh Springs property.

DES MOINES RIVER LAND GRANT.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed its session.

Mr. ORR. I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HERNDON.]

Mr. HERNDON. This is a very complicated case, and it is impossible to do more in the brief time I have than to make a simple statement of its condition. I was one of the sub-committee that made an investigation of the point at issue now presented in the bill. And I will say to the committee that I struggled very hard and more than once to fix the onus upon the State of Iowa to indemnify these settlers. But after a full and complete investigation of the whole subject in connection with the entire history of this case, which is very lengthy, I reached the conclusion that the State of Iowa is not bound to indemnify these settlers, nor can she be held responsible, but the onus is on the national Government to afford either the relief which they ask or some other relief which will be adequate to their losses.

This grant was made to the Des Moines Navigation Company on the 8th August, 1846, to aid in internal improvements; that is, it was made to the State of Iowa for this company. There never was any question in regard to the grant from the mouth of the river to the Raccoon Fork. But there has always been a conflict since 1848 in regard to the grant above Raccoon Fork and the Des Moines River. The State of Iowa always maintained that the grant extended to the source of the river, while the United States through its agents, through its officers in the Treasury Department which then had charge of the public lands, and through the Attorneys-General, from time to time decided both ways. There has been the greatest possible conflict of opinion on the part of these heads of Departments in regard to this grant. One Secretary of the Treasury would hold that it extended only to Raccoon Fork, and would then open the land to market within this grant above the Fork; and at these periods while it was thus opened for public entry the settlers would make entry upon the lands. The next Secretary that would come in perhaps would hold the very reverse, and withdraw these lands from public entry. This same question was referred by two or three Secretaries of the Treasury to the Attorneys-General; and Attorney-General Crittenden, Attorney-General Cushing, and Attorney-General Johnson, all decided this question and held various opinions. Now amid all this conflict of opinion on the part of the General Government this land was disposed of to these actual bona fide settlers. They entered upon it when it was in open market, when it was not withdrawn. The Government agent received their money for it and placed them in possession of it; and they have gone forward improving the lands and enhancing their value from that day to this.

It will be observed, then, that these parties went upon these lands in the most perfect good faith. It was not their fault that they came to be ousted from their lands afterward; it was the fault of the Government. The Government was responsible for the acts of its agents in this regard, for it actually received the money of the settlers.

In 1856 a grant was made by Congress to aid three railroad companies that passed across this grant, and then, for the first time, the question was raised and brought to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine to whom this grant above Raccoon Fork did belong. And in 1859 the Supreme Court held that the grant never extended above the Raccoon Fork, and that the land was open for settlement accordingly, as it had been placed in the market from 1848. During this period the State of Iowa and the General Government had made disposition of certain parts of this land, and in 1861 application was made to Congress, and a joint resolution was passed in order to quiet the titles to these lands about which the difficulty had arisen; and the whole debate upon the passage of that resolution will show that it was the clear intention of Congress then to award the title to these lands to the bona fide purchasers. The grant, be it remembered, was made to the State.

But prior to that time the State of Iowa had made a deed to the Des Moines Navigation Company of all their interest and title to this land, and under a statute which exists in Iowa the bona fide purchaser was considered by the courts to mean the Des Moines Navigation Company instead of the actual bona fide settlers on those lands, and therefore whatever title was conferred by that resolution went first to the State of Iowa, and then, by virtue of the deed which she had previously made, went to the Des Moines Navigation Company.

The act of 1862 was a piece of legislation of the same sort, with some additional extension, but it totally failed for like reasons. In 1871 another act was passed by this Congress, and notwithstanding that all these decisions were before the country, notwithstanding the previous legislation upon the subject, yet Congress, with all this fully understood, or supposed to be understood at the time, actually confirmed this grant to this company completely and fully, and made no provision whatever for the protection of these settlers. Thus what legislation had failed to do before, and what the conflicting opinions of the various departments of the Government had left an open question, was settled by virtue of that act, and the Supreme Court in 1872 so held, and by virtue of the previous deed made by the State of Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation Company, and by virtue of this legislation, whose aim seemed to be to quiet the title to the citizens who had gone upon the lands in good faith, but owing to its looseness and uncertainty failed to accomplish that end, the Government of the United States actually took away the rights of these citizens and conferred them upon the State of Iowa for the benefit of this navigation company.

The State of Iowa, mark you, was not responsible for this; she was not a party to it; she did not ask for it, but the United States by its own act confirmed all these lands to this company with all these facts before them. They thus shifted the onus from the State of Iowa and took the onus upon the General Government itself, and the responsibility of leaving these citizens without protection.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after all this legislation and these opinions what is the condition of these people? They have paid their money to the Government and went into possession of these lands; in some instances they have received their patents for the lands and the Supreme Court after reviewing all this legislation has passed upon their titles and decided that they have no titles whatever, and they are about now to be ejected under the decisions that have been made and to be turned out without a single dollar either for their lands or their improvements. They are not entitled under the decision of the commissioners to any pay for their improvements and cannot recover it. These people were placed in this condition by the Government, and unless the Government now comes to their relief they will be turned out unprotected and left to the mercy of the companies that now own the land. In this condition of things Congress appointed a commission to go upon the ground and to examine all of these lands, and to ascertain and report to Congress the value of the lands without the improvements. I have here the report of the commission. It shows that the total number of acres occupied by these persons is 39,549, and the average value which they have fixed upon the land outside of the improvements is $10.22 per acre, which amounts in all to $404,228.49. But you will observe that there is a marked difference between the average value fixed upon these lands by the commission and the amount which the citizens themselves claim the land to be worth. Some of these lands are estimated by the citizens to be worth as high as sixty-four dollars an acre, and the total value fixed upon these lands by the citizens themselves is $563,416.93; or an average of $14.25 per acre; making a difference against the citizens of $159,238.44. Thus if this report be adopted the citizens will lose $159,000 upon the land for which they have paid.

Now is it just or right to refuse them compensation for this loss? It has been asked upon this floor what will be done with the money; whether it will be paid directly to the citizens or will the Des Moines Navigation Company or any of these railroad companies get it. That certainly has nothing to do with the decision of the case, but I would say for the benefit of the committee that I understand it to be a fact that a majority, and in fact all but two of these citizens have already made an arrangement with the companies who own the lands, that if this amonnt is granted to them as compensation for their losses the companies will accept it, although it is less than the value of the lands by $159,000, and quiet the titles to them.

Thus the settlers, if this amount is granted to them, would be enabled to quiet their titles and still remain upon their lands which are worth, as shown by this report of the commissioners, $159,000 more than the value assessed by the commissioners. The railroad company and the Des Moines Navigation Company will lose by this arrangement $159,000 and the settlers will gain that amount. It would be very unjust to pay these settlers only the amount of money which they originally paid to the Government for these lands, because when they went into that country in 1848 it was a wild country, without inhabitants, and they have lived there almost a generation improving and enhancing the value of this land. It would be no compensation now to give them $1.25 an acre for this land.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HERNDON. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I would ask the gentleman if the committee have investigated this matter and found as a matter of law that this company, which I understand has the superior and better title, can oust these settlers now living there under color of title without paying them damages? If so, then I would like to know where the law came from.

Mr. HERNDON. In answer to that I would refer the gentleman to the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Litchfield case, and the case of the Iowa Homestead Company against the Des Moines Navigation Company. My understanding is that the court decided that the settlers had no title whatever; that they did not have even the color of title. While the question was not made as to whether they would be entitled to pay for their improvements, yet under that decision I would ask the House how they could get any compensation for their improvements.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does not the Iowa law provide that in cases of recovery all the valuable improvements shall be assessed, and the parties wrongfully in possession shall be entitled to the value of those improvements?

Mr. COTTON. That applies only to the Iowa State courts; and the Des Moines River Company always bring their suits in the Federal courts.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If I am not mistaken very much we have already passed a law of Congress providing that the same law shall apply to all these cases. We have provided the same thing which the Iowa statute provides, and under the law as it now stands I think these settlers must recover whatever improvements they have made.

Mr. HERNDON. I think I can answer the gentleman in two ways. I am not acquainted with the statute of Iowa in regard to giving compensation for improvements. I apprehend, however, that that applies only to lands owned by the State of Iowa. Under the inuring statutes of Iowa, and the joint resolutions of Congress in 1861 and 1862, it was decided by the Supreme Court that this grant was placed in exactly the same condition as if it had been made absolute in 1848. And if that grant in 1848 had been absolute, giving this entire quantity of land to the State of Iowa for the Des Moines Company, then any settler upon it could take no right whatever, and therefore would have no right to compensation for his improvements.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think if the gentleman will reflect a moment he will see that these settlers were in possession prior to the act to which he refers, and that the question is of prior entry in possession. No act of the Legislature can destroy or take away from them the right of claim under a prior entry made in good faith. If I am not very much mistaken it was urged in this House that the law of Congress applying the law of Iowa to cases of recovery and ejectment should be passed because there was a large quantity of land in the State of Iowa in this situation. I supposed it related to this very Des Moines land, that it was for the purpose of providing that where recovery was had by this company against these individual settlers they should have assessed in their favor the value of the improvements and betterments they had made. It seems to me there is no doubt about the power of the State to pass a law that in case of recovery and ejectment a party shall have assessed the value of the improvements he has made, whether they are on United States lands or not. Now that we have made the law of Congress the same as the law of Iowa, there can be no doubt that these parties are entitled to the value of their betterments.

Mr. HERNDON. The original grant was make under the law of 1846; the last grant was made in 1871. The decision of the court is that by virtue of this statute of Iowa the grantee of the State was placed in eactly the same condition as if the grant had orignally been made to extend above Raccoon Fork. These settlers have all settled upon this land since the original grant was made. Under the act by virtue of which the grant above Raccoon Fork inured to the State of Iowa no provision was made for these settlers. It was perfectly within the power of Congress when extending this grant to make provision for the settlers; but they failed to do it. And by reason of that failure the settlers are entirely without any remedy.

I will say that after a full and thorough examination of the whole subject I believe it is the solemn duty of this Government to compensate these settlers for the loss which they have sustained by virtue of these decisions of the court. The General Government must assume the responsibility from beginning to end. They sold the land to them, they put the parties in possession, and afterward granted the land away from them and left them without any remedy, unless we now give it to them.

Mr. McKEE. How much money did the United States receive for these thirty thousand acres?

Mr. HERNDON. I cannot say how much; but it was about $1.25 per acre.

Mr. McKEE. About $40,000. Now for that we are asked to pay $400,000. Is that the legal measure of damages?

Mr. HERNDON. In reply to the gentleman I cannot say that this is the exact measure of legal damages according to the decisions of the courts; but the gentleman will observe that the Government has placed these citizens in this condition, and that it is the policy of the Government not to despoil or ruin its citizens by its own act.

Mr. McKEE. Suppose you had done the same, what would be the measure of damages?

Mr. HERNDON. If I had conveyed land, giving a warrantee of title, and the title had failed, I would have been held liable for the purchase-money with interest.

Mr. SPEER. As I understand, the legal measure of damages in such a case is the return of the purchase-money with interest; but this case is put upon the ground of equity. It is claimed that the Government of the United States is equitably bound to pay to these settlers the present value of the lands. Now, if that position is true as a matter of equity, should not the settler according to the principles of equity be charged with the profits realized by him during all this time from the occupancy of the land?

Mr. HERNDON. As an offset to that, the amount proposed to be awarded here does not include any improvements whatever upon the lands. These citizens have made very extensive improvements and have greatly enhanced the value of the lands. But this compensation is only for the actual value of the land itself, exclusive of any improvements whatever.

I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I do not intend to detain the committee more than a very few minutes. I will state at the beginning that the Raccoon Fork is in my district and at my home. A few and a very few of the claimants reside in my district. I have for sixteen years been more or less acquainted with the most embarrassing and intricate State and national legislation touching these lands. I have known the combinations that these settlers have been obliged to make in order to defend themselves against the most persevering and constant attacks upon their claims, which they believed to be just; and if you were to appropriate to-day merely the amount of money that these men have earned by the sweat of their brows and paid to resist the assaults made upon their claims during these ten or fifteen years, it would go far toward relieving their distresses.

I wish it to be understood, Mr. Chairman, that we do not ask one dollar under this bill unless it is just that it should be paid; and I desire to state in a few words the grounds which we believe show the justice of the payment here proposed.

First, the question has been put to me by members, "Is there anybody speculating back of this bill?" I wish to answer publicly, as I have answered privately, that I neither know nor have ever heard of a solitary man in Iowa or out of it who has a dollar's interest in this bill, except the men residing on these farms. So much for the question of there being a "job" in this bill.

Secondly, let me say the bill itself provides that the arrangements, the payments, the receipts are to be between the Government on the one hand and the settlers on the other; there is to be no intervening party.

It is asked, "Are we not establishing a wrong precedent by this bill? Are we not indemnifying these settlers more than it is just to indemnify them?" First, as to the question of precedent. In Mississippi the Government bought up at a cost of $5,000,000 all the adverse titles in order to perfect the title to the honest settler. In Ohio certain lands were reserved between two rivers, one of which was longer than the other. In surveying the reserve the line was run straight from the head of the shorter river into the current of the longer. The courts afterward decided that the line should have been run from the sources of the two rivers. Thus there was a triangle which the Government of the United States prior to that decision thought it had the right to sell and did sell to settlers. When, upon the rendering of that decision, it was found that the settlers had no right to those lands, the Government appointed a commission, just as it has been done in this case, to ascertain the value of the lands; and it perfected the title to the settlers who had bought from the United States under a mistake on the part of the Government. Those two cases are sufficient to show that this case is not outside of the precedents.

Now, ought we to make this indemnity upon the basis of the appraised value of the land? I answer that we cannot properly apply the common-law rule between a warrantor in a deed and the warrantee. In reference to a case of that kind the common-law rule has been fixed. But the Government of the United States never professes to sell its lands for what they are worth. It gives them to promote settlement; it sells them at a low price to induce cultivation; and when the lands have been cultivated and improved, the parties who have suffered the trials and hardships and miseries of a frontier life have paid infinitely more for their land than the original price of $1.25 per acre. You have sought to encourage settlement on every acre of the public lands; and settling upon lands under that policy these men in early times have had to go twenty miles to a mill; they have been far away from schools, and churches, and physicians; they have in early times seen their children die for want of medical attention. But you now propose to make to them the mere reimbursement that a warrantor under a deed would make to the warrantee; you propose to pay them only $1.25 an acre with perhaps 6 per cent. interest.

I say this rule is positively inequitable and unjust. You do not hold your lands nor bestow them in that way. You did right in the Ohio case and you did right in the Mississippi case, because you recognized these early settlers had wrought a good work for the nation; had done more than pay the price per acre; that they were entitled to occupy their homes, and it was the duty of the United States to let them have them.

Hence I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is just, that it is equitable to pay them the actual value; not what it would cost them to buy from the other parties, but what the appraised value is. What will be the result? I beg gentlemen to observe for a moment that if the corporation to whom the courts have awarded the title say they will take the appraised value, the title may be perfected in that way. If they refuse to say that, then you allow the parties themselves to have the benefit of it as far as it goes; and if they can raise the sums from the earnings of their farms to get the title they will do it.

You will find, sir, that this has been carefully guarded. Every man's claim is before the House. Every forty, every eighty, every one hundred and sixty acre claim is before you. The manner of entry and purchase is put down, the date of it is put down, the appraised value is put down, and what the holders of the opposing titles claim should be paid is put down. There is no chance for suspicion, but in every case with one or two exceptions, as I hastily look over it, I find the appraised value is considerably less than what the other party claim.

Your object is not to indemnify them in money, but to enable them to occupy their homes. I beg gentlemen who ever were upon the frontier to remember what home means to those early settlers, who, without money, had nothing but their muscle to get their homes. It means more than your greenbacks and more than your gold. It means the only place they have on God's footstool to live. If you take that away from them they cannot buy as good a home in that region. The land is too high. If they go West, they will have to travel night and day and month after month before they can get a home that is one-half the value this is to them, even for the same money.

I believe in homesteads. I have fought for them before in Congress. I will fight for them while I have breath. I wish to ask every man in this House who appreciates the homestead law to look well at this question of indemnity and the central fact which is to preserve to these men their homes and not to pay money to them to buy another. But I do not wish to debate the question further.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman has presented a good reason why in my judgment the common-law rule of damages should not apply here. It has been said, as I understand, on the floor that these parties are asking the Government of the United States not merely for the value of the land exclusive of improvements, but the value of the land including the improvements.

Mr. KASSON. Let me answer, so every one may understand it. Under the act of March 3, 1873, creating a commission to ascertain the value of the lands provided, (I quote the words,) it was to ascertain the number of acres and by appraisement or otherwise the value thereof, excluding improvements. In the second place, let me answer still further by turning to the report of that commission. I find they make the declaration: "In making our appraisements we have only had reference to the value of such lands for purely agricultural purposes."

Mr. LAWRENCE. It should be said these occupants are entitled to pay for improvements by this improvement company before they can be turned out under the occupying claimant law. Hence it is proper an appraisement should be made of the value of the land, exclusive of the improvements.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say the great help given to these settlers in this way is to enable them to make up a purse with which they can pay. They have fought the company and well for years, but everybody knows this fight for improvements is an embarrassing one, and by this bill these settlers can make terms with this company.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Secretary Browning, in his communication of the 9th of May, 1868, which is incorporated in the report of the Committee on the Public Lands, made this statement. According to the adjustments made between the General Land Office and the State of Iowa these lands granted to the State were transferred afterward to the Des Moines Navigation Company. Secretary Browning says this:

> This adjustment was accepted by Josiah A. Harvey, "register of the State land office and commissioner on behalf of the State of Iowa," and approved by Mr. Secretary Harlan May 29, 1866. The 1,317.32 acres were subsequently selected and approved to the State. The State, by the deliberate and recorded admission of her authorized agents, has thus received all the lands to which she was entitled on account of the improvement of said river. The adjustment is conclusive and final.
> As the State received indemnity for this identical tract, her claim on behalf of the Des Moines Company must be rejected without regard to adverse claims.

Now the question I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa is this: If this statement is true that the State of Iowa in 1866 entered into this arrangement by which she received nearly two and a half million acres of land, and received those lands as an indemnity for these very lands that are the subject of this trouble—if such is the fact, the State receiving the indemnity lands for the lands which have been granted by the Government to these various parties, is it not very clear that while justice ought to be done to these parties and they ought to be fully indemnified for expenditures they have made on account of the purchase of the lands, ought not these expenditures to be incurred by the State of Iowa herself?

That is my first question. My second question is this: Does not all this trouble result from the legislation of 1862 and 1871? And did not all these acts by which this fraud was perpetrated through the agency of the Des Moines Navigation Company result from the action of the State of Iowa herself? Did she not bring the matter into Congress, and were not these acts passed at her instance? And now should the State of Iowa throw upon the General Government the results of those frauds against which she made no protest at the time?

Mr. KASSON. The questions of the gentleman from Indiana are very lengthy. I will endeavor to answer the last one first. This Des Moines Navigation Company was not in existence when the grant was originally made to the State of Iowa, which was then a Territory. It was a New York company, and we have been fighting that company from a period two or three years after the commencement of its operations down to the present time. I have myself drawn up two or three acts in successive General Assemblies of the State in endeavoring to get a settlement between the company and the State. It was a New York company organized for speculative purposes, and at its head was a leading democratic gentleman whose name would be familiar to the gentleman from Indiana were I to mention it. There is not an Iowa man in it.

Mr. ORR. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to know how it came about that when this grant was made to Iowa she made over the land to these land-sharks.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose it was all part of the same scheme; only they were not Iowa land-sharks, but foreign land-sharks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHANKS. I believe that a measure for the protection of these people enumerated in this bill ought to be passed. It is the brightest page in the history of any nation on which it can be written with truth that equal and exact justice has been done to all its people. Now, here is a case in which the Government has by its acts and also through the decisions of its Supreme Court induced a portion of its people to settle on these lands. And then by a subsequent decision of the same Supreme Court they have been driven off these lands and lost their homes. These citizens of the United States now come to the United States Government, which by its policy has wronged them, which at least by its act has brought them into danger of losing their labor and their property, and they ask the Government to give them redress in that in which its act has wronged them. For that I think that every American citizen and every Representative on this floor ought to stand and with one accord do justice to the people to whom our action has done injustice; so that either their money or their lands shall be given to these people.

I now wish to draw a comparison. I find on this floor to-day all the Representatives from the State of Iowa ably and efficiently doing their whole duty in the protection of these people who have in their State been wronged. I honor them for standing by their people and demanding that justice which has not been done to them. But I desire, as I said, to make a comparison. I will here remind the House that on yesterday, when the Choctaw claim was before the House, gentlemen who are full of anxiety for those whom they represent, and who have been wronged, did not remember that there was a time some years ago when the national Government took from a people (the Choctaws) who have no representatives on this floor or elsewhere in this Government over fourteen million acres of land, for which we have not paid them yet. And on yesterday, in the struggle upon this floor, they turned them away again as they had done so often and so heartlessly before, where they must stand uncared for and unprotected for God Almighty knows how long, as God Almighty and the records of this country only know how long such has been the case heretofore. I pity these poor Choctaw people, and I deplore the carelessness and coldness that work their wrongs.

Now, sir, I am in favor of the Government doing justice to every man, woman, and child in this country. And I hope, sir, that this may be a lesson to the delegation that advocates the claims of these white people of Iowa, when they find that other men, friends of a poor down-trodden red people, stand with them for these wronged white people; that while caring for those who are living, active American citizens, they will also stand by those who have no friends on this floor except in so far as they can make a draught upon a common humanity unknown to the law, only so far as they can appeal to that which comes from God into the hearts of men, not directed by statutes and only governed by just feeling. May the spirit of justice enter fully into the hearts of the whole people toward the Indian, so that in the administration of justice it may be equally open to all irrespective of condition.

I hope, sir, that this may be a lesson, and that those who to-day ask the favor of the Government and the protection for their people will not forget those who have none to speak for them on this floor. I am in favor of this measure because it is a matter of justice, and I am also in favor of a measure that will do justice to those Choctaws and other Indians who cannot demand it here as can and do these citizens of Iowa, by the many mouths that speak for their whole State on this floor as these gentlemen have spoken to-day.

Mr. ORR. I presume this matter has now been sufficiently discussed, and I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that motion is put, I desire to submit the following proposition:

Resolved, That the pending bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the same be recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands, with instructions to report a bill to repeal all laws and parts of laws granting the lands in question to the Des Moines Navigation Company, or affirming any grant thereof to said company, and confirming the titles in said lands to the persons to whom the same have been sold by the United States.

I desire to say a word in support of that proposition.

Mr. KASSON. Let me say to the gentleman that it would utterly destroy the chances of the settlers for relief.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall be met with the statement that we are bound to carry this grant into effect and that the settlers have got to be deprived of these lands, and that the Government of the United States or the State of Iowa must pay a large sum of money for the benefit of the settlers growing out of this transaction. But, sir, I hold in the first place that there is no contract impaired and no act done, by the repeal of this legislation subsequent to 1846, that is not entirely within the control and power of Congress. It is admitted that in the absence of the acts of 1856, 1861, 1862, and 1871, that independent of those various acts and joint resolutions, the title which the Government granted to these settlers would be a perfect and complete title, and that whatever right the Des Moines Navigation Company derives from the State of Iowa to those lands is the result of the fraudulent legislation subsequent to 1846. For one I am not willing by any vote of mine to deprive these settlers of any of their rights. On the contrary, I would make their title to these lands perfect, if it was in my power, and my proposition looks to that result. I know that under the land-grant policy there has been nothing but fraud and injustice from the beginning to the settlers, and that this has been the case to a great extent in the State of Iowa. An act was passed at the last session of Congress, under the pretense of quieting certain titles, which enabled the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company to commit great injustice upon the settlers, and an appeal is made to Congress to indemnify the unhappy settlers against the frauds of the railroad corporations sanctioned by the action of Congress. I do not know that it is fair to charge the State of Iowa with being responsible for the legislation of 1856, 1861, 1862, and 1871, by which these fraudulent land speculators in the State of New York seized upon these lands without consideration and appropriated them to their own use. I do not know that the State can be held responsible for it; but I do hold to this proposition, and I call the attention of the gentlemen from Iowa to it, that if Secretary Browning was correct, and this settlement was made in 1866 between the Federal Government and the State of Iowa by which the State received 1,346,000 acres of land or thereabouts as an indemnity in lieu of these very lands now the subject of this trouble, then the State should not in addition to that call upon us, after having received those lands, having received patents for them and appropriated them for her own use, and insist while she retains those lands that we shall indemnify the unfortunate settlers for the corrupt legislation which has been enacted since 1846.

Mr. McCRARY. I would inform my friend from Indiana of a fact he does not seem to be aware of. The State of Iowa does not retain an acre of those lands. The Supreme Court decided that the indemnity lands passed like the others into the hands of the Des Moines Navigation Company.

Mr. HOLMAN. But by the act of the State of Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. A previous act.

Mr. McCRARY. No; by an act of Congress, not by the State of Iowa.

Mr. HOLMAN. The grant, however, was made to the State of Iowa. Congress did not grant an acre of land to any corporation.

Mr. ORR. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana if the legislation of Congress of 1871 did not grant this indemnity land directly to the company, without any reference to the State of Iowa?

Mr. HOLMAN. Unfortunately, I am compelled to answer that question in the affirmative. But how did that act pass; was there a single voice from Iowa raised against it here? Did either the State of Iowa or any of the citizens of Iowa object to it? Sir, when a measure like that, which was purely local, came up here, if any member on the floor had interfered with the manner in which Iowa should dispose of the indemnity lands it would have been said that it was an impertinent interference with the local affairs of that State.

Mr. McCRARY. The act did not say that they were in lieu of these very lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say that if Secretary Browning was correct these lands were granted as compensation and indemnity for the lands in question in this bill.

Mr. ORR. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that that has very little to do with the question of indemnifying these settlers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to confine myself to the propositions I have submitted. I desire to see these settlers vindicated. I know that the remedy proposed by the pending bill is very partial. I feel assured that the remedy I propose, to enact a law repealing the acts passed since 1846 and affirming this act, will relieve the very trouble which the decisions of the Supreme Court present. They decided upon the authority of the legislation of 1856, 1861, and 1862. The Supreme Court was compelled to decide under those acts, which they believed to be the law, and under those decisions certain rights were secured to the Des Moines Navigation Company through the State of Iowa. With those laws repealed—and who will question the power of Congress to repeal them?—and with all this fraud unraveled, I assert that the rights of those settlers will be secured.

Now, I cannot be met by the statement that such legislation would be a violation of contracts. It is the performance of the highest obligation resting upon this Congress. We have been informed of the usual outcropping of these grants. They have been tainted with fraud in every step from beginning to end; and the moral obligation resting upon Congress is to repeal these laws and confirm the title to these lands to these settlers. And when the question shall reach the Supreme Court, as it is very proper it should, it will not be as to the power of Congress to pass such an act as I have indicated, for the power of Congress over the subject-matter is clear and manifest. I know that if the original legislation was right there would be a moral obligation upon Congress to allow it to stand, and let the ultimate results be reached, whoever might reap any benefit from that legislation. But when legislation is tainted with fraud from beginning to end, its repeal is demanded by the moral obligation resting upon Congress.

Mr. HERNDON. Have the courts of the country any authority or power to inquire into the fraud which the gentleman states was committed by the legislation of Congress referred to?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I think not; I think that is a question for Congress alone. I know that neither the Supreme Court nor any other judicial tribunal could inquire whether the acts of 1861 and 1862 were properly passed or not. Nor is it a judicial question for the Federal courts to decide whether Congress possessed the power to legislate on this subject or not, for that power is conceded. But I cannot be met with the statement that this would be an impairing of contracts, for happily no such restraint rests upon the Federal Legislature to prevent its undoing monstrous wrongs.

Mr. HERNDON. If patents have been issued for these lands under the act of 1871, could we now, by repealing that act, take away or cancel those patents?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we could, unquestionably; there is no limitation upon the power of Congress over the subject. If my friend could quote any provision of the Constitution which could possibly be construed to prevent any such exercise of power by Congress, I would like to hear it. I remember but one instance in which, not the Supreme Court, but a judge of the Supreme Court, has indulged in any question as to the constitutional power of Congress over such a subject. That was in regard to the legal-tender decision, when the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court intimated that there were moral considerations by which the Federal Legislature should be influenced by the provisions of the Constitution relating to the Legislatures of the States. But I know of no rule by which Congress, upon finding that fraud had been perpetrated under its laws, could not repeal those laws. I make this appeal to repeal this law, not simply in behalf of these unfortunate settlers, but also in behalf of the whole people of this country, and to vindicate our legislation against the taint of dishonest and fraudulent proceedings.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not insist upon his amendment. He has said many things with which I agree; I agree with nearly all he has said. I have nothing to say in extenuation or palliation of the different acts of Congress which have brought these settlers into this difficulty. But the House will see that his amendment proposes to set aside a decision of the Supreme Court by congressional legislation, and I suppose the House will agree with me that that cannot be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not to repeal a decision of the court, but to repeal the law under which those decisions were made.

Mr. POTTER. I want to say a single word, not so much with reference to the bill under discussion as with reference to the amendment and remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] It is undoubtedly true that fraud vitiates all contracts and invalidates all rights acquired through it. And whenever any legislation has been secured by fraud I will be found quite ready to join in passing efficient laws for the determination before some proper tribunal of the fact and the annulling of any rights claimed to arise by virtue of such fraudulent legislation.

But I beg for myself to say that nothing in the world seems to me to be so dangerous as for Congress to declare now or at any time that it is not absolutely bound to regard vested rights, or that it can proceed of its own volition or discretion to say that notwithstanding those rights have vested under its own legislation it will repeal that legislation. I do not myself believe that the provision in the Constitution of the United States which declares that no law shall be passed by any State impairing the obligations of contracts, was intended to express a principle applicable to States only. I believe the same principles apply to the action of the General Government also, and that the limitation was imposed upon the States only because they were claimed to possess all sovereign powers not yielded to the Federal Government; and that it was not imposed in terms on the Federal Government, because being a government of delegated powers and no such general power having been granted to it, except in respect of the passage of general bankrupt laws, no such restraint was necessary to protect the citizen. Why, as Hamilton said, was it necessary to express in the Constitution any limitation upon powers which had not been granted?

In the first legal-tender decision the Supreme Court of the United States declared distinctly in terms that Congress had no other power to impair the obligation of contracts. In the second decision upon that subject, the court has declared the reverse, but they limited that declaration to the subject-matter of Treasury notes under consideration. No Federal judge or court has declared, though I know the contrary is sometimes erroneously said of Judge Washington, that Congress was generally at liberty to disregard or override the obligation of contracts.

For myself, I believe in the doctrine as to the general limits of legislative powers in this country which the Supreme Court of the United States announced forty years ago in the Rhode Island case of Wilkinson vs. Leland, that vested rights were (except in the matter of bankruptcies) beyond the reach of any legislation; that it was against the fundamental principles of republican government where rights had become vested, to recall them by changes in legislation.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. You refer to the Dartmouth College case?

Mr. POTTER. No, sir; not now to the Dartmouth College case, but to the Rhode Island case, the case of Wilkinson, where it was claimed that because the royal charter of Rhode Island had never been followed by any constitution and there was therefore no express limitation upon the Legislature of that State, it was at liberty to take away vested rights as it pleased, except where prohibited by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman will allow me to call his attention to the sixth article of the amendments of the Constitution, which provides that "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." That is a restraint upon the power of Congress.

Mr. POTTER. I so regard it, and I have indeed so argued in the legal-tender cases, and further claimed there, as I was endeavoring to say, that it was, as the Supreme Court had held in the case of Wilkinson, against the spirit of republican government that any Legislature should possess power to take away the vested rights of its citizens at pleasure. But in addition to that I also maintained that there was in the article of amendments to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] has just called attention an express restriction, intended for no other purpose, (else why should it be there?) than to protect the vested rights of the citizen against the powers of Congress in respect of life, liberty, and private property; very broad terms, which may and should include, it seems to me, every right of the citizen.

For myself I say again that when Congress has been entrapped into legislation by fraud, there should be given to some proper tribunal the determination of the rights claimed under such legislation. But for the Congress to assume to take back legislation under which rights have vested because such legislation may have been in its belief unwise or fraudulent, is to my mind the assertion of a power in the last degree dangerous to the rights of individuals and which would lead to the most dangerous misgovernment and abuse.

"Liberty," said Mr. Webster with great force once, "consists in the limitations of government." No government which is absolute, whose powers vest in the discretion of the law-making power, which leaves the law-making power at liberty to do what it may deem best from time to time, can be a free government. And such an absolute government is never so dangerous as when it is a popular government. Government of the people is the best of all governments when, and only when it is limited so as to protect the inalienable rights of persons and when, it is localized so as to be government by the people—self government. I protest on all occasions against any unnecessary centralization of the powers of government, against depriving the people in the localities of the power to decide local affairs. Popular rule to be wise should be home rule. But equally do I protest against the assumption that this Federal Congress is a government of unlimited power, or that it is at liberty to disregard vested rights and destroy the obligation of contracts. The fathers who framed this Government forbade the power to the States, because they sought to preserve the rights of individuals. But the prohibition would have been worse than idle if by the same instrument they had conferred this dangerous power in the larger federal government they were creating. No such grant (except as to bankruptcies) can be found in the Constitution, and it would be foreign to their whole scheme of government to imply it.*

*NOTE BY MR. POTTER.—Wilkinson vs. Leland involved the validity of an act of the Legislature in the State of Rhode Island. It was claimed on the argument (Mr. Whipple and Mr. Wirt for the plaintiffs in error, Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Webster for the defendants in error) that the State of Rhode Island, having adopted no written constitution, its Legislature was without any limits except those prescribed

Mr. ORR. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is not debatable.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has moved that the committee rise.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. But nobody voted for that motion so far as I heard—at least on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion had not been put. The Chair is about to put the motion.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I understand that I have a right to propose an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Not while the motion that the committee rise is pending.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to indemnify the holders of pre-emption and homestead certificates and certificates of entry and patents upon lands in Iowa within the so-called Des Moines River grant on account of failure of titles, and to procure a relinquishment of the paramount titles to the United States; and had directed him to report that the committee had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ORR. I now move to suspend the rules so that the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole may be taken up and passed.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know whether this is a trick to prevent any amendments to this bill?

Mr. ORR. No; it is not.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire, then, to ask the Speaker——

The SPEAKER. It is a trick which only two-thirds of the House can perform.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I rose before the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole to offer an amendment.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman may offer his amendment. I have no objection to taking a vote upon it. I do not want to cut off the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Is it in order for me to offer an amendment at this time?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman [Mr. ORR] who moves to suspend the rules should include the amendment in his motion the amendment would be in order.

Mr. ORR. I cannot do that.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to amend the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Then I hope the House will vote down this proposition, as the gentleman will not allow an amendment to a bill appropriating so large an amount of money.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be in order for the gentleman from Iowa, if he sees fit, to move so to suspend the rules that a vote be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri and then on the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. That would bring the House to a vote on the amendment?

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa modifies his motion and moves that the rules be so suspended that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri may be voted on and that then the bill be put on its passage. This will give the gentleman from Missouri the advantage of submitting the adoption of the amendment to a majority vote, while a two-thirds vote will be required for the passage of the bill.

Mr. ORR. Then I would not like to assent to the proposition. I have not heard the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I will read it:

Whereas this claim appears to be just; but there being a doubt in the minds of some members whether the whole amount of money proposed to be appropriated will go to the settlers: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report to the House at its next session the actual cash value of these lands, so that an act can then be passed providing for the funding of the amount of such cash value, that it may be held by the Secretary of the Treasury for the benefit of said settlers.

Mr. ORR. A commission has already done that very thing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa declines to admit the amendment. The question is on seconding the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to suspend the rules and pass the bill; on which motion the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. PARKER, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. ORR.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 47.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question recurrrd on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. SPEER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 151, nays 71, not voting 67; as follows:

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I am directed by the select committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia to report a bill (H. R. No. 3681) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and to move that it be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I also submit from the same committee a report which I move be laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I now give notice that I will call up for consideration the bill which I have just reported at two o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SPEER. I hope the report of the select committee of their investigation into the affairs of the District of Columbia will be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will take up a whole RECORD.

Mr. SPEER. I withdraw my motion.

LANDS SOLD FOR DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. BECK. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up and passing at this time a bill (H. R No. 3628) for the relief of owners and purchasers of lands sold for direct taxes in insurrectionary States, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is thereby, empowered and directed, out of any money not otherwise appropriated by law, to pay to whomsoever shall be satisfactorily shown to him to be the owner or owners, his or their heirs or assigns or legal representatives, of any land sold for direct taxes under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, and that the people of Rhode Island had the power to authorize the Legislature to appoint a man a judge in his own cause or pass laws contrary to natural justice, so long as none of the prohibitions of that Constitution were violated. But Judge Story, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, declared that "in a government professing to regard the great rights of personal liberty and of property, and which is required to legislate in subordination to the general, laws of England it would not lightly be presumed that the great principles of Magna Charta were to be disregarded, or that the estates of its subjects were liable to be taken away without trial, without notice, and without offense. Even if such authority could be deemed to have been confided by the charter to the General Assembly of Rhode Island as an exercise of transcendental sovereignty before the Revolution, it can scarcely be imagined that that great event could have left the people of that State subjected to its uncontrolled and arbitrary exercise. That government can scarcely be deemed to be free where the rights of property are left solely dependent upon the will of a legislative body without any restraint. The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require that the rights of personal liberty and private property should be held sacred. At least no court of justice in this country would be warranted in assuming that the power to violate and disregard them, a power so repugnant to the common principles of justice and civil liberty, lurked under any general grant of legislative authority or ought to be implied from any general expressions of the will of the people. The people ought not to be presumed to part with rights so vital to their security and well being without very strong and direct expressions of such an intention." and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862, and of the acts amendatory thereof, without interest, the amount of the proceeds of sale of any such land for direct taxes due to the United States under such act, except lands sold in South Carolina, at Army and Navy sales, on which only partial payments have been made, less all taxes, costs, and legal charges accrued by reason of the sale thereof by the tax-commissioners of the United States under the said acts; provided that such owner or owners, their heirs or assigns or legal representatives, as the case may be, shall, before such payment, duly execute and deliver a full and complete quit-claim conveyance of said property, and release of all mesne rents and profits thereof to the purchaser or purchasers thereof at said tax sale, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, as the Secretary may require.

---

These noble words cannot be too often recalled or too well remembered.

The second section provides that in case the ownership of said property prior to such tax sale is in dispute, or when there are conflicting interests in such ownership, or when such interests are so involved as to render it proper for a court of equity to adjust the several interests of parties in the said land, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated by law, to a receiver, who may be appointed by a court having jurisdiction to determine and adjust the said interests of parties claiming an interest in said land, and who may be appointed by said court for such purpose, who shall give security for the performance of his duties as the court may require, the amount of the proceeds of said sale, without interest, less all taxes, costs, expenses, and charges, as aforesaid, to be distributed, according to the order of said court, upon principles of equity, among the parties interested in said land according to their respective interests; provided that an order or decree be made by such court, all parties in interest consenting thereto, that said sum of money shall be accepted in lieu of the land, and that a commissioner or other officer be appointed thereby, who shall execute a complete quitclaim conveyance of said property, and a release of all mesne rents and profits thereof, to the purchaser or purchasers thereof at said tax sale, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives; which conveyance shall, upon the receipt of such money by such receiver, operate as a complete extinguishment of all claim, right, title, and interest of the parties to such suit who may have been the owner or owners of said land at and before such sale, or have derived title or interest therein from such owner or owners as heirs, assigns, or otherwise.

The third section provides that in case the owner or owners of the land at and prior to such tax sale, or parties having a valid lien or interest upon or in the same, or any one or more of such persons or parties, are incapacitated, by reason of infancy, insanity, or other legal disability, from complying with the provisions of the first two sections of this act, so as to give to the said purchaser or purchasers a conveyance of their interests in the said land, or in case such former owners or parties, or any one of them, shall refuse to avail themselves or himself of the privilege conferred by the said first two sections, and such facts shall be satisfactorily shown to the Secretary of the Treasury, and in case it shall also be shown to his satisfaction that the tax commissioners under the act, in executing the provisions of said act, made it their invariable rule and practice not to receive the taxes after the forfeiture imposed by the act and before the sale, unless the same were tendered by the owner of said land in proper person, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of any money not otherwise appropriated by law, pay, on their application and surrender of tax-sale certificate, to the purchaser or purchasers at said tax sale, his or their heirs or assigns, or legal representatives, as he may determine, the amount of the proceeds of said tax sale less all taxes, costs, and charges under the said act; provided that said purchaser or purchasers, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, as the case may be, shall first execute and deliver to the former owner or owners, and their heirs or assigns, a quit-claim conveyance of said property; which conveyance shall take effect and give to the former owner or owners, their heirs or assigns, an immediate right of possession to said property upon the receipt of the said money by said purchaser or purchasers, or their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives.

The fourth section provides that the time limited for the redemption of direct-tax lands by the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption and sale of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1872, be, and the same is thereby, extended for the period of one year from June 8, 1874, at the expiration of which time the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall proceed to sell the lands as provided by section 4 of said act.

The fifth section provides that the purchasers, their heirs or assigns, of lands in South Carolina, sold at what is known as "Army and Navy" sales, and which lands have reverted to the United States for nonpayment of the full amount of purchase-money, may be permitted to redeem the same, as provided in section 5 of said act, on payment into the Treasury of the remainder of purchase-money, with interest, at the legal rate in South Carolina, from the date when said remainder of purchase-money became due, to the date of payment into the Treasury, deducting rents received by the United States from such lands, but rents in no case to offset principal. And such Army and Navy purchasers shall make said payment, with interest as aforesaid, into the Treasury of the United States within six months from the passage of this act, at which time their right to the redemption of said land shall cease.

The sixth section provides that section 7 of said act shall not hereafter be held or construed to exclude from redemption lands in the State of South Carolina set apart and known as "school farms," remaining in the possession of the United States; nor lands reserved for war, military, naval, revenue, and police purposes under the instructions of the President of the United States dated September 16, 1863, unless actually set apart for such purposes prior to the date of the passage of the act.

The seventh section provides that where the United States have not been in possession of the lands, a release thereof in conformity to the provisions of the act of June 8, 1872, shall also operate as a release of all rents that may have accrued thereon since the United States acquired title thereto.

Mr. BECK. I only want to say to the House that the material portion of this bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and the bill as reported has been approved also by the Committee on Ways and Means. It will be seen by the RECORD of June 11 that it has been drawn in part and approved fully by the Internal Revenue Department; indeed the original draught was prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Commissioner approves every word of it and indorses it. I sent it to him a day or two ago for re-examination and approval and received his unqualified indorsement. It is only carrying out the principles of the law of 1872. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing the bill. I am willing, however, to answer any questions any gentleman may choose to ask.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Has this bill been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. BECK. It has, and is approved by it; it was drawn by the Department or under its direction.

Mr. LAWRENCE. What does the original act provide?

Mr. BECK. It provides for giving back all the lands the United States now hold upon the payment of the taxes and costs.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why should the time be extended?

Mr. BECK. Because the law expired on the 8th of June, 1874, and in South Carolina, at Beaufort and elsewhere, the court-houses have been burned and many of the original titles were destroyed.

Mr. GARFIELD. What amount will be taken out of the Treasury by this bill?

Mr. BECK. The committee thinks that ultimately it may take about $600,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman says "ultimately;" in what time?

Mr. BECK. In perhaps two or three years. I cannot say exactly. After deducting all taxes, costs, and commissions, of course the surplus belongs to the original owner of the property, when the purchaser is quieted in his title.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does this bill include expenses of litigation? There have been a large amount of cases litigated in the courts.

Mr. BECK. Wherever there has been any litigation the costs have been paid by the private parties, not by the Government in the cases provided for here, as I understand it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does this bill interfere with the forfeiture clause of the direct tax-law?

Mr. BECK. I think not in the slightest degree.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say in this connection that there was a case decided in the Supreme Court some three years ago, in which it was decided that the object of the law was to collect taxes and not to inflict penalties.

Mr. BECK. This bill merely continues and extends the law of 1872 where the property has been sold and is now held by the purchasers; it is to return the purchase-money and secure rights which are clearly equitable.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much money will go out of the Treasury under this law?

Mr. BECK. The committee thinks there may be $600,000 taken out of the Treasury.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

GENEVA AWARD.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, Mr. FRYE of Maine, and Mr. POTTER of New York, as the conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 7) for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. TREMAIN submitted the following report from the committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. Insert as an additional section, after section 15 of the amendments, the following:

Section —. That section 49 of said act be amended by striking out after the word "the," in line 5, the words "supreme courts," and inserting in lieu thereof "district courts;" and in line 6, after the word "States," inserting the words "subject to the general superintendence and jurisdiction conferred upon circuit courts by section 2 of said act."

And that the numbering of the sections be changed so as to correspond with the forgoing amendment.

And the Senate agree to the same.

LYMAN TREMAIN,
BENJ. F. BUTLER,
CHAS. A. ELDREDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
GEO. G. WRIGHT,
A. G. THURMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The question was upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. TREMAIN. Several gentlemen have asked me to explain these amendments, and I will do so in a few moments if the House will give me its attention. The basis upon which we have proceeded in making up this report are the amendments of the Senate which have not been considered in the House, and therefore I will very briefly state the effect of this conference report.

The principal point of difference between the two Houses was as to the repeal or amendment of the bankrupt law. Instructed by the House, the managers on the part of the House endeavored to procure the repeal of the law. They failed utterly in this, and became satisfied that there was no chance whatever to procure the consent of the committee on the part of the Senate or of the Senate to such a repeal. Therefore they have proceeded, under the assurance on the part of the managers on behalf of the Senate that they would yield as far as possible to the desire of the House, to do away with the odious features of the bankrupt law.

The first amendment is in regard to what constitutes an act of bankruptcy. The old bankrupt law passed in 1800 did not make the omission to pay a debt an act of bankruptcy. The present law, the law of 1867, declares that the omission to pay a debt for fourteen days was an act of bankruptcy. But the conference report amends that law so as to allow a period of forty days to elapse before a merchant or trader who neglects to pay his commercial paper is liable to be thrown into bankruptcy. Your committee regard that as a very material alleviation of the severity of the present law.

The next important amendment is in regard to the power of any one creditor to throw a merchant or a trader into the bankrupt court. The present law gives that right to any one creditor or to any number of creditors who have debts amounting to the sum of $250. This is the origin of a great portion of the complaints made against the law, for if 95 per cent. in number and in value of the creditors were unwilling to have the party thrown into bankruptcy a single merciless or malicious creditor would have that right. This is amended under the report of the conference committee on the amendments of the Senate so as to require an assent of one-fourth in number and one-third in value of the creditors before any man is liable to be thrown into bankruptcy. But in order to meet the cases which may have arisen since the 1st December last, when we first agitated the subject of the repeal or amendment of the bankrupt law, this section requiring one-fourth in number and one-third in value as a condition of throwing into bankruptcy, has been made to relate back to the commencement of the session of Congress on the 1st day of December last. The object of this is to prevent any overreaching creditor who intended to get ahead of Congress from taking anything by his motion.

And then there was no provision made in the present law for discontinuing the proceedings in bankruptcy, though the bankrupt may have paid the debts on which he was thrown into bankruptcy, and although a majority of the creditors may have desired the proceedings to be discontinued. In this respect we have amended the bill so as to provide that proceedings shall be discontinued whenever the bankrupt pays those secured debts which were the ground of throwing him into bankruptcy, or whenever, with the consent of the court, he and a majority of the creditors shall ask for a discontinuance of the proceedings.

Then we have changed the time within which contracts and transactions had with a bankrupt in making a transfer of property or liens upon it may be set aside in case he shall afterward be thrown into bankruptcy by changing the time from four to two months in one case, and from six months to three in another case.

To meet that large class of cases where a person may take an assignment of property or make an advance of money in good faith, or where a judgment may have been obtained or a lien acquired by the seizure of his property, in order to obviate the evils resulting from conflicting decisions we have adopted amendments declaring that in order to set aside any such hypothecated pledges or liens on the bankrupt's estate it must appear that the party dealing with the bankrupt knew that he intended to perpetrate a fraud upon the bankrupt law and that he intended to go into bankruptcy. It is not enough that the party had reason to suppose that the bankrupt was insolvent, but he must also know that he was contemplating bankruptcy. If he was really struggling to retrieve his condition, and hoped and expected to go through, the transaction would not be invalidated by the bankrupt law.

And then we have incorporated an affirmative provision in our report, that whenever a bankrupt obtains a loan from a friend in good faith, even where insolvent, where the loan is made and the security is taken in good faith, with the intention of aiding and carrying him through successfully, such a loan shall be considered as having actual value and the security taken upon it shall not be invalidated by the proceedings in the bankrupt court.

Then we have also changed the law in regard to the conditions on which a discharge may be procured. Under the present law, as you will remember, a voluntary bankrupt may pay either 50 per cent. or obtain the consent of a majority of his creditors. The Senate report originally made this distinction between a voluntary and an involuntary bankrupt. An involuntary bankrupt thrown into bankruptcy and free from all fraud was entitled to his discharge without regard to the assent of his creditors, or the amount his estate paid; while they proposed that the voluntary bankrupt should pay either 33 per cent. of his debts or obtain the consent of a majority of his creditors. We claimed that there was no good reason for such a distinction between the two classes, and that the discrimination ought not to be made against the voluntary bankrupt, who surrendered all his property in good faith and asked to have the benefits of the law. The Senate managers, however, claimed that there ought to be a distinction, for the reason that where the requisite number of creditors insisted on throwing him into bankruptcy, they treated him as civilly dead and should not be permitted to avail themselves of his subsequent earnings in payment of the debts. But they yielded so far to the views of the House committee as to say that a voluntary bankrupt should have his discharge if the estate paid 30 per cent. instead of 50 per cent., as under the existing law, or provided he obtained the same number of his creditors as is necessary to throw him into bankruptcy; that is, one-fourth in number and one-third in value. Now in regard to an involuntary bankrupt he can get his discharge if his conduct is free from all fraud and he is innocent of any violation or infringement of the provisions of the bankrupt act.

In this connection I may state that I have seen a memorial sent on from New York which has an entirely erroneous idea as to the right of an involuntary bankrupt in regard to his discharge. The memorialists seem to assume that an involuntary bankrupt will obtain his discharge although guilty of violations of the existing law; whereas it is provided that before he can get his discharge he must be entitled to it under existing law.

The thirty-ninth section of the existing law declares that no discharge shall be granted, or if granted shall be valid, if the bankrupt is guilty of any one of the sixteen acts enumerated, covering almost every conceivable case, and winds up by saying that he shall not be entitled to it if he be guilty of any fraud of any kind in violation of the provisions of the bankrupt law. This shows that they have labored under an entire misconception of the effect of the Senate amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TREMAIN. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Under the law as it existed before 1869 in a case of voluntary bankruptcy the 50 per cent. had to be paid only on debts created since 1870.

Mr. TREMAIN. That was the law of 1867; was it not?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The law of 1869 when the amendment was made. Previous to that time no percentage was required to be paid on old debts.

Mr. TREMAIN. There is now no distinction made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Then this applies to old debts as well as to new ones. I desire to know whether the 30 per cent. dates back since a given time or applies indefinitely to old as well as to new debts.

Mr. TREMAIN. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Virginia that the attention of the Senate managers was called to that provision of the law on our part and we desired to have that provision retained, but it was supposed that the debts of this class were small and inconsiderable in number and it was thought best that there should be a uniform rule, and that the rule provided for by this bill ought to apply to old debts as well as to new ones.

We have also provided that the assignee, as was disclosed in recent proceedings in New Orleans where large profits were made by dividing the fees of auctioneers and in other ways, should not be permitted to avail himself of such profits. We have also provided to meet a case under the old law where if a creditor had attempted to obtain a lien on the property of the bankrupt, that is held to be fraudulent and he forfeits all right to prove his debt and be allowed for any part of it out of the bankrupt's estate. We have modified this so as to say that he shall only forfeit a moiety of his debt.

We have also made further provision for composition by creditors with the assent of the debtor, providing that the composition may be made by a majority of the creditors where approved by the court for the release and discharge of the debtor.

We have reduced the fees and expenses of bankruptcy one-half, until the judges of the Supreme Court shall meet in convention and establish a permanent system of reduction of fees and a simplification of the proceedings in cases of bankruptcy so as to render them less expensive to the bankrupt, and to expedite proceedings.

We have also provided for the utmost publicity as to all the acts of persons connected with the execution of the law, by requiring full and minute reports to be made and published from the clerk, from the assignee, from the marshal, and from the register. We were anxious to get several other amendments to the law in which we failed, and in particular we desired that mortgages should be taken out of the operation of the law, and that a foreclosure of a mortgage should not be enjoined by a bankrupt court. But the managers on the part of the Senate claimed that the law now is that no bankrupt court shall restrain foreclosure of a mortgage, except in especial and extreme cases where the interests of an estate require it, and that that power is subject to the supervisory control of the circuit judge. They also assured us that at the next session of Congress, or at some time hereafter, they would be ready to co-operate with us in amending the law so as to remedy any evils that time and experience may develop.

We have also, at the suggestion of several of the Delegates from the Territories, made an amendment by which original jurisdicrion is conferred on the courts in the Territories, subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court of the Territory, in bankrupt cases, whereas it has been decided that it did not exist heretofore.

This statement covers substantially the leading points in which we amend the present law, and I will only say in conclusion that the question presented to us, and the question now presented to the House, is not whether a bankrupt law should pass. We were reminded by the managers on the part of the Senate, and we were painfully conscious of the fact, that the law as it stands cannot be changed except by the assent of both Houses of Congress, and that we must either accept the situation and make such amendments as we could obtain to the existing law, or allow it to remain in force with all its acknowledged evils. We have done the best we could to secure amendments, and it is for the House to determine, not whether a bankrupt law ought to be passed, not whether the present law should be repealed, but whether it shall be amended and ameliorated.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether this bill will operate as a discontinuance or authorize a discontinuance of any bankrupt proceeding now pending which has been commenced by creditors less in number or value than is prescribed by this bill?

Mr. TREMAIN. That is a question of construction upon which I am not inclined to express an opinion.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But it is a very important question.

Mr. TREMAIN. No such question has been discussed or raised in the committee of conference. This bill amends the original bankrupt law by providing that it shall read as follows—giving the act in its amended form. Now it might be claimed with great ingenuity that this, as an amendment of the original law, would apply to prior cases as well as those arising after the passage of the amendatory act. But on that question I do not undertake to express an opinion. The general rule of construction doubtless is that statutes are only to be construed prospectively unless where the contrary intention is expressed. As to one section of this bill, as I have already stated, the statute is made to retroact back to the 1st of December last. Now, as to the rule which shall obtain in reference to a discharge, the law which exists at the time of granting a discharge would probably apply. For example, in this case the old law regulating the conditions upon which a discharge may be granted will be repealed, and the only law regulating the terms of such discharge will be the new rule which, as I have already observed, in cases of voluntary bankruptcy changes the percentage of payment from 50 to 30 per cent. and reduces the requisite number of assenting creditors from a majority to one-fourth in number and one-third in value.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is it not better that we should settle that question now than leave it open to controversy hereafter?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. TREMAIN. I propose to yield to my colleague on the committee of conference, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.]

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. We ought not to pass on this bill until it has been printed. I desire to make a motion that it be printed and made a special order for the day after to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. TREMAIN. I do not yield for that motion. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] for a question.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to put an inquiry in regard to the sixteenth section of the bill, relating to composition with creditors. In the bill as it came to us from the Senate it was provided that a resolution of composition, to be operative, must be passed by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors, confirmed afterward by the signatures of the debtor and two-thirds in number and one-half in value of the creditors. This resolution, with a statement of the debtor as to his assets and debts, was to be presented to the court; and the court, upon being satisfied on proper notice and hearing, that the resolution had been duly passed and that the same is for the best interests of all concerned, should cause it to be recorded and the statement filed. As the Senate bill read, such resolution was to be of no validity until such record and filing. Now I ask the gentleman whether the committee of conference have left in the bill that provision, so that no matter how large a number of creditors may have complied with the law and passed a resolution for composition the court, if it think such resolution not for the best interest of all concerned, may declare it of no validity?

Mr. TREMAIN. The managers on the part of the House endeavored to procure a modification of that provision so as to declare that where a majority of the creditors agreed with the debtor as to composition it should not be subject to the supervisory control of the court. We were, however, unable to procure such a provision; and inasmuch as the entire provision with regard to composition is an advance upon the present law, we yielded. The argument on the part of the Senate committee was that inasmuch as we are taking from the minority of creditors the right they would otherwise have under the composition, such composition, in order to be constitutional, ought to be subject to the supervisory control of the court. We did all we could to meet the views of my friend from Pennsylvania, but we have failed.

Mr. MYERS. I am very sorry that you have.

Mr. TREMAIN. I now yield to my colleague on the conference committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.]

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not wish to make any extended remarks. It is well known to the House that I have been opposed to any bankrupt law. I was opposed to the original bill and voted against it; I voted for its repeal at the last session, and also at the present session. I was in hopes that the law might be repealed, I have signed this report because I felt compelled to do so; not because the law in the form proposed to be amended is satisfactory to me; not because the amendments are so extensive as I would wish to see adopted, but because we had to take these amendments or nothing. We were obliged either to accept these amendments or let the law stand as it is now. The Senate committee at once took the position that they had the power to keep the law as it now stands; that the session of Congress was far gone, and that unless we agreed to some amendments the old law with all its obnoxious provisions would continue upon the statute book.

Under these circumstances we deemed it our duty to go to work and pull as many rotten teeth out of the old law as we could. That was our endeavor; and I think these amendments will improve the law very much indeed in many respects. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] has stated the effect of the several amendments, and it must I think be apparent to the House that they are very great improvements upon the existing law. If there were no other change than the limitation as to the fees which the officials of the courts may charge in bankrupt proceedings, that of itself would be an object worthy of attainment. A gentleman near me inquires whether we leave the involuntary feature in the bill. We do. The amendments we recommend will prevent any such exorbitant charges being made as the investigation of proceedings in cases in Louisiana, Alabama, and some other States shows to have been made there.

It being apparent that we must either continue the old law with all its defects and deformities or else amend it, I deemed it my duty to get the best measure I could, and therefore I signed the report. The conferees on the part of the House endeavored to get, and did get, just as much concession as they could from the Senate. But as the Senate had the power either to merely amend the law or to continue the present law in force, they had us pretty much at their mercy. I think that those who are in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt law will find that the existing law is very much improved by the amendments recommended in our report.

Mr. TREMAIN. I yield to my colleague, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would like to be heard on this question.

Mr. POTTER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] wishes to speak first I will give way.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I was about to take the floor, Mr. Speaker, as one of the members of the committee of conference to say to the House that if any gentleman finds that the bill with the present amendment is not what he would like to have he has only to ask himself, "Is this bill with the amendments better than the old law?" Because if it is, then you had better vote for it, for it is either as we have amended it or to let the law stand as it is now.

There are two or three things where I think this is a great deal better. In the first place, under the old law, if a man's paper went to protest for fourteen days, one of his creditors, to the amount of two dollars, could put him into bankruptcy. The law as amended stands that his paper must lie over forty days, and then one-fourth of all his creditors in number and one-third in value must agree together before he can be put into bankruptcy.

The other great provision, which I think is an important one, is that it shortens the time in which conveyances may be set aside. Now the time is four and six months, and a matter must be six months old in some cases which may be inquired into. Now those times are reduced to two months and three months.

Again, it requires knowledge within the meaning of the law of the fraudulent condition of the bankrupt on the part of the man who deals with him to set aside a conveyance. The present law all of you know and know how much litigation has grown up under it.

Again, about the question put by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] I have no doubt; that is, that all cases which are now pending must be wound up under the law as it will be when the President signs it with our amendment.

Mr. CONGER. What cases?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. All kinds of cases under it—under the law as it will be amended, because the amendments are amendments to the law as it is.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But my question was——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am coming to your question. The question was, whether it will alter the condition of any one of these cases so far as to get a man into bankruptcy is concerned; that is, if a man went into involuntary bankruptcy on the petition of a single creditor, will this law take him out.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Clearly not, because the law will not be retroactive in matters now in conflict. It will not alter the condition of fraud committed before he went in. It will not alter anything which has been done, because this, more than any other law, ought not and cannot be retroactive under the language of the Constitution.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is the general rule that every law is prospective unless made expressly retroactive.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We have only made it retroactive in one or two instances where necessary, not to leave a hiatus.

Mr. PARSONS. In case of any suit now pending in bankruptcy commenced prior to the passage of this act will the bankrupt be compelled to pay anything more than the amount provided for in the present law?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He will be relieved by the provisions of the law as they stand at the moment he makes application to the court for his discharge.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the bill as it stands specifically make this retroactive back to any given point?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Only in one or two instances, which are of minor importance.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the gentleman to claim, if we amend the law by adding certain words to it so they are to be injected into the body of the old law, the words thus put in will take effect under the old law as of the date of the old law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They will take effect in the old law of the date when they become the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of the date when they were put in?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me give an instance, and that will illustrate it. Suppose the law should be if A struck B he should be hanged, and then we should put in the word "not," "should not be hanged," I take it A would not be hanged for striking B, under the old law.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD,] who proposes to move that the conference report be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Whether this changes the mode of management in the settlement of estates in bankruptcy?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It only allows creditors to come in and wind up the estates under certain rules, which are included in the amendments. It does not affect the mode of settlement beyond this. It affects the number and value of creditors who may consent to the discharge.

I wish to say one thing more, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois, who desires to make a motion to have the amendments printed——

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope, however, that the gentleman will not succeed in that motion.

Another great benefit that will result from these amendments is this: The universal cry from one end of this country to the other was and is that estates in bankruptcy are eaten up in fees and costs. Now we have gone to work and cut down those costs one-half on the face of them. And that was not the worst of it. The worst of it was that there was no supervision of the costs. A great many judges did not make it their business to look into the costs. We have arranged it so that there must be a publication of all the fees and expenses in bankruptcy, so that every man in the community can revise the fees in every case. The difficulty was that there were clerks who made no reports and charged enormous fees. There were registers who overcharged, and there were assignees who ran away with millions of estates and never divided anything.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Where a man goes into bankruptcy under this law, is he required to pay 30 per cent. before he gets his discharge, or is he referred back to the old law?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He is required to pay the 30 per cent. or get the assent of a certain portion of his creditors, one-fourth in number and one-third in value, instead of a majority as heretofore.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. In the case where a man is made a bankrupt by his creditors is he discharged under this law, by the operation of the law, or is he required to pay a certain percentage of his debts and to obtain a certain proportion of his creditors?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He gets his discharge if there has been no fraud. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. TREMAIN. I hope the adoption of the report will not be thrown over till to-morrow on the motion to print.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. If there is general opposition to the motion I will not press it.

Mr. TREMAIN. I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] proceeds, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] of the committee of conference, this question: In 1869 an amendment was made to the bankrupt law providing that the homestead law in the several States, not exceeding $2,000, should be set apart for the bankrupt, and in addition, that the bankrupt should have the benefit of the homestead law as against judgment decrees and orders of the court existing prior to that time. In my State Judge Bond decided that as to the liens prior to the passage of the act it was unconstitutional and void. The supreme court of the State confirmed that decision, thus rendering the homestead provision in my State a nullity. I desire to ask whether the conference committee have taken that question into consideration and have tried to introduce a uniform system so as to avoid the construction put upon it by that decision?

Mr. TREMAIN. The question the gentleman has referred to was brought up in this form: The managers on the part of the House endeavored to get an amendment of the bankrupt law so as to provide that the supervisory jurisdiction exercised by the circuit court in bankruptcy shall itself be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, so that the very class of cases the gentleman has referrred to might be brought to the Supreme Court. The Senate refused to adopt that amendment on two grounds: first, because the Supreme Court was already overwhelmed with business; and second, because it might interfere with the summary disposition of the bankrupt's estate, which it was the object of the bankrupt law to bring about. Our attention was not called to any evil in the law itself. The law itself, as the gentleman has correctly stated, provides for an exemption, and we did not change that.

I give notice that after my colleague [Mr. POTTER] has addressed the House for five minutes I will call the previous question.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant to detain the House on this question, when it is so desirous of coming to a vote. At the same time I should have preferred that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] had prevailed, so that the amendments embraced in the conference report might be printed, and that the House might take some other time for its consideration; because, late as the session is, this subject is of sufficient importance to yet further deserve our careful deliberation.

There is undoubtedly presented here, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] has said, a choice of evils between the existing law and the proposed law. But none the less ought it to be considered whether it would not be the wisest policy to submit until another session to the existing law rather than, by adopting such a partial and imperfect amelioration of the existing law as is proposed by this report, weaken the chance for absolute repeal which we might otherwise have. My colleague has stated to the House that the only protest from the creditors of the country which has reached the House since the Senate amendments were printed is the memorial from Messrs. E. S. Jaffray & Co., and other merchants of New York, which I hold in my hand, protesting against the Senate amendments, and which I now present to the House, but which, not to detain the House with now reading it in full, I will print in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that, as my colleague says, these memorialists have misconstrued the effect of the Senate amendments, and that they are not so obnoxious to their objections as they think. Nevertheless, I am myself satisfied that the modifications recommended in the law by the report of the committee of conference will remedy the evils of the law at best to but a small extent. I am afraid that in some respects even the relief they intend to give will be found to be wanting. For instance, the existing law has been so construed as to wholly invalidate bona fide liens and chattel mortgages, not recorded as required by the local laws, although such securities would have been perfectly good by the law of the State where made as between the bankrupt and the lien-holding creditor. No such effect was I believe ever given to any previous bankrupt law in this country or in England. The committee have sought to get rid of this construction by the proviso they have added to section 11 of the Senate amendments. But I fear that by limiting that proviso to the thirty-fifth section of the bill when it should have applied to the whole law, they have failed to secure the relief they intended, though I understand they regard the language used in the conference report as broad enough. And generally, sir, I am satisfied that we are going to get, from adopting this report, but imperfect relief from the hardships of this law, against which the creditors of the country have been so generally protesting.

For myself, I come from the creditor section of the country, and it is claimed that this law is to be retained for the benefit of creditors, and yet, sir, I have received no communication except from a single firm, during this entire session, in favor of its retention on the statute-book. It has answered its general purpose so far as the debtors of the country are concerned. About once in a generation a bankrupt law on their account seems to have been called for—and they being relieved this law is sought to be retained in the interest of the creditor—and yet, I repeat, the entire creditor section of the country is against it; and I am one of those who believe they are more competent to judge what is for their own interest than even Congress is to judge for them. We have, however, to take the report of the committee of conference as a whole. Perhaps if adopted it may result in making the law better on the whole than it was, but of that I am doubtful.

[The memorial referred to by Mr. POTTER is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial and remonstrance of the undersigned, merchants and business men of the city of New York, respectfully shows:

That they have been surprised by the announcement in the newspapers that the Senate amendments to the bankrupt act have been substantially agreed to by the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the subject of that act. That from all the information given to the public, your memorialists were led to believe that those amendments would not be concurred in by the honorable the House of Representatives.

And your memoralists further represent that they deem many of the proposed amendments unwise and unjust, and therefore such as ought not to be adopted. That among these are the following:

First. The provision of section 9 of the proposed amendments, declaring that in cases of compulsory or involuntary bankruptcy the existing provisions of the law requiring the payment of any proportion of the debts of the bankrupt, or the assent of any portion of his creditors, as a condition of his discharge from his debts shall not apply.

The statute makes it an act of bankruptcy upon which a petition in involuntary bankruptcy may be brought for a person owing debts to depart from the State, district, or Territory of which he is an inhabitant, with intent, to defraud his creditors, or being absent to remain absent with such intent, or to conceal himself to avoid the service of legal process, in an action for the recovery of a debt provable under the act, or to conceal or remove any of his property to avoid its being attached, taken, or sequestered on legal process. None of these acts will prevent the discharge of the bankrupt under the statute. Why a man who has been guilty of any of these offenses, and in consequence has been forced into bankruptcy, should be entitled unconditionally to a discharge, while the honest debtor who has not absconded, or skulked, or concealed himself or his property, but voluntarily surrenders his property and asks for a discharge from his debts, should, as a condition of such discharge, be obliged to pay 33 per cent. of his debts, or procure the assent of one-half in number and value of his creditors, your memorialists find it difficult to understand. Your memorialists suppose that it is not the intention of Congress to enact such a distinction in favor of fraud and knavery, and against honesty and fair dealing.

Your memorialists submit, however, that the limitation of an unconditional discharge to cases of compulsory or involuntary bankruptcy will be found to be practically superfluous and nugatory. Every case will be compulsory or involuntary. There will hardly be an instance in which a man honestly a creditor cannot, from one consideration or another, be procured to file a friendly petition in involuntary bankruptcy against a debtor aiming to obtain a discharge from his debts. And where such an instance shall occur there will be little trouble in manufacturing an indebtedness so as to create a creditor who will answer the purpose. In such a case, if the amendments of the Senate to the thirty-ninth section of the act shall be considered as requiring that the petition in involuntary bankruptcy shall allege that one-fourth in number and one-third in amount of the creditors of the debtor have joined in the petition, the debtor, whether such proportion in number and amount shall join in the petition or not, will be swift on the filing of the petition to admit in writing, as further provided by the amendment that the requisite number and amount of creditors have petitioned. The court will, as directed by the amendment, thereupon so adjudge, which judgment is final, and the debtor as an involuntary bankrupt becomes entitled under the act to a discharge from his debts without paying anything to his creditors, and in defiance of their opposition. Such is the result as appears, to your memorialists, fairly to be apprehended from the proposed amendment. Legislation which by its very terms allows and is a temptation to artifice like this, will not, your memorialists are persuaded, be knowingly adopted by the Congress of the United States.

Second. The provision of section 12 of the proposed amendments amending section 39 of the law so as to require in order to bring a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against a debtor that one-fourth in number of his creditors "the aggregate of whose debts" amounts to at least one-third of his debts shall join in the petition. The statute, be it remembered, makes it an act of bankruptcy for a person owing debts to abscond with intent to defraud his creditors, or to remain absent with such intent, or to conceal himself with intent to avoid service of civil process, or to conceal or remove his property, to avoid its being seized on legal process, and moreover to make an assignment or transfer of his property with intent to delay, defraud, or hinder his creditors. And yet by this amendment for the commission of any of these fraudulent acts this law will provide no remedy unless the creditor first obtains or is certain of obtaining the concurrence in his proceeding of at least one-fourth in number and one-third in amount of the creditors of this fraudulent debtor. The Congress of the United States, your memorialists believe, does not propose to offer a premium for fraud. They are fearful that such will be the effect of the adoption of this amendment.

Third. The provisions for "composition with creditors" contained in section 16 of the amendments.

By this amendment, in all cases of bankruptcy, whether an adjudication in bankruptcy shall have been had or not, the creditors of the alleged bankrupt may, at a meeting called as prescribed by the amendment, "resolve that a composition proposed by the debtor shall be accepted in satisfaction of the debts due to them from the debtor." Your memorialists respectfully submit that the provisions of this proposed amendment offer unfair opportunities and advantages to the debtor, and leave the rights and interests of creditors without adequate protection.

Your memorialists, in the suddenness with which they are called upon and the brief period afforded them to remonstrate against the adoption of these amendments, can only call your attention to some of their most objectionable provisions. They believe that if they shall be enacted into a law they will tend to demoralize the business transactions and prove of serious injury to the credit system of the country.

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully remonstrate against the passage of the said amendments.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

NEW YORK, 13*th June*, 1874.]

Mr. TREMAIN. My colleague on the committee from Illinois [Mr. WARD] desires to submit a motion to print the report and the bill, and as a matter of courtesy I will allow him to make that motion; but I hope the House will not agree to it, because it will throw this matter over until to-morrow.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to preface the motion I am about to make by saying that I do not antagonize this report. It is in the interest of legislation looking to repeal; but I desire it printed, so that all gentlemen may know what they are voting for. I will therefore move that the report be printed, and that it be made the special order for to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Pending that motion I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HUNTON asked and obtained leave to have withdrawn from the files of the House the papers accompanying the bill for the relief of James M. Downey.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, asked and obtained leave to have withdrawn from the files of the House the papers in the case of N. R. Gruell, of Arcola, Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER asked and obtained leave to have withdrawn from the files of the House the papers in the case of William E. Childs.

Mr. ALBERT asked and obtained leave to have withdrawn from the files of the House the papers in the case of W. J. Chibs.

Mr. KNAPP asked leave to have withdrawn from the files of the House the papers in the case of Robert Tillson.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to the withdrawal of the Tillson papers.

Mr. STANDIFORD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of the proceedings of the House, some remarks in relation to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. (See Appendix.)

Mr. DARRALL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of the proceedings of the House, some remarks on the civil-rights bill. (See Appendix.)

SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

Mr. TREMAIN. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary on the memorial of Susan B. Anthony, and move that it be printed and recommitted to the committee, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is a minority report.

Mr. TREMAIN. I do not know whether it is a minority report or not; that remains to be seen.

By unanimous consent the report was received, and Mr. TREMAIN's motion was agreed to.

THE BANKRUPT ACT.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. E. R. HOAR that the House take a recess.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I now ask for a vote on my motion that the report be printed and made the special order for to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. If the report is to be printed, it had better be recommitted to the committee of conference, as it can then be brought before the House at any time as a matter of the highest privilege.

Mr. POLAND. The report is all printed in the RECORD of to-day.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. The bill is not printed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Can this report be committed to a committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. ELDREDGE. The committee of conference have made their report, and it has been agreed to by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. It can be recommitted.

The question was taken upon the motion to recommit; and it was not agreed to.

The question was taken upon adopting the report of the committee of conference; and upon a division there were—ayes 128, noes 34.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. SENER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being 11 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. TREMAIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the bill as amended by the report of the committee of conference be printed.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

PRESERVATION OF BALLOTS, ETC.

Mr. TREMAIN. I now move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 1979) to preserve the ballots cast at and all papers connected with elections for Representatives or Delegates to Congress, and for other purposes.

Mr. COX. I hope my colleague [Mr. TREMAIN] will not try to put that bill through without debate.

Mr. RUSK. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. TREMAIN. If a recess is now taken when will my motion again come up?

The SPEAKER. It will be the first thing in order to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. TREMAIN. Then I will not object to it going over.

CELEBRATION OF BOSTON TEA PARTY.

Mr. POTTER. I ask consent to submit the following resolution, to which I think there will be no objection:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That the woman's centennial executive committee of the city of Washington have leave to occupy the Rotunda of the Capitol, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, upon the afternoon and evening of the 16th of December next, for the purpose of celebrating the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston on the night of the 16th of December, 1773.

The question was taken upon adopting the resolution; and upon a division there were—ayes 52, noes 41; no quorum voting.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. POTTER and Mr. G. F. HOAR were appointed.

Mr. SENER. I call for the regular order. There is a motion pending to take a recess.

The motion for the recess was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m. Mr. CESSNA in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House the session of this evening is for the consideration of reports, made and to be made, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. After that order shall have been concluded, if it shall be concluded, the remainder of the session of this evening will be devoted to the call of the standing committees of the House for reports of a private nature to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUSK. I ask for the reading of the report of the committee with the accompanying letter of the Commissioner of Pensions.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 3661) granting a pension to George W. Trueheart, having considered the same, submit the following report:

The applicant desires an increase of pension, as he has lost an arm and a leg and is in a very bad condition. But the number of pensioners that are similarly disabled is exceedingly small, there being only sixteen in all, and in considering this case we have concluded that there should be a general law reaching the whole class, and we therefore report back the accompanying bill as a substitute and recommend its passage.

The following letter of the Commissioner of Pensions fully sets forth the facts:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 10, 1874.

SIR: Congress having recently passed a bill increasing among other pensions the pensions of those persons who have lost both hands or both feet to fifty dollars per month, I desire to call your attention to the fact that the law now in force provides a pension of twenty-four dollars per month for those persons who have lost a hand and a foot in the military or naval service and line of duty, and that unless some increase of pension is provided for this class a great disproportion will exist between the pensions of persons whose disabilities are nearly equivalent.

An examination of the rolls of pensioners shows that there are now sixteen persons receiving pension on account of the loss of an arm and a leg or a hand and a foot. I have the honor to recommend that the pension of this class of persons be increased to the sum of the pensions provided by law for the disabilities rated separately. This increase, in the opinion of the office, would establish a just proportion between the pensioners of the classes of persons referred to and their disabilities.

Very respectfully,

J. H. BAKER,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. M. RUSK,
Chairman of the Committee on Pensions,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STORM. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee [Mr. RUSK] the amount of pension which the persons provided for in this bill will receive?

Mr. RUSK. Under this bill if a man has lost his arm above the elbow and his leg above the knee, he will get forty-eight dollars; if he has lost his leg below the knee he will get forty-two dollars; if he has lost his arm below the elbow he will get thirty-six dollars.

Mr. STORM. I understand, then, that the effect of the bill is to give him the pension now allowed for each disability?

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir. If a man has lost both a leg and an arm he gets the pension which would be allowed separately for each disability.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

GEORGE A. SCHREINER.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3685) for the relief of George A. Schreiner; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that inasmuch as doubts have been suggested whether George A. Schreener, of Wyandotte County, Kansas, is entitled to a pension of eighteen dollars a month under the acts of Congress relative to pensions, and the act approved June 8, 1872, entitled "An act increasing the rates of pensions of certain persons therein described," he having lost his right arm in the military service of the United States as a volunteer, which pension has heretofore been paid to him under a construction placed on the last-named act, the pension of eighteen dollars a month is confirmed to him, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to place his name upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. STORM. How can there be any doubt in this case?

Mr. RUSK. I have adopted for my report in this case the Commissioner's letter. If necessary it can be read.

Mr. MOREY. I would suggest that the preamble be stricken out of the bill. I make that motion.

Mr. RUSK. I do not yield for that purpose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. Several days ago we passed a bill (H. R. No. 3652) providing for publication of the revised statutes of the United States. The bill was also passed by the Senate; but subsequently that body asked its return, and then passed it with some amendments. The Secretary of State thinks it necessary that these amendments should be concurred in and the bill become a law to-day, in order to prevent the necessity of publishing the entire revision of the statutes in the newspapers. The amendments made by the Senate do not differ materially from the bill passed by the House except that they provide for the abrogation of the contract made several years ago with Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, for the publication of the laws. The contract provided that Congress might at any time put an end to it; and the difficulty with the Senate committee was that they thought we had no right to provide for the publication of the revised statutes at the Congressional Printing Office unless we entirely abrogated the contract with Little, Brown & Co. Hence the Senate has inserted a provision abrogating that contract, and providing that the laws hereafter shall be published at the Congressional Printing Office. I desire to have the House concur in these amendments of the Senate.

Mr. COTTON. Is this matter in order to-night?

Mr. POLAND. I think it is, if nobody objects.

COMMENCEMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSK. I now ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 674 for the purpose of being considered in the House. It is a bill to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1875, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pensions.

Mr. STORM. Do I understand that this bill is on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. STORM. Then I object. Under the order with reference to the business this evening I submit that we have no right to consider this bill.

Mr. RUSK. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read. It provides in the first section that all pensions which have been, or may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since said date, shall commence from the date of the death or discharge from the United States service of the person on whose account the claim has been, or shall hereafter be, granted, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title such pension; provided that the application for such pension has been, or shall hereafter be, filed with the Commissioner of Pensions on or before the 1st day of January, 1875; otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the last evidence necessary to establish the same. The limitation herein prescribed is not to apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons or minor children of deceased soldiers.

The second section provides that immediately upon the passage of the act the Commissioner of Pensions shall cause a copy of the same to be furnished each pension agent, whose duty it shall be to notify each pensioner upon his roll who shall be entitled to arrears of pension under the act, and it shall be the further duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to pay, or caused to be paid, to such pensioners, or, if the pensioner shall have died, to the person or persons entitled to the same, all such arrears of pensions as the pensioner may be entitled to, or if dead would have been entitled to under the provisions of the first section of the act had he or she survived.

Mr. RICE. I move that this bill be laid on the table.

Mr. RUSK. I do not yield. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly worth while to explain this bill. I presume it is understood by the members of the House.

Mr. STORM. Yes, sir; we all understand it.

Mr. RUSK. If the House will agree to order the previous question to-night, I will allow the vote to be taken in the morning without any debate.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. HAYS. I would like to ask a question.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, if the previous question is ordered to-night, will not this bill be pending in the morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This evening was set apart specially for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. In the opinion of the Chair it will require a motion to suspend the rules to consider this bill at any time hereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] will insist on having the bill acted upon to-night. It is clear that if it goes over it will not come up to-morrow as unfinished business.

Mr. BECK. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. RUSK.] This evening was set apart not only for reports of his committee, but for reports of other committees; and——

Mr. BECK. I insist on my point of order. I submit that this bill is not a private pension bill, and does not properly come within the business for which the session of to-night was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine the resolution under which the session of this evening was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was for reports generally from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the gentleman who wrote the order that under it reports from this committee are in order without regard to whether they are private or public. This bill is therefore in order.

Mr. KILLINGER. Let the order for this evening's session be read.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. This bill will take $10,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. RUSK. What difference if it takes $50,000,000 out of the Treasury? If our crippled soldiers are entitled to this money, why should we refuse to pay it to them?

Mr. BECK. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RUSK. Perhaps gentlemen do not understand what this bill is. It is to pay our crippled soldiers what we owe them. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] has called for the previous question, pending which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to withdraw this bill until the other committees have reported.

Mr. FORT. I hope gentlemen can be accommodated in reference to this bill so that it may go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BECK. It was not the understanding that anything but private bills should be reported this evening. There are nearly one hundred members absent, and it is not fair to call up this bill this evening.

Mr. RUSK. If gentlemen will consent that a vote shall be taken in the morning, I will withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen object to debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, whether the gentleman from Wisconsin can not withdraw his bill and to-morrow move to suspend the rules and pass it?

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STORM. That is fair, and we can then have a vote on the bill in a full House.

The SPEAKER. pro tempore. If the gentleman will withdraw his bill with that understanding the House can proceed to receive reports of a private nature from the standing committees of the House under the order made this morning.

Mr. RUSK. I am willing to accommodate the House about this matter. If the opponents of this bill will agree to give us a fair, and square vote on it to-morrow morning, I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that arrangement, that the gentleman from Wisconsin may be permitted to-morrow to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BECK. He can do that anyhow.

RUSK. I give notice that I mean to bring it before the House even-handed. We can suspend the rules by a two-thirds vote and pass the bill, and we do not ask our enemies consent to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his bill?

Mr. RUSK. No; I do not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw that and move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RUSK. If we take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning will this come up as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. RUSK. Will it at eleven o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 60, noes 50.

Mr. RUSK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. I will withdraw the bill and give notice that I will move to suspend the rules and pass it to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Reports of a private nature are in order from the standing committees of the House.

Mr. CLEMENTS. How do we lose the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposed, the bill being withdrawn, the gentleman from Kentucky withdrew his motion to adjourn.

Mr. BECK. I do withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. I renew it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 73.

Mr. CLYMER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Reports of a private nature are now in order from the standing committees of the House under the order made this morning. Reports are first in order from the Committee on Elections.

E. AND J. KOCH.

Mr. SHELDON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 552) to refund to E. and J. Koch certain customs duties; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3301) for the payment of $800 to Milton Kennedy, for services on the steamboat Piketon, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not desire to be overcaptious, but I understood that committees were to be called merely for reference to bills of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the order of the House, and reports for other purposes can only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not insist on my objection.

The Committee on Claims was discharged from further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the following memorials and bills; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The memorial of William H. Curran;

The bill (H. R. No. 3364) for the relief of Rachael Turrentine, Charity W. Turrentine, et al.;

The bill (H. R. No. 2467) to reimburse the Judson Female College, in Henderson County, North Carolina, for damages sustained from United States troops, after the close of the war between the States;

The petition of Charlotte A. Van Corte;

The bill (H. R. No. 3647) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Waits, of New Orleans, Louisiana;

The bill (H. R. No. 3649) for the relief of J. B. Prean;

A bill to reimburse Robert Clarke; and

The memorial of William Mason, of Taunton, Massachusetts.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3733) for the relief of Sarah Morrison, administratrix of the estate of Christian D. Morrison, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STORM. I call for the reading of that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. The order of the House was that the several committees should be called for reports on private bills to be referred without action by the House to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I submit that under that order it is not in order to call for the reading of these bills.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I wish also to suggest that each one of these bills is accompanied by a report which will be printed. The bills are not reported for action at the present time but simply for reference, and I submit that there is no necessity for their being read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to overrule the point of order. What the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois have stated may be a good argument why the bills should not be read, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] has his right and is entitled to call for the reading.

The bill was read at length, and was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3734) for the relief of William R. Hervey, of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 688) referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Ada A. Andrews to the Court of Claims; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3735) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2700) amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and next of kin of James B. Armstrong, deceased," approved April 3, 1873; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1628) for the relief of Montraville Patton, of Buncombe County, North Carolina; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1515) for the relief of Gustavus F. Jocknick; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 597) for the relief of William A. Griffin; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the memorial of Joseph San Roman, of Cameron County, Texas; and the same was laid on the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 595) for the relief of Benjamin Cooley and James W. Boswell; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3739) for the relief of Thomas Lynch and others, of the city of Chicago; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2260) for the relief of James G. Harrison, a citizen of Indiana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2195) for the relief of workmen employed in the construction of Poverty Island light-house, Lake Michigan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I desire to make an adverse report from the same committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I rise to a point of order. Can an adverse report be entertained under the resolution under which the House is acting?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it can.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. From any other committee except the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order in relation to the Committee on Invalid Pensions has been executed, and the second branch of the order is now being carried out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. What is that?

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. That after that order was executed all the standing committees should be called for private bills for reference to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. But this is not for reference to the Private Calendar. The gentleman proposes to make an adverse report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee himself not long since made objection to a bill reported adversely being laid upon the table, and the Chair ruled that that objection sent the bill to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I am very well aware of that; but I do not make objection in this case.

Mr. STORM. Suppose objection is not made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Very well; then the report would be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOWE also, from the same committee, reported back, with the the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2750) for the relief of Peter P. Marrion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2304) for the relief of Andrew J. Barrett; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2503) for the payment of certain Indian war bonds of the State of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3737) for the relief of N. H. Ryan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1901) for the relief of F. B. Stewart; and the same was laid upon the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3208) for the relief of John Henderson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3738) for the relief of Simon M. Preston, late collector of internal revenue for the first collection district of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on War Claims, made an adverse report on the petition of Francis A. Gibbons; and the same was laid on the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LAWRENCE. O, no; let us get these reports in.

Mr. ATKINS. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The reports are only for reference.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2638) asking compensation for wood taken for public use of troops of the United States near Fort Craig, New Mexico; which was laid upon the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; and they were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports were ordered to be printed:

The claim of R. F. Graves; and

The claim of Gideon J. Pillow.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. Is a motion to adjourn now in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 34.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I call for tellers.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. If gentlemen will withhold their adverse reports I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not make any such agreement.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. Then we will adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, and Mr. LAWRENCE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 30, noes 33.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. LAMAR called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being thirty in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was upon the motion to adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very manifest that there is no quorum present, and of course there is no necessity for our consuming time by calling the yeas and nays. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were called, for the purpose of having the vote again taken upon the motion to adjourn. I think we had better adjourn now.

The vote ordering the yeas and nays was then reconsidered.

The question was again taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and thirty-five minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 17, 1874.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask permission of the Senate to allow me to call up House bill No. 3351. It will take but a very few minutes, and it fulfills an obligation which is imposed on this body that I am sure no Senator will disregard.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3351) to ascertain the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company and other British subjects within the limits which were the subject of the award of His Majesty the Emperor of Germany under the treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that it was stipulated by article 1 of the treaty concluded at Washington on the 15th of June, 1846, between the United States and Great Britain, that the line of boundary between the territories of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, from the point on the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, up to which it had already been ascertained, should be continued westward along that parallel of north latitude "to the middle of the channel which separates the continent from Vancouver's Island, and thence southerly through the middle of said channel and of Fuca Straits to the Pacific Ocean;" and that by article 3 of that treaty it was stipulated that "in the future appropriation of the territory south of the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, as provided in the first article of this treaty, the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and of all British subjects who may be in the occupation of land or other property lawfully acquired within the said Territory, shall be respected;" and that by article 34 of the treaty concluded at Washington on the 8th of May, 1871, the question of where "the boundary which runs southerly through the middle of the channel aforesaid" should be located was submitted to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, whose decision was to be final and without appeal; and that by the award of His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, of October 21, 1872, the boundary was established, and it now devolves upon the United States to discharge its treaty obligations. Therefore the bill provides for the appointment of a commissioner by the President of the United States to make and report to the Secretary of the Interior a list of all British subjects who, on the 15th day of June, 1846, were in the occupation of land, lawfully acquired, within the limits which were the subject of the award of His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, together with a description of the land actually occupied by each at that date. The commissioner shall proceed to the vicinity of the land in question, and there receive proof of the occupancy of such land and of the mode by which such occupancy was acquired, after first giving reasonable notice as to the matters to be reported by him. Such proof shall consist of oral testimony, under oath, and such documentary proofs as the occupants may present. The testimony of all witnesses shall be reduced to writing, and all documentary proof offered by the parties and received by the commissioner shall be attached to the deposition of the party offering such proofs, which testimony and proofs shall be submitted by the commissioner with his report, and such report shall be subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior, whose action thereon shall be final.

The commissioner is to receive for his services ten dollars per diem, together with traveling expenses at the rate of ten cents per mile for the distance actually traveled in the execution of his commission; and the sum of $1,000 is appropriated to defray such expenses.

All British subjects whose claims shall be approved by the Secretary are to be allowed to purchase from the United States the land so designated at any time within one year from such approval, at the ordinary minimum price per acre where the lands are situated outside railroad limits, and at double minimum price where the lands are within railroad limits. Such entries are to be according to legal subdivisions, so as to include the improvements of the occupants; and where two or more parties shall have improvements on the same smallest legal subdivision, they may make a joint entry thereof. In case entry and payment be not made within one year from the date of such approval by the Secretary of the Interior, all possessory rights named in article 3 of the treaty of June 15, 1846, shall be considered forfeited, and the lands shall thereafter be deemed and treated as a part of the public domain, to be disposed of as other lands.

Mr. THURMAN. This may be right, but I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question about it. By the treaty commonly called the Oregon treaty of 1846 it was provided that—

> In the future appropriation of the territory south of the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, as provided in the first article of this treaty, the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, and of all British subjects who may be already in the occupation of land or other property lawfully acquired within the said territory, shall be respected.

After the execution of that treaty the Government of the United States settled with the Hudson's Bay Company and obtained a release; and the question that I wish to have answered is whether that release covers this island which we always claimed after the execution of that treaty, but which was not finally determined to be ours until the Emperor of Germany made his award, or whether the release of the Hudson's Bay Company for which we paid a pretty round sum, and a great deal more in my humble judgment than that company was entitled to, was limited to that territory which was not disputed between us and Great Britain? If these islands which were in dispute were excepted from that release, then it seems but right and in fact we are bound by the treaty to respect those rights or to make some compensation or in some other way to extinguish them. But if they are embraced by the release which was executed to us by the Hudson's Bay Company, then that company can have no further claim.

Mr. HAMLIN. In reply to the inquiry or suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio, I will say that I understand our Government and I understand the British government do not regard the lands lying outside of the line named in the treaty of Washington, so called, as included in the release. In other words, this bill does not cover any of the lands named by the Senator for which compensation has been made. It understood by our Government. It is so understood by the British government. This bill is only to carry out the provisions of the treaty of Washington as understood by the respective parties. None of the land covered by this bill was at all affected in the settlement which was formally made, and therefore the bill is eminently just. I will add that the bill was carefully drawn at the State Department where all the facts were known; it underwent a careful inspection by the Committee on Foreign Relations and received their unanimous approval.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HARVEY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 203) to create two additional land districts in the State of Kansas, have had the same under consideration and have instructed me to report it back without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAME OF A YACHT.

Mr. WASHBURN. There are two little bills on the Calendar that will take but a moment which I should like to have considered. The first is House bill No. 2384.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2384) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Planchette to that of Laxen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY S. HOWE.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 2670.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2670) granting a pension to Mary S. Howe was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Howe, widow of David Howe, late special agent of the provost marshal's office for the fourth district of Massachusetts, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WYOMING TERRITORIAL APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There are a couple of bills reported by the Committee on Territories to which there will be no objection, and I should like to have them disposed of. I ask first for the consideration of House bill No. 2450.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for the apportionment of the Territory of Wyoming for legislative purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the apportionment of the Territory of Wyoming for the election of members of the next Legislative Assembly of the Territory shall be made by the governor thereof, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Wyoming," approved July 25, 1868; but for the purpose of such apportionment it shall not be necessary to take a new or additional census or enumeration of said Territory. The power hereby conferred upon the governor is to be continued in full force until an apportionment shall be made by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, under the provisions of the organic act thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORIAL PENITENTIARIES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One other bill I wish to have passed. It is House bill No. 440.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 440) to amend the act entitled "An act transferring the control of certain territorial penitentiaries to the several Territories in which the same are located," approved January 24, 1873, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act entitled "An act transferring the control of certain territorial penitentiaries to the several Territories in which the same are located," approved January 24, 1873, by striking out the words "Montana," "Idaho," and "Wyoming," wherever the same occur in that act, which is hereafter to have no applicability to the Territories of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming. The penitentiaries in those Territories are to continue under the care and control of the marshal of the United States for the Territories, under and pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act in relation to certain territorial penitentiaries," approved January 10, 1871; which last-mentioned act is revived and re-enacted so far as the same applies to the Territories of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUFFERERS FROM MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. WEST. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3673) making an additional appropriation to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of the act of April 23, 1874, entitled "An act to provide for the relief of the persons suffering from the overflow of the Lower Mississippi River," and for other purposes, to report the same back without amendment and to ask that it be put upon its passage immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think that bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects to the present consideration of the bill.

JAMES A. M'CULLAH.

Mr. SCHURZ. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 3173.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill (H. R. No. 3173) for the relief of James A. McCullah, late collector of the fifth district of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit the account of James A. McCullah, late collector of the fifth district of Missouri, with a sum not exceeding $7,814.19, being the amount alleged to be uncollected on assessment lists transferred by him to his successor in office, and which were destroyed by fire while in the hands of his said successor; but such credits are not to be allowed until it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by affidavits general in their character and applying to said amount in the aggregate, that due diligence was used by McCullah to make collection of the same while the lists remained in his hands, and that it was not collected by him.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the bill by striking out, commencing in line 12, the words "by affidavits general in their character and applying to said amount in the aggregate;" in line 15, by striking out the words "the same" and inserting the words "said taxes;" and in line 16, by striking out the words "it was" and inserting "they were;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That such credits shall not be allowed until it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that due diligence was used by said McCullah to make collection of said taxes while said lists remained in his hands, and that they were not collected by him; it being the intention of this act to relieve said McCullah from complying with the strict requirements of existing regulations relative to the abatement of uncollected taxes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

A. C. VORIS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate to act upon a pension bill which has been reported recently and which will take but a moment. I move to take up House bill No. 2671.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2671) granting a pension to General A. C. Voris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of General A. C. Voris, late colonel of the Sixty-seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, at the rate of thirty dollars a month, to commence from the date of his discharge from the service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA VERTNER JEFFREYS.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 878.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 878) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Rosa Vertner Jeffreys of $5,000, in full compensation for the use of and damages done to her property in Lexington, Kentucky, by reason of occupation of the same by the military authorities of the United States in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2787.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I rose to call for the reading of the report in the case of Mrs. Jeffreys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to reconsider the vote on the passage of that bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I did not know what the bill was about. I move to reconsider the vote if that is necessary to secure an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 878) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys was passed.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey why he made the motion?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I stated that I did not know what the bill was about.

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not hear the Senator ask the question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am perfectly willing to withdraw my motion and hear a statement from the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STEVENSON. This is a bill reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims. The dwelling-house of Mrs. Jeffreys, who was a loyal woman in Lexington, was occupied by the troops of the United States when she was at the North. I think every major-general who was there and occupied it has testified to the merit of this claim. The chairman of the Committee on Claims knows a great deal more about the case than I do, and I would be very glad if he would make a statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I can state very briefly about this claim. The house occupied was one of the finest in the city of Lexington, and it was filled with a library, plate, very fine furniture, and many other appliances of luxury used by the family to which it belonged. If it were possible to allow for the whole extent of valuation that was destroyed in that property $20,000 would not pay the owner, and I regret very much that it was not in the power of the Committee on Claims to allow the full amount, and I regret just as much that the War Department has not seen proper in many instances to take the shoulder-straps from some officers who permitted such spoliations as the evidence showed were permitted in that house and on that property, where very valuable carpets, libraries, &c., in a house occupied as the headquarters of a high commanding officer, were permitted to be despoiled and carried away. The amount allowed, after very great contest in the committee, is not more than one-fourth of the damages suffered, and all such items were excluded. This amount is for rent and actual damages, and it was the result of a very protracted consideration in the committee. I think the claim is entirely just and ought to be paid.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. Of course everybody would be glad under the circumstances to vote this money; but the question I want to ask is one that involves the principle, whether this property was within our lines or within the enemy's lines?

Mr. SCOTT. It was within our lines.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Pdo.

PITTSBURGH MARINE HOSPITAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania is before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. No. 2787) to provide for the sale of the present United States marine hospital and site and the purchase of a new site and erection thereon of a new marine hospital, in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Amendments were reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The first amendment was after the word "point," in line 14, to insert "and in accordance with designs to be prepared by the Supervising Architect to the satisfaction of the supervising surgeon of marine-hospital service and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in line 27, after the word "provided," the words "the terms of sale of the present building will not admit of their remaining therein" and insert "it is practicable so to do; but in the event of such provision being found to be impracticable, then the present building shall be occupied for such patients."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. PATTON.

Mr. CLAYTON. I believe I have not asked the Senate to take up a bill this session. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 459.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (S. No. 459) for the relief of William J. Patton was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The Committee on Indian Affairs have reported quite a number of bills which are on the Calendar which appear to be important. Some are from the House and some are original bills of the Senate. I rise to ask the Senate to give me from one to two hours to take up and act upon bills reported by that committee, and I would ask that they give me to-morrow evening. I propose that we have a recess to-morrow, and that to-morrow evening one or two hours, as shall seem best to the Senate, be given for the purpose indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks the Senate to order a recess to-morrow, the session to-morrow evening being for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the evening is a good time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not in order; but the Senator asks an understanding, so that the motion can be made to-morrow.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. If the motion is not in order now I will withhold it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent, if it is in order, to move that the Senate take a recess to-day for the purpose of considering this evening bills reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move for a recess to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate take a recess from five o'clock to half-past seven o'clock this evening for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it would be much better to give the Senator from half past five as long a time as he may require than it would be for us to adjourn at half past five and come back at half past seven. What can we do from half past five to half past seven except to go through the heated streets, get a poor dinner, and come back again? I would much rather stay here the same length of time that we should have to stay in the aggregate if we took a recess and came back afterward. Therefore let the Senator ask for a particular time this afternoon, say at half past five o'clock, instead of taking a recess at that time, to take up his bills and then go through with them.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will suit me as well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that at five o'clock this afternoon the Senate proceed to consider bills reported by the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection?

Mr. WEST. That arrangement undoubtedly will contribute very much to our comfort and perhaps contribute to the measure that the Senator desires to lay before the Senate; but it might have the effect of indefinitely postponing the post-office appropriation bill. If it is to be understood that that business which the Senator proposes to bring forward shall not interfere with that bill I have no objection, otherwise I must object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will consent that that appropriation bill, if not passed by that time, shall be the unfinished business after we get through.

Mr. WEST. I am obliged to the Senator, but I must object to any such arrangement, for it is an indefinite postponement of the post-office bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not.

Mr. WEST. How not?

Mr. CHANDLER. Because it retains its place.

Mr. WEST. I object to its going over.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent then that the post-office appropriation bill be considered the unfinished business at the adjournment to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed that unanimous consent be given that at five o'clock to-day the Senate will proceed to the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether it is his design to take up any other bill than the river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not desire to take that up this evening. I wish to act on other business.

Mr. SCOTT gave notice that as soon as the post-office appropriation was over, and that was concurred in by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he would ask that the bill reported by the Committee on Claims for the payment of awards made by the claims commissioners be taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to take up the river and harbor bill the moment we get through with the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not propose to object if that is the only bill the Senator from Michigan wishes to consider to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. To-night I wish to take up general business of the Committee on Commerce. That committee has not had a day or an evening, and I propose to take up some twenty or thirty bills to-night, but not the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Let us take the recess, and let the Senate determine in the evening whether they will take up the Senator's bills or the bill I have indicated, and I shall abide the decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to learn whether there is any understanding on this subject. Is it understood that at five o'clock this afternoon the Senate is to proceed to consider the bills reported by the Committee on Commerce, and that the post-office appropriation bill is to be called up before the adjournment in order that it shall remain the unfinished business? Is there objection to that understanding?

Mr. DAVIS. If the river and harbor bill is the only one the Senator from Michigan intends to call up, there is no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I object. I think that bill ought to be considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to take that up the very moment we get through with the post-office bill, and I do not wish to consider it at an unusual hour. I will call it up the very moment the post-office bill is through.

Mr. DAVIS. I want the river and harbor bill considered as soon as the post-office bill is through with.

Mr. CHANDLER. That I shall insist upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No understanding can be arrived at, apparently.

LAND DISTRICT IN COLORADO.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill which was taken up the other morning, read, and considered, and we were just about to proceed to vote on it. It does not require to be read at all. It will take less than quarter of a minute to pass it and there is no objection to it. It is the bill (H. R. No. 1507) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Colorado.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] objected and he has withdrawn his objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A BRIG.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are two local bills in which my constituents are very much interested. I do not think they will take one minute. I ask to take up House bill No. 3591.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3591) to change the name of the brig Sidi to Sea Waif was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM L. ADAMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now ask to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 382.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 382) for the relief of William L. Adams, late collector of customs at Astoria, Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to allow William L. Adams, late collector of the port of Astoria, in the district of Oregon, in the settlement of his accounts, so much of the public funds as were stolen from him and never paid into the Treasury, while engaged, in February, 1866, in conveying said funds from his office in Astoria to San Francisco, California, for the purpose of depositing the same with the United States assistant treasurer in that city, pursuant to the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the sum so allowed said Adams shall not exceed $12,190.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REMISSION OF DUTY ON RECOVERED SUNKEN MERCHANDISE.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 3539) to admit free of duty merchandise sunk for two years and afterward recovered, to report it back without amendment, and as it is very brief, I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. Whenever any ship or vessel, laden with merchandise in whole or in part subject to duty, shall have been sunk in any river, harbor, bay, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States and within its limits, and shall have remained so sunk for the period of not less than two years, and shall be abandoned by the owners, the bill proposes to permit any person or persons who may raise any portion of the cargo of such ship or vessel to bring the merchandise so recovered into the port nearest to the place where such ship or vessel was so sunk free from the payment of any duty thereupon, and without being obliged to enter the same at the custom-house, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to give notice that some time during the day I shall ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 937, annulling some acts of the Legislative Assembly in this District in relation to the Washington Market Company, and if Senators in the mean time will look at report No. 449, I do not think the bill will take five minutes' time.

JOSEPH S. READ.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 2463. It is simply a bill paying a few hundred dollars to a messenger here in the Capitol.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2463) for the relief of Joseph S. Read. It directs the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to pay to Joseph S. Read the sum of $395.72; which is to be received in full compensation for the services of Read as an assistant door-keeper to the House of Representatives from the 1st of August to the 10th of November, in the year 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COST OF SURVEY OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PRATT. At the instance of an old friend, an eminent citizen of the State of Ohio, who for many years was a member of this body and once its Presiding Officer, I desire to call up Senate bill No. 797. It is a bill that was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, fully considered by them, and reported unanimously. It will occupy but a short time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 797) to amend an act in relation to the survey of certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

The bill proposes to repeal so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1871, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1870, as requires the payment by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of the cost of surveying and conveying the lands granted to the company, and no cost for surveying is to be collected from the company.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know how much is involved in this bill and what is to be paid under it? I observe that it proposes to release a railroad company from the cost of surveying lands.

Mr. PRATT. I will briefly state to the Senator from West Virginia what the trouble in this case is which is sought to be remedied by this bill. The charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company provided in its fourth section that a certain quantity of land on each side of the road should be conveyed to the company by patent upon the completion of every section of twenty-five miles, on the report of the commissioners provided for by the law. There are some ten million acres which have been earned by the company which are now withheld from patent because of a clause that was attached to the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1870, which reads as follows:

And provided further, That before any land granted to said company by the United States shall be conveyed to any party entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or relating to said company, there shall be first paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or party in interest.

This proviso is clearly in contravention of the terms of the original charter. Why it was ever put upon this appropriation bill, why it was ever enacted at all, I am at a loss to imagine. As I said a moment ago, the company have built about five hundred and fifty miles of their road, and about ten million acres under their charter are due to the company at this time, but are withheld from them until, in pursuance of this proviso that I have read, the company shall first pay the cost and expenses of the survey. Unless some gentleman is able to demonstrate that this provision hitched upon this appropriation bill was originally right, I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend from Indiana has not yet stated how much money is involved in the bill.

Mr. PRATT. I do not know what was the cost of surveying these lands; but the original charter required that the United States should survey and convey by patent to this company these lands when the company should earn them by constructing sections of twenty-five miles.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that there are seven or eight hundred thousand dollars involved, and that all the railroad companies who have got public lands heretofore have paid the cost of the surveys. I see no good reason why this company should be exempt, or have the money returned to them if they have already paid it. I do not wish to object to the bill, but I want the Senate to know what the bill is.

Mr. PRATT. I have stated the whole question.

Mr. HOWE. My attention is just called to this bill, and if it is not long I should like to have it reported once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HOWE. Have any especial surveys been made upon the application of the company itself?

Mr. PRATT. Not that I am aware of. Here is the provision in the original charter which requires the United States to survey the lands without expense to the company.

Mr. HOWE. I understand about that. I think the subsequent law requiring them to pay the expenses of surveying was wrong; but the same legislation has been had in reference to the Union Pacific, and the Union Pacific it seems to me ought to have the same relief, and I do not know but that the Central Pacific should also. I would inquire of the Senator why he cannot amend his bill so as to extend this relief to other roads?

Mr. PRATT. I would prefer at this stage of the session not to amend the bill. This is clearly a matter of justice to this particular company. I do not know what other companies are entitled to a like measure of justice. But here is the charter which provides that these lands shall be conveyed without expense to the company, as they are earned, and I hope the Senate will pass the bill as it is.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. ALCORN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up House bill No. 2988, a bill to which I do not think there will be any objection.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. ALCORN. I will read it: "A bill (H. R. No. 2988) to provide for the appointment of a commission of engineers to investigate and report a permanent plan for the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River subject to inundation." Pursuant to the recommendation of the committee I reported the bill with an amendment, and I hope it will now be acted upon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the President to assign three officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and to appoint two civil engineers eminent in their profession and who are acquainted with the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River, to serve as a board of commissioners; the president of the board to be designated by the President of the United States. It is to be the duty of the commission to make a full report to the President of the best system for the permanent reclamation and redemption of the alluvial basin from inundation, which report the President is to transmit to Congress at its next session, with such recommendations as he shall think proper.

The second section provides that the members of the commission who may be appointed from civil life shall receive compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum. The commission may employ a secretary at a rate of compensation not exceeding $200 per month for the time he is employed; and the necessary traveling expenses of the members of the commission not officers of the Army, and of the secretary, are to be paid upon the approval of bills for the same by the Secretary of War.

The third section appropriates the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry into effect the foregoing provisions, which is to be subject to disbursement by the Secretary of War in accordance with the provisions of the act.

The Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River reported an amendment to the bill to increase the appropriation in section 3 from $10,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARSHAL FOR WESTERN DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MERRIMON. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 225.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 225) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a western judicial district of North Carolina."

The bill proposes to amend section 8 of the act of June 4, 1872, entitled "An act to establish a western judicial district of North Carolina," by adding thereto the following:

There shall also be appointed a marshal of the United States for said western district of North Carolina, who shall receive such fees and compensation and exercise such powers and perform such duties as are fixed and enjoined by law.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the following words at the end of the bill:

Receive such fees and compensation and exercise such powers and perform such duties as are fixed and enjoined by law.

And to insert:

Be entitled to a salary of $200 per annum; payment to be made quarterly out of the Treasury of the United States, and in addition thereto the fees of office fixed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. GROSVENOR.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 3506. It is a pension bill reported unanimously by the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3603) granting a pension to Mary E. Grosvenor. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Grosvenor, widow of Thomas W. Grosvenor, deceased, late lieutenant-colonel of the Twelfth Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws and for other purposes, commonly known as the tariff bill, with sundry amendments; and I desire to state to the Senate that it is manifest at this stage of the session, if it is expected to pass this tariff bill, it will have to be taken practically as it is. The Committee on Finance have added no new matter, simply because we thought to add new matter would probably defeat the bill at this session; but we have proposed to strike out various sections of the bill, leaving in it the matter to which we think there is no objection in either House.

Mr. CONKLING. What are the sections stricken out?

Mr. SHERMAN. The last section is stricken out in regard to the tax on all sales of bonds, stocks, &c., and there are some sections about the tobacco tax stricken out, and there are modifications in a slight degree of other sections; but the substance of our report is the unobjected points of the House bill. I desire to state further that if Senators propose to pass this bill, it should be done at least to-morrow or the next day, and it will have to be passed without any material amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar and printed, with the amendments of the committee.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT NEW CREEK.

Mr. BOREMAN. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 295.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 295) for the relief of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church at New Creek, West Virginia.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Carskadon, P. M. Dayton, R. S. Dayton, James I. Barrick, Edmund Duling, and William Warner Smith, trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church at New Creek, Mineral County, West Virginia, to be used for church purposes only, the sum of $1,400, for the occupation and conversion to the use of the Army of the United States of the house of worship of the said church at that place as a bakery, by the Commissary Department, from the 1st of April, 1862, until the 28th of November, 1864, under orders of the proper officers of the Army; on which last-mentioned day the house of worship being so occupied was destroyed by the rebel army.

The Committee on Claims proposed an amendment in line 9, to reduce the appropriation from $1,400 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOREMAN. I move to strike out the latter clause, that was put in merely as an incident, "on which last-mentioned day the said house of worship being so occupied was destroyed by the rebel army."

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia what his object is in striking out the latter clause?

Mr. BOREMAN. That is merely stated as an incident. We do not claim for the destruction of the property by the rebel army. We merely claim for the use and occupation of the property.

Mr. WRIGHT. But I suggest to my good friend that if he strikes that clause out, it will be open so that they can make a claim for the destruction of the house hereafter. This $1,000 is intended to cover all damages and the destruction, and if you strike out the latter part the destruction may be claimed for hereafter.

Mr. BOREMAN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Whether the amendment is withdrawn or not, I have a suggestion to make about this bill. It is very hard to object to a claim on behalf of a house of worship, especially when it was used as a bakery; but notwithstanding those peculiarities it is one of the cases in which it is proposed to pay for the occupation or injury of property during the war; and how far or how near in respect of the theater of war, I do not know and the Senate cannot know without hearing the report read and hearing a discussion of this bill. It is taken up although the morning hour has actually expired. I do not mean to object to it if the Senator having charge of the unfinished business does not, but I want to hear the report and I want to know the facts before this bill passes.

Mr. WEST. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BOREMAN. Allow me a word. I would willingly submit this case to the Senator from New York for his judgment if he would take the trouble to read the papers and become familiar with the facts.

Mr. WEST. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the post-office appropriation bill.

MOIETIES UNDER CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. SCOTT. When reports were in order I endeavored to get the floor for the purpose of moving to take up the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the moiety bill, but in the press of business was unable to move it. That being in the nature of a privileged question, I trust there will be no objection to taking it up now, and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that report.

Mr. WEST. Laying aside the post-office bill informally?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I object to that. We cannot afford to allow anything to interpose against an appropriation bill that is ready at this time, unless you are willing to extend the session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine objects.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As soon as this appropriation bill is through we shall not trouble the Senate again for a day or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will now receive strictly morning business, as there was no opportunity for it during the morning hour.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. OGLESBY presented a petition of 500 workingmen of North Chicago, employed in rolling-mills, praying the restoration of the 10 per cent. duty on iron and steel and for free banking; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Add at the end of the first section the following: "The said line shall avoid all Government property."

Also add at the end of the first section the following: "The points of intersection as well as said lateral branch to be approved by the engineer of public buildings and grounds."

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, being the unfinished business of yesterday, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.]

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If I have a right to do so I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as that seems to give general satisfaction, so as to end this debate in reference to the whole subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to permitting the Senator from New Jersey to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. The Chair hears no objection. The amendment is so modified; and the question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, as modified, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. That hereafter the requirement that postage shall be prepaid shall not apply to public documents certified to be such by any member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, or by the President or head of any Executive Department or other person entitled to the franking privilege when the law was passed abolishing the same. And the postage on no single volume of a public document shall exceed the sum of twenty-five cents; and the same, if not prepaid, shall be payable by the person to whom the same may be directed and received; and the words "Public document," written or printed on the envelope containing any public document and subscribed by the member or other person mailing the same, shall be deemed a sufficient certificate that the same is a public document; and the term "public document" shall be deemed to include all publications printed by order of Congress or either House thereof or of any Department of the Government. And if any such document shall not be taken from the post-office to which the same shall be directed within thirty days after being received thereat, the postmaster may sell the same for the amount of postage due thereon, and shall account to the Post-Office Department for the proceeds thereof: Provided, That this shall apply only to documents ordered to be printed previous to the passage of this act.

Mr. CONKLING. I know I have no right to call on the Chair to construe proposed legislation; but I should like to know from the Chair or from somebody what the proviso means when it says "provided, that this shall apply." What is "this?" The right of the postmaster to sell if the postage is not paid, or more or less of the matter that precedes it? I see the Senator from Vermont is here, and I suggest to him that this amendment ought to be changed so as to contain something more than the words "this shall apply." I take it he means the proviso should restrict the provisions of the whole section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that he make it so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I insert the word "section" after the word "this."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. CONKLING. I now ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOPER. I propose an amendment to the amendment to strike out the following words:

> And the postage on no single volume of a public document shall exceed the sum of twenty-five cents, and the same if not prepaid shall be payable by the person to whom the same may be directed and received.

And also to strike out these words:

> And if any such document shall not be taken from the post-office to which the same shall be directed within thirty days after being received thereat, the postmaster may sell the same for the amount of postage due thereon, and shall account to the Post-Office Department for the proceeds thereof.

The effect of my amendment is simply to allow the passage of the documents provided for without postage. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, as amended by the Senator from Vermont, limits it to documents already printed. The amendment I propose seeks to let such documents pass free of postage. That is all.

Mr. WEST. I think the attention of the Senate should be called to the nature of this amendment before it votes without understanding it. It virtually throws open the whole post-office machinery to the transmission of mail matter free of charge and actually restores the franking privilege on all public documents. I think the Senate ought to understand the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee before they vote upon it.

Mr. COOPER. I supposed the Senate did understand it.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CONKLING. I may be alone in not understanding what that amendment is——

Mr. COOPER. I sought to say that it is an amendment providing for the transmission of the documents already ordered to be printed, free of postage. It is confined to those that we have already ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING. Without being sure that I understand the full force of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, it is a matter of great indifference to me whether it shall prevail or not, because I am opposed to this proposition whether it be amended or not, and I will occupy but a single moment in giving my reasons.

I voted to abolish the franking privilege. I thought it ought to be abolished. I am for its abolition or its remaining abolished now. I shall be in favor of it always unless by actual and fair experiment it turns out that its abolition was a blunder. The essence of the abolition of the so-called franking privilege was to subject all mail matter to lawful postage. Surely, everybody will agree with me in that. What does this proposed legislation mean? To exempt large classes of mail matter and of the recipients of mail matter from the postal laws. I will not run the risk of encountering my friend from Ohio by venturing to say that it means a restoration of the franking privilege. I will avoid those words because I have no wish to provoke controversy or difference of opinion. Surely, I state a fact that all will admit when I say that although we have abolished the so-called franking privilege here comes a proposition to send through the mails an immense bulk of matter without its being subjected to the prepayment of any postage and without its being subjected in any event or contingency to that postage which the law declares. I am opposed to it for that reason. I am opposed to it for other reasons, but I stop with that because I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate.

In this connection, Mr. President, I beg to make another remark about a fact which escaped me yesterday. I do not know that I can make the remark without in some way endangering the already imperilled liberty of the people. I find of late that there is great danger in saying anything which relates to newspapers without thereby endangering the very altars of liberty in respect of the press. But notwithstanding that, I venture to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, which in the first instance was adopted, I find these words:

> That newspapers, one copy to each annual subscriber residing within the county where the same are printed in whole or in part, and published, shall go free through the mail; but the same shall not be delivered at letter-carrier offices or distributed by carriers unless postage is paid thereon as now provided by law.

I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio or some other Senator whether any petitions have been received asking for this legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator from New York that this provision of the amendment I offered is found in a bill passed by the House of Representatives at its present session, and I am sure it had the assent and approval of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of this body. As I stated when I introduced the propositiod, the whole of it was simply the work of the Post-Office Committees of the two Houses. It is a restoration to the country papers of the old privilege they so long had, and I think it is right on this ground. The postal laws make no discrimination on account of distance; they charge the little country paper that weighs about an eighth as much as the great metropolitan journals for carrying it twenty miles as much as they do for carrying the metropolitan journals from New York to San Francisco. This provision giving the country papers the freedom of the mails within the county I think is a kind of fair mode of distributing the cost of the mail service between the large and the small papers.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Ohio mistakes me in supposing that I intend in any way at this time to challenge this provision. I do not call attention to it for that purpose. I inquired of the Senator whether petitions had been sent here in behalf of the newspapers asking that they be exempted from postage, that they be exempted from the abolition of the franking privilege.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to say to the Senator that I have received myself such petitions and have presented them for reference; and the country editors in their local meetings have generally asked this privilege.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not know how that was. I believe in my own State some of the papers have denied that this privilege was coveted by newspapers at all. Without, however, saying anything on that point, and without stopping to discuss the merits of this proposition, without indicating any opposition or objection to it, I call attention to it for this reason: Having abolished the franking privilege in order to subject to postage all mail matter, what does this section do? It provides not merely that the little papers as the Senator from Ohio says, but that the great papers, as for example in the city of Chicago, shall go three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, if they emit a Sunday edition, as I believe some of them do, through the great county of Cook. The same thing is true of all the Western States. In the State of Ohio, I have just inquired of the Senator farthest from me [Mr. THURMAN] as to the size of their counties, and the minimum he gave me shows that they are of great geographical extent. Accordingly from every great newspaper center in the country the enormous weight and bulk of newspapers is to be carried daily through the mails for the benefit of subscribers free of postage. Now, without denying the propriety of that, without inviting any discussion in that regard at this time, I ask is not that a very strange commentary upon the theory on which, in accordance with the summons of the press and of public opinion, we enacted that all mail matter should pay postage to the end that the post-office revenues might be nourished and to the end that cheap postage might in the end be won?

I have not before me the figures to show the relative weight and bulk of this species of mail matter. Every Senator knows that it is a great proportion of all the contents of the mail. Now having abolished the franking privilege and having substantially restored it as to all executive officers, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] proved from the papers yesterday, we propose to restore it virtually as to public documents, we propose to restore it as to newspapers; and nothing is to remain except that our constituents cannot write to us and we cannot write to them upon public business without paying postage.

Mr. President, as I said, I mean to stand fairly by that for which I voted, namely, putting an end to that burden and inconvenience which was known as the privilege of franking by members of Congress. I will stand by the whole of it while I can, and when I can stand by only a part of it I will stand by that; but I submit to the Senate that this legislation, the pending proposition taken in connection with all that we have done heretofore and with the other provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, is a virtual recall of the repeal of the franking privilege in every respect except that which pertains to us. It will still stand as a barrier against every pensioner, every constituent, every petitioner, every claimant who has a right to come to Congress. It will stand as a barrier between us and our constituents in respect of public business and everything else; but when you pass beyond that field, it seems to me that by degrees we are giving up the whole thing.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, yesterday I believe was a day for confessions by Senators, and there are very few in this body who did not state how they voted upon the abolition of the franking privilege, and many stated why they voted, and most expressed regret for the vote they had given. I have no apology to make, no confession to make. I did vote to abolish the franking privilege, and I mean faithfully and fairly to stand by it to the end. I think I voted right then. I believe now that I voted right. I do insist that to the country what we are doing will hardly seem reputable to the body, and I feel sorry to see what I witnessed here. I think we had better bear the little burden that the repeal of that law has imposed upon us without exhibiting that kind of uneasiness which will be attributed to this body. Whether it be true or not, it will be said all through the land that all this controversy has relation to the little thing of postage which we pay, and we cannot avoid it if we would. When I speak frankly, I am obliged to admit that there is more in it than I wish there was. It will also be believed all over the country, whatever may be the motive of Senators offering or voting for the proposition, that this amendment if not designed is calculated as the first blow to break down the abolition of the franking privilege by adding immensely to the burden of the mails and making a select quantity of matter go without being prepaid.

I say to the Senator who offered the substantial amendment to this bill—I mean the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN]—that his amendment surprises me as coming from him, and why? He has offered an amendment here which changes the whole law and makes prepayment necessary in relation to all the newspaper press, all the periodicals, and everything that went through the mails before without prepayment. He proposes by his amendment that on every newspaper, save the local newspapers in their counties, postage shall be prepaid, and that upon all mail matter passing between newspapers and periodicals the postage shall be prepaid. As a matter of revenue there can be no doubt that it will be highly beneficial to the Government. We receive now only about one-third part of the revenues which we ought to derive from these two classes of mail matter. Prepayment at one and a half cents an ounce on newspapers and three cents on periodicals will increase your revenues more than a million dollars. But the rate which the Senator has fixed in his amendment will diminish your revenue to a point which no man can calculate. The Senator shakes his head. That is my judgment. When you put your rate of postage at four cents a pound you drive every pound out of your mail, and the express companies will compete with you and compete successfully. I doubt whether the express companies will not compete with you at the rate of one and one-half cents per pound on newspapers and three cents for magazines; but the newspapers say they are willing to accept these terms, and we may try them.

But that was not the point. The Senator for the purpose of aiding the revenues, I apprehend, and of correcting an existing evil proposes an amendment here that all this matter heretofore going through without prepayment shall now be prepaid, and he follows that with an amendment in contravention of the whole spirit of the amendment which he had offered before, that documents shall go free. In other words, he brings in one class which has been free and compels the prepayment of postage, and then he brings in another class on which heretofore prepayment has been required, and lets that go, the postage to be paid at the end of the route.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is perfectly right.

Mr. HAMLIN. O, yes; the Senator thinks it is perfectly right.

Mr. SHERMAN. The present law discriminates in favor of newspapers against public documents; public documents must be prepaid, but newspapers need not be. I propose to reverse it. I think there ought to be a discrimination in favor of the distribution of public documents printed at public expense by Congress; but if I am in error in that, the Senate can very easily vote me down.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is just where I disagree with the Senator. If you are going to require all mail matter to be prepaid, or if you are going to require newspapers and periodicals to be prepaid, you should not be so inconsistent, as I consider it, as to turn around and say at the same time you will let documents go free, and they need not be prepaid. You will find the same result arising from sending public documents without prepayment that you have found by sending newspapers and periodicals without prepayment, to wit: you will not get one-half of the postage that legitimately attaches to them. Your amendment provides that documents remaining in the post-office uncalled for may be sold for the postage. My friend who sits beside me [Mr. HOWE] asked me what was the value of this document, [holding up the report of the Select Committee on the Affairs of the District of Columbia,] which has been laid on our tables this morning, and my reply to him was, "Tell me its weight and what the man who collects paper gives per pound for it, and I will tell you what the document is worth." It is not worth, and will not bring, the amount of the postage. And so your documents that have been transmitted through the mails subject to postage in many instances will never pay the cost of transportation.

But, Mr. President, I insist that it is inconsistent while you are compelling the postage on the newspapers and periodicals to be prepaid to let this other class of documents go free. I oppose the amendment for perhaps a much better reason. I have seen the expenses of our public printing spring from a few hundred thousand dollars up to two or three millions. I never had much confidence in a very great diminution of the expenses of transporting the mails in consequence of the abolition of the franking privilege, but I did have some faith in a very marked reduction in the expenses of our public printing; and if Senators will only hold on to the law precisely as it is, stop distributing these public documents except to persons who wish for them, and are willing to pay the postage on them, and let them be printed at cost for all who wish them, we may witness a still greater diminution in that regard.

But the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] yesterday stated correctly that the actual expenses of printing have been reduced at least one and a half million dollars, and I think we may add one and a half million dollars more to that. But if you inaugurate a measure that will let members send these documents away by simply putting their names upon them and trusting the expense of their transmission to be paid by the recipients, you encourage precisely what we shall see; you encourage the printing of these documents, you beat down the repeal of the franking privilege, and you come back to all the abuses of an immense quantity of printing that costs you millions of dollars each year. That will be the result of it. The country will so look at it. It will end in that.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment to the amendment will be defeated, and then I hope the whole amendment will be defeated. I think that is in the line of sound economy. I think that is in the line of correct principle.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not know whether I have a confession to make or not. If I have, it is a confession of ignorance, for I did not know enough to vote for the abolition of the franking privilege; and the reason I did not vote for it was this: although it had suffered abuse, yet it appeared to me that it was important for the people of the country that they should have that information which they could secure by the transmission through the mails of public documents and information which was sent from this Capitol throughout the country. It did not appear to me to be advisable to destroy the bridge that carried this news until you had provided some other way to cross the river. For that reason I did not vote for the abolition of the franking privilege; nor have I since it was abolished, if I recollect the course I have taken, voted in any manner for the restoration of the privilege or any portion of it.

My own judgment now is that we should wait until the people know by actual experience whether it is wise or not to restore it; that we should wait until we shall have a general law which will meet the demands of the public, and also furnish Congress and the heads of the Departments with those facilities which are necessary to transmit information from the capital throughout the country; and until the public demand shall be crystallized in such a manner as to present to us some plan which will meet this contingency, I do not propose to vote for any measure which will tend to restore the franking privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to inquire of the Senator from New Jersey what is meant precisely by the expression, "a single document?"

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That has been altered to "a single volume of a document," by an amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I think that is a better expression. Would the Senator object to changing the rate of postage from twenty-five cents per volume to a certain rate per pound, say four or five or six cents per pound?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Would not that come to about the same thing on the average?

Mr. HOWE. I do not know how it would average, but I think it would be more equitable.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the rule adopted in the bill, to pay by the pound.

Mr. HOWE. That would make this amendment in harmony with the principle of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes; entirely.

Mr. HOWE. What is the rate per pound in the bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Eight cents.

Mr. HOWE. That is too high.

Mr. SHERMAN. Four cents.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Four cents for newspapers, eight cents for books.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My impression is you would realize as much revenue in that way; but I do not know. I should be willing to accept such an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator from Minnesota will know what the rate is. I ask him what is the rate fixed for books per pound? Is it eight cents?

Mr. RAMSEY. That is third-class matter. We are simply legislating now on second-class matter—newspapers to subscribers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We do not raise that question. As it now stands, I think it is sixteen cents a pound.

Mr. RAMSEY. Books are two cents an ounce. The proposition appears to be to reduce it to one cent for two ounces, making it uniform with the other rates for third-class matter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding is that it is eight cents a pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. Eight cents for books and four cents a pound for newspapers and periodicals.

Mr. HOWE. I think eight cents is perhaps a little high.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see that the postage on newspapers and pamphlets is only four cents a pound, and that would be high enough for public documents, in my judgment.

Mr. HOWE. I think it would be.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On what principle could that be so? Why should we burden the mail with documents at a lower rate than the publishers of other books not less desirable possibly, I might venture to say to the people, are permitted to send them through the mails?

Mr. HOWE. For a very good reason as it seems to me. First, we do burden the people with the expense of publishing these books upon the theory that they are specially desirable and necessary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does not my honorable friend understand that we have abolished the franking privilege for the very reason that the sending of these documents through the mail had become a burden to the people?

Mr. HOWE. Well, partly that and partly because the people felt that they did not get the benefits of the books that they paid for publishing; whereas if you let the books go to those who call for them and are willing to pay the postage upon them, those will get the books who most desire them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, let me state a proposition which is in harmony with the whole features of this bill, and that is, that there shall be some adequate compensation to the service for all mailable matter transmitted through the mails.

Mr. HOWE. Some compensation?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Some equitable, fair compensation; some remunerative compensation.

Mr. HOWE. Very good.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. You have placed the rate upon the books at eight cents per pound, and graduated other things accordingly.

Mr. HOWE. That is the rate assigned to merchants who make books for sale and for profit, and is the rate at which the Government will undertake to carry that kind of commodity from the merchant to the purchaser. This is very different.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not stating it exactly, perhaps; that is the price at which the publishers are able to communicate with their customers. Now, why should a different rate apply in regard to public documents which people may desire? The people on all hands and on all sides desire to use this service for the transmission of books. At least I assume they do, because we have adopted that policy. Now, why should there be the slightest discrimination as to the class of books which the people may receive?

Mr. HOWE. Because, as I understand, there is no analogy, there is no similitude between the document which you publish by order of Congress or a House of Congress and the book which the Harpers publish for the trade; the one being a collation of these elementary political facts, a knowledge of which on the part of the people is essential both to the Government and to the people, not merely essential to the one who gets the facts, but essential to the life and well-being of every one of us that all our neighbors have possession of these facts; and I am one of those who believe that the weakest spot in our existence to-day grows out of the simple fact that so few of our people know what the Government is actually doing; whereas the book which is published by manufacturers engaged in that business is published for the sole amusement, instruction, or profit of him who will buy it. It is a pure business transaction. It is published by the publication house for profit, and is bought for individual instruction and individual advantage. The Government sends this last book from the manufacturer to the purchaser at a price which will compensate the Government. This other book I think should be sent through the mails at something less. We have heretofore sent it for nothing. I do not see any reason why we should not send it now for a sum which will fairly defray the cost of its transmission. I think that five cents per pound would be sufficient to cover that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Was the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin to strike out "twenty-five cents" and insert "at the same rate fixed for periodicals?"

Mr. HOWE. I would agree to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Say "the same rate per pound," or "per ounce."

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have taken no part in this discussion; but there is one view which I should like to move as an amendment if it is in order, and I presume it is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to move an amendment that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall go free through the mails. The people of this country have a right to know what is done in Congress, and they can learn that in no authentic way except by the record of our debates. Now, to whom do the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS go? To whom did the Congressional Globe go before? I can speak for myself, and I think in doing so perhaps I am repeating the experience of every Senator on this floor. I forget the exact number of copies that I received of the Congressional Globe; I think about seventy. At least one-half of those I sent off to public libraries, to the State library, to certain great libraries in the cities, to college libraries, and some smaller libraries, taking about one-half. The rest go to the publishers of the newspapers.

There is, therefore, in the distribution of that RECORD, the best use possible made, so that the mass of the people can have access to it and see what their public servants have done. It cannot be said of them that they were so much waste paper; that they serve to make wrappers for grocers. On the contrary, they are kept in the libraries to which they are sent, or they are carefully preserved by the editors of newspapers who are desirous to have them that they may inspect the proceedings of Congress.

It is a distribution, therefore, of the debates of Congress which Congress ought to make for the information of the people, and I see no reason in the world why any tax should be levied upon that publication. It ought to pass free through the mails. For the very same reason that it is printed at the expense of the Government, for the very same reason it should be distributed free by the Government. Why print it at all, pray? Why not limit ourselves to our Journal? Why have anything in print of our debates if the matter printed is not to be distributed? Whatever may be the case with documents—I do not call the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a document—whatever may be the case with documents properly speaking, whether they should pay postage or should not pay postage, in respect to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I submit to the Senate that we are bound to distribute that, and distribute it without cost. In other words, we are bound to inform the people as well as we are able to do it what their representatives in the Government have been about.

I therefore move to add at the end of the pending amendment the following proviso:

And provided further, That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall be carried through the mails free of postage.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is that in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This subject seems to be a very prolific source of debate, and to afford a grand opportunity for the presentation of all sorts of unconsidered propositions. If it is in order, I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order. The Senator from Maine moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, which will carry the amendment to the amendment with it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That simply carries the pending amendment on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Maine moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such is the motion.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does that carry all amendments with it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the amendments to the pending amendment. There is but one.

Mr. STEVENSON. How would it affect the amendment which is offered by the honorable Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would carry that amendment with it.

Mr. THURMAN. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio to withdraw his amendment and let us take a vote on this one, and then he can renew his amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. No; I would rather they should go together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Maine is to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, which carries with it the proposition of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let the amendment be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Chair be kind enough to state exactly what will be carried on the table if this motion prevails?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and the amendment to that proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. CONKLING. Nothing else?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing else.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And also the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] limiting the amendment only to the distribution of the books on hand.

Mr. CONKLING. That is part of the original amendment now.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Conkling, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Patterson, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Washburn, West, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Bogy, Carpenter, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Cameron, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Norwood, Spencer, Stewart, Stockton, and Wadleigh—19.

So the motion to lay the amendment on the table was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, by adding:

And provided further, That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall be carried through the mails free of postage.

Mr. HOWE. Whom shall they be carried to?

Mr. THURMAN. To whoever they are directed to.

Mr. HOWE. Who shall direct them?

Mr. THURMAN. Somebody who writes a fair, good hand. It is only reviving what was the law as to the Globe. The Congressional Globe went through the mail without any frank. The law expressly so provided.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio in his amendment to add "that the words 'CONGRESSIONAL RECORD' shall be printed on the outside cover," so as to show the character of the document. That was the enactment in regard to the Congressional Globe.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no objection to that, but I do not think it is necessary. Suppose I direct that [holding up to-day's RECORD] to the Ohio State Library, you can see by looking at the wrapper that it is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Why should it not go through the mail without any more formality? The Clerk can add the words indicated, however, if the Senate desire.

Mr. CONKLING. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose we add to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, when he comes to send one of his speeches, as I hope he will to as many persons as he can afford to send it to, and take a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, not the whole of it, will that go free under this provision, or must he buy the whole RECORD?

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator mean a pamphlet speech?

Mr. CONKLING. No. If my friend from Ohio takes his speech in the RECORD to send off, must he buy the whole RECORD of that day although it may contain four times as many columns as the speech occupies, or will that part of the RECORD which contains his speech alone go free?

Mr. THURMAN. If I were Postmaster-General I should take the words "Congressional Record" to mean the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and not to mean a portion of it cut out in that way. If the Senator from New York were to send off one of his speeches in the way he proposes to do, there might be some injury done in the public mind. The answer to it ought to go along with it, the antidote with the poison.

Mr. CONKLING. We could arrange that by a partnership; the Senator and I could club together and each contribute and send the two off in couples. The Senator has so much law and I have none that I hope he will not be impatient with me if I take off the first fourteen leaves of the RECORD to-day, marked "Congressional Record," and ask whether, under this provision they may go through the mail, or whether I must buy all the rest of this RECORD, containing to-day seventy-six pages? And I am serious about this because it will make a difference in my vote.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator does not speak of pamphlets I agree with him. I supposed he referred to pamphlet speeches. The whole includes all the parts, undoubtedly.

Mr. CONKLING. I think that aids the Senator's proposition if it is so.

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly it is so.

Mr. CONKLING. A Senator wants to send off two or three pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-day; must he buy the whole seventy-six pages and send them through the mail in order that he may send the two or three pages to a constituent who may be interested in something there?

Mr. CARPENTER. Say "the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any part thereof."

Mr. CONKLING. I think that would do.

Mr. THURMAN. Well I will put in "the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any part thereof."

The PRESIDING OEFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. ALCORN. I suggest to the honorable Senator from Ohio whether he is not involving himself in a little difficulty and almost absurdity by the proposition he now makes? I hope he will not accept those words "or any part thereof." The RECORD contains the proceedings of Congress in entirety.

Mr. CONKLING. Here is the RECORD to-day of seventy-six pages. Does the Senator think it would be economical to the Government or fair to a Senator who wished to pay for something in it and to send it off, that he should be obliged to buy and pay for seventy-six pages of quarto printed matter and compel the mail to carry it when a single page may be all he wants to-day to transmit?

Mr. ALCORN. If the Senator were to inquire of me, I might say that perhaps I would vote for a proposition to permit the honorable Senator from New York to send his speeches printed in pamphlet form.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator should say that, I could not credit it. It would be a draft on my credulity that I could not honor.

Mr. ALCORN. I do not ask the Senator to make any extraordinary draughts on his credulity. I merely make a suggestion. The RECORD is an entirety, it is the day's doings in the Congress of the United States, and it is the purpose to send that RECORD out for the benefit of the people. It is a benefit to the country and not to a particular member of Congress that this free transmission through the mail is allowed. I desire to strip it of the characteristic of being a benefit to the member of Congress himself, but it shall go to the country as an entirety, as the record of Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then we ought to make another amendment, because if the honorable Senator from Mississippi should make one of his able speeches it could not go to the country without benefiting that Senator, and therefore it would be improper to send it through the mails.

Mr. ALCORN. If I possessed the ability of throwing light on every subject that comes up here and did attempt it in the degree that is attempted by my honorable friend from Wisconsin, then I would be held vulnerable to the charge he makes; but, sir, I see the purpose of this.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is greatly in danger of having the beauty and symmetry of it marred; but nevertheless, as it illustrates a principle, I am glad to see it go on. It did seem to be a little striking when the Senator from Ohio, having moved that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, being a record of our proceedings, should go free through the mails, said that the people ought to know everything that Congress says and does. There did seem to be some little force in the argument; but when you come to dilute it, when you come to get it down to a fine point to illustrate the exact thing we are about, it somehow or other reflects the idea that we want to get out to the country as cheaply as possible, in some cheap way, now that the franking privilege is abolished, the little bits of things that we say here before the Senate. Although it is a little gross perhaps to send the whole book, we are asked why can we not send a few pages, why not the little wise sayings that we get off? Suppose they are but a snatch, suppose they are just a paragraph, why should they not go free? To illustrate, why should not all this be put on the wires? Why should we not extend the wires from this Chamber that now go to the Departments, so that whatever we utter may go on the wings of lightning everywhere all over this land, so that my honorable friend may electrify his constituents morning, noon, and night? Then they would know when he sits down, when he gets up, and after he utters a thing here why should it not go to them? My respect for the honorable Senator and my admiration for his character and abilities are such that I should be delighted to see that thing done. Why not have something of that sort, so that all the speeches we utter, all the wise sayings we utter should go out in one stream circulating on the wires everywhere?

Mr. CONKLING. The postal telegraph could do that!

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The postal telegraph! If we may send out this volume, this book which we publish every morning, containing everything we say, word for word, why, if we choose to send detached portions which may affect one of our constituents and not the whole, should we not be at liberty to do that?

Mr. President, I wish we would get done with this. I want to get this bill through; but if there are so many conceits to be put upon it I see little hope. I know my honorable friend from Ohio does not want to embarrass this bill, but after the people of the United States had insisted upon it that the carrying of public documents, including the Congressional Globe, was an abuse, and after we had put an end to it, the idea that within a twelvemonth or so after we enacted the repeal, and enacted it under circumstances of such solemnity that one would think nobody who attended that ceremony would ever raise a voice in that direction, we should be found here by these insidious steps working our way back to the free delivery of the choice things we publish in the Senate Chamber does seem to me extraordinary.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, there never was any complaint in this country that the Congressional Globe or the speeches of members of Congress delivered on the floor of the Senate or the House of Representatives were sent free through the mail. There never was any complaint by the people of any such thing. The complaints made were of the abuses of the franking privilege and of the violations of law. If the law had never been violated it never would have been repealed. It was because it gave rise to such violations of law, such abuses, that the people clamored for its repeal. It was not much of a clamor either; it was a stimulated thing got up in this city of Washington to give a certain officer of the Government a great reputation as a mighty reformer; and how much he has reformed, and how much expense he has saved to the people, we know now by the reports. But there were abuses, abuses that made me vote for its repeal; and what were they, pray? They were that perhaps one entire half of the franked matter that went through the mail in times of high political excitement was matter that was not frankable at all under the law. Do you know, sir, that if you were to deliver a speech outside of the Halls of Congress there never was a law which authorized you to frank that speech?

Mr. CARPENTER. If it was less than four ounces?

Mr. THURMAN. If it was less than four ounces.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not mistaken, for I have looked carefully into it. You had a right to frank your correspondence.

Mr. CARPENTER. The language of the law I think was "a package weighing not to exceed four ounces."

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir. You had a right to frank your correspondence; you had a right to frank public documents. There was no necessity for a law to frank the Congressional Globe, for it was expressly provided that it should go free through the mails. You had a right to frank speeches delivered in Congress, too, but you had not a right to frank even your own speech that was not made in Congress, and much less had you a right to frank here political pamphlets that were made up for electioneering purposes. How was it in the last presidential contest? I saw with my own eyes this Capitol filled after the adjournment of Congress two years ago with men, women, and children putting up all kinds of political stuff, extracts from the New York Tribune, almost a volume, to show what Greeley had said about the democrats, and not very interesting reading, I can tell you.

Mr. CARPENTER. To the democrats? [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. Not to the democrats. Then in high Dutch and in low Dutch and in French were all sorts of political pamphlets of all kinds and descriptions. This Capitol was filled with men, women, and children putting them up in Government wrappers, and clerks were writing on them the franks of members of Congress when the members of Congress were hundred of miles away. I saw that with my own eyes. I have in my house now four of these documents, all purporting to be franked by the same man and his name written by four different persons, and he hundreds of miles away from Washington City at the time. That was the thing that was going on. It was because of the abuses of the franking privilege; it was because of the violations of law that it was abolished. But in respect to the provision of law that the Congressional Globe should go free through the mails there never was any complaint. That was not the franking privilege at all. There was no necessity for anybody to frank a Congressional Globe, for the law passed it free through the mail. Therefore when petitions came here asking for the abolition of the franking privilege they did not ask you to repeal that provision of the law which let the record of congressional debates go free through the mails. The people want those debates; they want to see what their public servants are doing; they want to know the reasons which they give for their action and for their votes.

My amendment simply proposes, not to restore the franking privilege, not to restore anything that came within the franking privilege as it existed, but to restore the old provision that made the record of the debates of Congress pass through the mail free without any frank at all. It is an entire mistake to treat this provision as having been a provision of law authorizing franking. It was not so at all.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him to read the statute?

Mr. THURMAN. In a moment. On the contrary, the fact was that by special provision of law the record of the debates of Congress went through the mail free.

Now I have a word or two to say in answer to my friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] who has employed that wit which he possesses in such great abundance upon this amendment. He says that when this thing comes to be diluted, and we see what it is, it is only an attempt of Senators to get their speeches before the public. I submit to him that it is a duty that a Senator owes to send his speeches to his constituents that they may know what are his opinions and what he has been saying upon public measures that interest them; and instead of a Senator being reproached for that, that Senator best discharges his duties who, among the other good things he does, sends to his constituents the opinions which he as their representative has expressed in the Congress of the United States.

But, sir, that does not cover the case at all. Why is it that you publish seventy-odd copies for each Senator of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the Congressional Globe? When a Senator sends one of those copies, three or four big volumes on which the postage would be I do not know how much, perhaps five, or six, or seven dollars——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On an average, for five volumes of one session, $3.50 I think.

Mr. THURMAN. When we publish such a book as that, I want to send it to libraries as I have been accustomed to do ever since I have had a seat here. I have sent copies of the Globe to the Mechanics' Library of Cincinnati, to the Mercantile Library of Cincinnati, to the Ohio State Library, to the various colleges in Ohio. In that way I have always disposed of more than half of those assigned to me. Why ought they not to pass free through the mail? They are part of the public transactions of this Government, and for almost as strong a reason as that which requires you to publish your laws you ought to publish and distribute your debates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment.

Mr. ALCORN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, shall be carried through the mails free of postage.

Mr. ALCORN. I shall not vote for that amendment as it is presented. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day is seventy-six pages. Under the operation of the amendment I can tear off thirty-eight leaves and each and every one of them may be sent through the mail separately. I do not think it would give strength to the proposition.

Mr. CONKLING. They would not weigh any more in that way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The amendment which I introduced, as modified by the Senator from Vermont, simply provides for disposing of the printed matter which we have on hand by suffering those who wish these documents to pay the postage for them when they are received. I hope that that amendment will not be loaded down with other provisions. When we come here at another session if we want to make arrangement for the RECORD, or for anything else, then is the time to do it, not now.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, it seems to me if the Senator from Ohio means to make the amendment operate equally and fairly he ought to provide not merely that anybody may send the RECORD through the mails free, but that anybody may have the RECORD to send free through the mails. If the amendment stands in the language the Senator has put it in, it allows that one document, that one commodity, to be carried through the mails for nothing; not merely carried from the office of publication to the subscriber for nothing, but the bound volumes, sets, are included, and they can be carried from the office of publication, they can be carried from anybody who has them. The book merchants who have back numbers can send them to purchasers; they can travel to and fro in the mail. That is perhaps right enough; but now if you provide that anybody may have them printed by just calling at the Government Printing Office, then, although it may not be a sensible provision, it would be an equitable one, so far as individuals are concerned.

Mr. THURMAN. Perhaps everybody ought to have the laws of the United States; but we only print a limited number of them and so we print a limited number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is in the discretion of Congress to print more or less as it sees fit.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator does not propose to send the laws free through the mail?

Mr. THURMAN. They ought to be.

Mr. HOWE. It is not included in the amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. One amendment for one point is enough at a time.

Mr. HOWE. There are those here who think a great many things ought to be sent free through the mails, but it is not exactly the effort that we are aiming at to provide for sending everything through the mails free.

Mr. WEST. I am admonished by the prolongation of this debate that probably this bill will not be finished if the Senate adjourns at its customary hour. I desire to give notice to the Senate now that I shall ask the Senate to remain here this evening until a final vote on the bill can be had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. THURMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAGER. I do not understand the amendment now before the Senate. I should like to have it reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill. If my memory serves me aright they had substantially finished that work when a class of amendments was presented to the bill which either directly or remotely had reference to the franking privilege. I have voted on several occasions this session on that subject, without having said anything about what my views were on the question. Although the RECORD does furnish to those who care to trace it something of the history of a man's views, it furnishes those views in such disconnected and so far-apart ways that unless it be studied connectedly through no man will ever know what a representative's views upon any given question are unless he hears something from that representative himself. It is too big a job to go all through the RECORD or the Globe to trace out the meanderings of a representative's votes to find out just where he stood or just where he did not stand upon any question before the country.

If I understand the public sentiment on this question of the franking privilege in all of its phases and in all of its bearings, if I have any just appreciation of the public feeling upon that question, it is that the country is opposed to it. I am very sincere in saying that I have arrived at this conclusion after giving some attention to the subject. I remember perfectly well that petitions were sent over the country a few years ago through the Post-Office Department soliciting signatures to those petitions for the repeal of the franking privilege; but I do not remember that where I live any man ever signed such a petition who was not absolutely in favor of it. It had grown to be in the public estimation a pestiferous thing.

I am free to confess that the public were not entirely unclouded in their consideration of that question. I believe that a great many false statements and representations were made to the public in regard to it. But as the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] has said on more than one occasion in the last forty-eight hours, and I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] too, there was a well-settled belief in the country that the franking privilege had been abused. I think the statement of both those Senators will be corroborated by the recollection of every member on this floor as to the public sentiment in that direction, that the franking privilege had been abused. Therefore the country said with almost one voice, "Let us get rid of the franking privilege." Did they say anything else? If I understand the public they said something else; and when I adopt the public view upon a question I adopt it in all its length and depth and breadth. I take them at what I understand them to say. Accompanying that expression of public feeling in regard to the franking privilege there was another expression of the public very largely indulged in by the people, that Congress was publishing too much trash, that many of the documents were worthless or at any rate were undesirable; and the same public voice that said "Let there be no more franking privilege," also said "Let there be no more publication of worthless and unnecessary public documents." They did not discriminate between what were good documents and what were worthless documents; but there was a general sweeping denunciation through the country; and every other man you would meet would say "Of what consequence to me is that report" or "that document? I care nothing about it." Once in a while a man would get an Agricultural Report or possibly a report upon some of the western surveys or explorations, and once in a while an executive document—that is a document from one of the Departments of the executive branch of the Government—with which he was satisfied; and I have occasionally during the past winter received requests from the people of the West for executive documents, sometimes for the Congressional Directory, sometimes for copies of the Constitution of the United States, sometimes for the Agricultural Report, sometimes for surveys and explorations in the western country; but I have never yet received a request for a Coast Survey report, for the report of the survey across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. I have received no request for the volume of statistics in regard to commercial relations, or in regard to finance, or in regard to many other reports published by Congress. Some of the grangers have asked for Agricultural Reports and for copies of the census of 1870 and of the censuses compendium; but in almost every instance in which I have received a request from Illinois for a public document either the postage has been sent to me or I have been requested to send it to the applicant by express.

I have not been borne down by my constituents; I have not been worried much under the prepayment of postage on public documents. I am not overly fond of that kind of enjoyment. So I wish to consider this franking privilege in all its length and breadth, and I shall vote against its restoration. Therefore I shall vote for the necessary corollary of that, which was so elegantly alluded to yesterday by the stalwart eloquence of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] He appealed to me to stand by him. I will stand by him or any other Senator here in voting against the restoration of the franking privilege. I have already voted once this morning in that direction, and I will stand by him and by every other Senator to keep the franking privilege out of the laws of Congress. I am asked if I ought not to send the RECORD through the mails free? Well, I ought not to send the RECORD through the mails free unless I can send a good record; and if I can send the RECORD how many can I send free? How many shall I get? Probably thirty or forty. That is all I can send.

How is it in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to give seventy-five thousand copies of the Agricultural Report to the Senate for distribution? I should get one thousand copies and my colleague would get one thousand copies. There would be two thousand copies of the Agricultural Report for distribution in Illinois. How many legal voters are there in the State of Illinois to-day? Nearly six hundred thousand; and my colleague and I would get two thousand to distribute partially to a few friends, and you call on the other voters of Illinois to pay for the publication of the document, to pay for transmitting it free through the mails to two thousand selected men while the other five hundred and ninety-eight thousand go without it. Now I ask the public of Illinois if they can indorse that sort of distribution of documents? I do not ask Senators, I ask the voters of the State of Illinois if they have a right to call on me to stand here and vote for the publication and distribution of a partial and limited number of public documents for the favor and accommodation of my few friends, not to go to the residue of the public of the State of Illinois? I appeal to the voters of Illinois and ask them whether I shall give such a vote as that? No, I will not give it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois should address the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. As I am not one of the voters of Illinois, and therefore am not just now addressed by the Senator from Illinois, I do not know but that it would be impertinent in me to ask him a question; but if I may be allowed as one not having the privilege of living in Illinois to ask him a question, I would ask him whether he proposes to print as many copies of the laws of the United States as will furnish every man, woman, and child in Illinois with a copy? Will he dare to limit the number of the laws of the United States and put them in the hands of a favored few?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, I will dare to limit the number to be published of the laws passed by the national Congress, and I will dare to limit the number of every public document ordered by Congress; and I will go further and dare to do what the Senator from Ohio, I believe, will not dare to do, I will say to the people of Illinois and to the people of the United States that the information that comes to this body through the legitimate channels of the Government and from the recognized constitutional Departments of the Government shall be published by authority of Congress, and under the direction of the Committee on Public Printing of both Houses of Congress it shall be distributed to all the people who will pay the postage and pay the cost of the printing and the paper in the document. That is what I will vote. That is the franking privilege that I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's ten minutes have expired.

Mr. OGLESBY. It would afford me infinite pleasure to address myself to the Chair ten minutes longer. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator will have the privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be delighted to hear the Senator. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Bogy, Carpenter, Clayton, Davis, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Ingalls, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Wadleigh—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Conkling, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Washburn, West, and Windom—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Bogy, Carpenter, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Ingalls, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon,, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Conkling, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, and West—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Cameron, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Robertson, and Wright—14.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to move an amendment to the bill, merely to correct an omission.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have an amendment lying on the Secretary's desk which I wish to have acted upon.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senator will allow this to go on. It is in harmony with the sections we have already adopted. The amendment is to add the following:

SEC.—. That so much of this act as changes the rate of postage on newspapers and periodical publications shall not take effect until the 1st day of January next.

Mr. WEST. I should like to inquire of the Senator what is the occasion for that proposition?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is most obvious to any one. It was part of the original proposition as reported from the Post-Office Committee and as it came from the House of Representatives. Contracts are already made by publishers with their subscribers for the current year. We have now provided for a new state of things which ought not to take them unawares, and this amendment postpones its operation until the 1st of January.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was in the original proposition I submitted, but I struck it out and handed it to the Senator so that his attention might be directed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have an amendment on the table, which I now offer and ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert as an additional section the following:

That the act entitled "An act to abolish the franking privilege," approved January 31, 1873, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the franking privilege, as the same existed prior to the passage of said act, is hereby restored.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, inasmuch as we have restored the franking privilege in its most obnoxious form to all the heads of Departments and taken it away from ourselves, and we propose to send public documents to our constituents for the purpose of giving them information and letting them know what we do, I offer this amendment, so that Senators can put themselves squarely on the record. I desire a vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Carpenter, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Kelly, Merrimon, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Sprague, Stevenson, and Tipton—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Lewis, McCreery, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Windom—34.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Brownlow, Cameron, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Saulsbury, Spencer, and Wright—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which has not yet been acted upon. It will be reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is superseded.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was in section 1, line 10, to add the following proviso to the clause appropriating $16,400,000 for inland mail transportation:

Provided, That postages shall hereafter be prepaid on all mailable matter at the time of mailing; and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That amendment is superseded by the amendment which has been adopted.

Mr. WEST. The committee withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. WEST. I should like an opportunity of making a typographical correction in line 8 of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio; and that is, to strike out the comma after the word "circulars" to make it correspond with the present law, as one of those commas would be very apt to give us trouble again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. I offer the following amendment:

And that three hundred thousand copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture shall be printed for circulation, which shall be duly stamped with postage stamps; two hundred thousand copies for the use of the House, seventy-five thousand copies for the use of the Senate, and twenty-five thousand copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. CONKLING. How many are ordered now?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not in favor of this amendment; but the proportions are not right. That is a document of which the House of Representatives have always had a much larger proportional number than the Senate. I do not think there has ever been an occasion when as many as seventy-five thousand copies have been distributed to Senators, while there have been more than one hundred thousand copies distributed among members of the House. It is a document which according to all the precedents of Congress belongs more to Representatives than to Senators.

Mr. MORTON. Under the amendment the number is two hundred thousand for the Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are documents of which Senators have the larger number, such as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We have forty to each Senator, and the House of Representatives have twenty-five to each member; but the custom has always been to give a much larger number of the Agricultural Report to each Representative than to each Senator; for the manifest reason that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is intended for distribution in the way in which the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] whom I do not now see in his seat, said he distributed his, to libraries and to editors, extending over all the State, of course, while the Agricultural Report is sent or should be sent to farmers. It is for popular distribution, while the RECORD is for a different kind of distribution and for more permanent uses. I think, therefore, it would be better to alter the proportion fixed in this amendment, giving to Representatives a larger number and to Senators a smaller number, although I state frankly I shall vote against the proposition.

Mr. STEVENSON. I only desire that the farmers of this country shall have the benefit of the Agricultural Bureau, and it is immaterial to me whether the report is distributed by the House or the Senate. I propose to print two hundred thousand for the use of the House and seventy-five thousand for the Senate, so that the people shall get it. I have given to the Commissioner twenty-five thousand, because the libraries and the granges who have libraries and all these people will write to him for a copy and will get it, and it seems to me the proportion is about right.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I simply desire to emphasize an important statement of my honorable friend from Kentucky. In the spirit of liberality and magnanimity so worthy of the large-heartedness of that Senator he is disposed to do a big thing, a grand thing for the farmers! There are about six millions of them, I believe, and he proposes to distribute among them, to eke out through the partiality of Senators and members of Congress three hundred thousand copies of this report! I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am disposed only to do what I think is my duty as a Senator. I represent here in part an agricultural State, and I am unwilling that the people of this country should be taxed to keep up a magnificent Bureau here where plants, trees, foreign seeds, and all things pertaining to agriculture are kept for the inspection of the people who come to Washington without giving the people at large the benefit of that which they are taxed to support. That may be big-heartedness or it may be blindness; I do not care which. It seems to me you should either abolish the Commissioner of Agriculture, or allow the people who are practical farmers to have the benefit of his research and of his foreign importations. Let us give them all the means of progress in agriculture; let us furnish them with the material by which they can advance the agriculture of the country. I hope Senators will not attempt to kill off this proposition by sidebar remarks.

I repeat, sir, let us either abolish the Agricultural Bureau, or distribute among the people the results of the labor of that Bureau. That is the simple question. If this were an original question as to the establishment of that Bureau probably I should not support it. I admit it has been of great benefit. It is among the instrumentalities of the Government which are in great favor with the people, and I have no wish to make capital out of this subject. My only desire is, as long as this Bureau is kept up, to let the people have, free of expense, the annual report of that Bureau. I hope the yeas and nays will be taken on the amendment, so that every Senator can express his opinion upon it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the honorable Senator from Kentucky that for the same reason he urges in this case he ought to send to the people the report of the Commissioner of Education. There is a Bureau of Education maintained here at Washington. Then again we have a Bureau of Public Lands, and its report ought also to be sent to the people; and there are various other Bureaus whose reports ought to be sent out among the people for the same reason which the Senator has given in support of his amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the States have bureaus of education, and I suppose their reports are circulated, but I should think Minnesota would be the last State to object to this, especially as the Senator has already gotten a land grant during this session for his State out of the public Treasury.

Mr. RAMSEY. O, we only got our own lands, I beg to say to the Senator.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think, after the special privilege that has been conferred this winter upon Minnesota, the Senator from Minnesota ought to be so niggardly in his bounty to the people as to deny them the privilege, free of postage, of seeing what the Agricultural Bureau has been doing.

Mr. RAMSEY. All that you gave the people of Minnesota were their own lands, the value of which they had created. They were not worth a cent an acre when they went there, and they are worth whatever you get for them now.

But, Mr. President, one objection that I have to the Senator's amendment is that it does not go far enough, as I told him the other day when he offered it originally. There are three hundred thousand of these reports to be distributed, and we have two or three million farmers. If he were to give one to each farmer I could understand and appreciate the value of his amendment; but if one in ten or twenty is to be selected and favored by a copy of this report, I am unable to see the fairness or justice of it.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from Minnesota thinks this amendment does not go far enough. The hero of the great reform must be patient. We cannot accomplish all these things in a moment. We propose to discipline his nerves by gradual advances up to the idea of allowing the people to have some little information, for which they pay, in regard to the management of the Government which is their government and which is directed by their agents. Three hundred thousand copies of this Agricultural Report are a great deal better than nothing. That is as much probably as the nerves of the Senator from Minnesota could stand at one dose. Next year perhaps he may stand five hundred thousand. I should vote for that just as cheerfully as I shall vote for this. The experiment succeeded here two or three years ago of shutting down all information from the people, cutting off the supply. Now we have got to feel our way back again. Three hundred thousand are pretty good for a start. Let the Senator from Minnesota get accustomed to that, and next year we will join him in going for five hundred thousand.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to my honorable friend, who was the leader of the other great reform of the last Congress, the increase of pay, that we may perhaps be compelled to go back again on our action next winter. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky amendable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out that part of it which provides that these Agricultural Reports shall go free by being stamped. We have already adopted an amendment providing that there need not be prepayment, but that the persons who wish these reports may pay for them when they receive them. That being the sentiment of the Senate, and by that arrangement everybody will get these books that wants them and those who do not desire them will not have them, I move to strike out the words "which shall be duly stamped with postage-stamps."

Mr. STEVENSON. I am surprised to hear the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. I know him to be a most efficient friend of agriculture, and he must know that some of the best farmers and planters in this nation cannot afford to pay for this report, and to that extent he would deny to these men the opportunity of reading it.

But the Senator will remember that we have already to-day provided that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall go free. Is not this report as valuable to the six million farmers in this nation as the RECORD, and if one goes free why should not the other go free? I think all must admit the importance of giving to the substantial interests of the country, to the laboring masses, the information which will be derived from this Agricultural Bureau. I think it is almost incalculable; and I do hope that the Senate will not only allow the printing of these three hundred thousand copies, but will permit them to go postage free.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The postage on one of these volumes will be about ten cents under the provision we have just adopted. It seems to me to be very fickle legislation for the Senate one half-hour to pass a law that the documents shall pay postage and the next half-hour that they shall go free. I think the fact that a person writes for them and pays ten cents postage for them secures a better distribution than if they were sent free.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will not be adopted. If there is any public document printed that is appreciated, I am satisfied, from my experience in the distribution of documents while the franking privilege existed and since, that the report of the Agricultural Commissioner is more highly appreciated than any other public document printed by order of the Senate.

The Senator from Maine ridicules the idea that three hundred thousand copies amount to anything for the great farming interests of the country. It is utterly impossible to furnish every farmer or every person engaged in agricultural pursuits with a copy of the report of the Agricultural Commissioner; but these three hundred thousand copies will be distributed throughout the different States. Under this amendment there will go into the small State which I have the honor in part to represent some two thousand or twenty-five hundred copies. That will put a number of these reports in every neighborhood; and that is true of every State in this Union. Take the State of New York, for instance. While there are but two Senators here from that State, there are some thirty-three or thirty-four Representatives in the other House, and they will distribute into every neighborhood copies of this report. It will furnish valuable information to the agricultural community in which it is distributed, and now we ought not to begrudge so small a favor for the agricultural interest.

My friend from Maine, who opposes this amendment so zealously, certainly favors matters which protect special interests in his own section of the country. Why, sir, one tithe of the taxes that are imposed upon the people of this country for the benefit of the manufacturing interests of the country, so well represented by the Senator from Maine and others on this floor, one tithe of the tribute paid by the agricultural interest to those manufacturing interests by the way of protection, by the way of tariffs upon their interests, would put an Agricultural Report in every farmer's hand throughout the country. The farming community have been taxed for the benefit of other interests; and now when this small boon is asked, that three hundred thousand copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture may be distributed among them, it is met with opposition. To my mind, it is most unreasonable and unjust.

The agricultural interest of this country has never asked protection, has never asked for any special favor at the hands of Congress; but Congress, in order to convey the impression to the agriculturists of this country that their interests were regarded, established here a Bureau that is costing, according to the appropriations for it the present year, nearly a quarter of a million dollars. The Agricultural Report is published. You have a publishing house established by the Government, and the small expense of the publication of three hundred thousand copies is but a trifle. Why may we not publish that number and distribute them free through the mails so that the farmers of the country may see what information this Agricultural Bureau is collecting on the subject of agriculture, so that they may be benefited if any good is contained in those reports?

I concur with the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that unless there is something practical for the farming interest to grow out of the establishment of this Bureau we ought at once to abolish it. The people of this country ought not to be taxed to the extent of a quarter of a million dollars for the purpose of keeping up an establishment here in the city of Washington where not more than one man in a thousand can see it. If it is not to distribute any of its benefits to the country, why keep it in existence here? If it is for ornament, for the same amount of money we can establish ornaments in every section of the country. Your quarter of a million dollars will put as great an ornament in every State in this Union in the course of ten years. We ought not to continue this Bureau, and I will vote myself to abolish it if none of the advantages which it was designed to effect are to be conveyed to the people.

Sir, we are distributing documents, we are publishing thousands upon thousands of documents that have no value as compared with this report. Documents, political in their character, are being published. We appropriated the other day $200,000 for the purpose of making surveys for great works of internal improvement, when but very few Senators on this floor would avow their willingness to vote for the measures if they should be reported favorably upon by the engineers. What was that done for? We all understand it. It was to make a favorable impression upon the farmers of the West that something was to be done for their interests. I opposed that measure because I thought nothing practical would come out of it; that when the proposition came here for Congress to undertake the establishment of lines of canals and railways across this country the Senate would find they were destitute of authority and power under the Constitution to make them, and that the $200,000 that we appropriated was thrown away, as I conceived, upon a political project, to make an impression upon the grangers of the West and others that their interest was being looked after here in Congress. But here is a practical good to the granger interest and the farming interest, the distribution of a document that is supposed to contain valuable information on the subject of agriculture, and yet when a proposition is made that it shall go free through the mails so that the people may get information from it, it is met with objection.

Sir, I will vote for this proposition, and if it is voted down, then I will vote for any other proposition that will restrict the publication of books and public documents to the absolute necessities of the Senate, and that no public documents shall be distributed whatever. I am prepared to meet this question fairly, to do it or not do it at all. Give the people the information they require, or else cease the publication of every kind of public document other than what is absolutely necessary in order that the Senate may transact the business devolving upon it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to indemnify the holders of pre-emption and homestead certificates and certificates of entry and patents upon lands in Iowa within the so-called Des Moines River grant on account of failure of titles, and to procure a relinquishment of the paramount titles to the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3628) for the relief of owners and purchasers of lands sold for direct taxes in insurrectionary States, and for other purposes.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask leave to introduce a bill of public importance in order that it may be put on its passage at once and sent to the House. Yesterday, when I reported a bill for the publication of the revised statutes, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] put a question to me as to whether there was in the bill a section repealing the publication of the laws in newspapers. I misunderstood that question. I supposed the question was as to the repealing of the contract with Little & Brown. It now turns out that there is nothing in that bill which repeals the act authorizing the publication of the laws in the newspapers. Therefore, if that law stands, the newspapers would, under their authority to print the laws, print these revised statutes. I therefore now ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill prohibiting the publication in the newspapers of the revised statutes, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. Before that bill is read, I wish to inform the Senator from Kentucky, that we may avoid confusion on this subject, that the provision which he now proposes has already twice passed the Senate. It was adopted yesterday early in the day on my motion as an amendment to the pending post-office appropriation bill. It turns out that it was also adopted as a part of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, although yesterday we could not find it, and therefore, for abundant caution, I moved it as an additional section to the post-office bill, and it was added without objection. I think I may say further that there is no special need, though I have no objection to this bill, of a provision on that subject to-day or to-morrow. There was need, as the Senator explained yesterday, of immediate action on the bill he reported from the Committee on the Judiciary; but that bill being acted upon, the fact of the President signing the revised statutes will not thereby entail any obligation whatever upon the Government to publish them in the newspapers. On the contrary, if at any time within a week, or within the limits of this session, the pending appropriation bill becomes a law, or the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill becomes a law with the clause there pending, his object will be accomplished. I state this, not in the nature of an objection, but my honorable friend was not in the Senate yesterday when the legislation took place to which I refer.

Mr. STEVENSON. If this bill passes it will dispense with the provisions of the amendments to the bills alluded to by the Senator from New York. It might be that under the existing law which is now before the President the newspapers might claim the right to publish the revised statutes as part of the laws, and upon consultation with the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, as this bill was intrusted to me, I prefer to make this matter certain; and as it will not take a minute, I ask to put the bill on its passage, that it may be sent immediately to the House and passed there.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 954) prohibiting the publication of the revised statutes of the United States in the newspapers at the expense of the United States was read three times, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 563) for the relief of John M. McPike; and

An act (S. No. 870) giving the assent of Congress to the acceptance by the officers of the United States ship Monocacy of silver medals presented to them by the King of Siam.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It is important that it should be passed now, so that it may go to the House this evening.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the thirty-seventh amendment, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by said Senate amendments insert, after striking out the text of the bill from the word "dollars," in line 3, page 13, of the bill, down to and including the word "each," in line 7, same page, the following: "One principal clerk of warrants and appropriations, $3,000; seven principal clerks, at $2,800 each; eight assistant clerks, at $2,400 each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "ninety-eight thousand four hundred," and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-two thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 23, page 35 of the bill, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "six," and in the same line strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four," and strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 25, (same page,) down to and including the word "dollars" in line 26; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute in lieu of said amendment the following: after the word Department, in line 18, page 37 of the bill, insert the words "in the city of Washington," and strike out the words "Ordnance and Adjutant-General's Office" from said amendment, and after the word "duties," line 21, same page, insert the following:

Provided, That the Adjutant-General is authorized to retain during the next fiscal year, and no longer, such portion of his force of employés now on duty in his office, as may be actually necessary for the service thereof; but no new enlistments shall be made into the general service; and nothing in this act shall be so construed as to increase the aggregate force now employed in any office of the War Department.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "fifteen" substitute "ten," and after the word "dollars," in line 14, page 55 of the bill, add the following: "That it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, and of the heads of the respective Bureaus therein, in the interests of the public service, to require of all clerks of class one and above, and of chiefs of divisions, such hours of labor as may be deemed necessary for the proper dispatch of the public business, not exceeding, however, the time for which said Departments are by law required to be open for business, any usage to the contrary notwithstanding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments numbered 135, 136, and 137, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after striking out of the text of the bill all after the word "Treasury" in line 20, page 56, down to and including the word "each" in line 22 that has not already been stricken out by said amendment, the following: "two principal clerks at $2,800 each; two assistant clerks at $2,400 each;" and strike out "3,503" and insert "3,409;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "six" and insert "nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "23,008" and insert "14,007;" and in line 9, page 57 of the bill, strike out "60" and insert "80;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment numbered 145, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate the words "this provision shall not apply," in line 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "this provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, light-houses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress and this provision shall not apply;" after the word "Congress," in line 14, insert the following: "with his annual estimates;" and the Senate agree to the same.

LOT M. MORRILL,
A. A. SARGENT,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES A. GARFIELD,
S. W. KELLOGG,
SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to have some points in this report explained. In the first place I understand that there is an important addition made to the salaries of certain officers of the House of Representatives, making them higher than the corresponding officers of the Senate. Is that so?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will state how that is. It is true that the House increased the salaries of certain employés of the House. It has been the custom heretofore of each House to fix the salaries of its own employés, and as a matter of courtesy it has been acquiesced in by the other branch. Therefore we did not feel that it was a matter absolutely within our province to insist upon the Senate amendment striking out the increase. Yielding to the courtesy which had obtained for many years, the conferees on the part of the Senate felt at liberty to recede from our position on that proposition.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have always been in favor of allowing each House to regulate the compensation of its own officers, and I do not wish to enter into a race with the House in raising the salaries of officers, but I recollect that when we desired to vote an adequate compensation to an officer of the Senate, for whom we all have the highest respect, and who has been here at least twenty years longer than the Senator longest in continuous service, we had the utmost difficulty in getting the House to agree to it, and then it was only on condition that it should apply to the present incumbent of the office.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is perhaps due to the House of Representatives that I should say that in regard to two employés whose salaries have been increased, it was upon the principle of complimenting those officers which had been adopted by the Senate in former years in regard to one of its own meritorious officers, and the example therefore has that in its favor.

Mr. ANTHONY. How many officers have their salaries raised?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Five, I think.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the Senator further, what is the status of the Congressional Printer?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That has just been read, but the Senator's attention probably was not called to it. Substantially it is this: That whenever there is a vacancy in that office the officer is to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and is to be denominated "Public Printer."

Mr. ANTHONY. But it does not legislate the present incumbent out of office.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is perfectly right. I think that the Public Printer should be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate like the other great officers of the Government. This change to the existing mode of appointment was made at the urgent request of the House of Representatives, and not until they had sent us a second bill for that purpose. I myself assented to it with very great reluctance. I think that the name "Congressional Printer" is a misnomer, for there is more printing done for the Departments than there is for Congress. At the same time I think to legislate a man out of office at a time when charges of the gravest nature have been preferred against him, which are now under consideration and upon which the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman will soon be called upon to report, would be an act of very gross wrong. Since the change in the tenure of the office and in the appointment of the officer was made at the urgent request of the House, I think that the committee of conference have done perfectly right in holding on to the measure which the House have compelled us to, until there shall be a vacancy under the existing law. Then I think the matter should be as the bill provides.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There seemed to be no disposition, as I could understand, to legislate the present incumbent out of office. He is left as I have stated.

Now a single word in regard to the bill as a general proposition. It will be noticed that there are numerous amendments, in regard to which on the one side and the other the Senate recede and the House recede, which become necessary of course in order to any agreement upon a general conference. The House, exercising a very laudable ambition to curtail the public expenses, had cut down the public service so to speak pretty largely in many of the executive branches of the Government. When the bill came here this led to a very careful revision of the whole subject, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations reported to the Senate a large number of amendments in the direction as they believed of the actual demands of the public service. Of course that was the chief matter of conference, and it will be seen that the report restores the public service somewhat largely as the bill came from the House to the Senate, but still the conference report is a reduction of something over $100,000 in the aggregate from the bill as presented by the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate and as accepted by the Senate.

I know of nothing so striking or marked in the report as to lead me to make any special remark in regard to it. I will answer any inquiry which any Senator may desire to make in regard to any amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee one question: Does not this bill perpetuate the Congressional Printer in office so long as he lives?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does not. He may be reached by the power that created him. A vacancy unquestionably may be created in the office; but at the same time it does not legislate him out of office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS.) The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN to the amendment of Mr. STEVENSON.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, if this proposition of the Senator from Kentucky shall meet with the approval of the Senate to print three hundred thousand copies of the Agricultural Report, it follows that we are going back to the old practice and will publish documents ad libitum hereafter on all subjects whatever. That amount will give me enough to send about two copies to each post-office in my State; and there will be hundreds, many of whom receive their mail matter at the same office, who will feel that they are just as much entitled to be recipients of its favor as those who get it, and they will even be angry because they do not get it.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is absolutely impossible to publish enough of these reports to give copies to all those whom we may think deserving; and then if we publish these, why should we not publish the Land Commissioner's report? Are we to publish reports for only one class? There are also reports in relation to the mining districts. Are we to suppress them, or are they to go like these through the mails free of expense? Then there are various other reports, as suggested by my friend from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] the report on education, perhaps the most valuable that we have. Is that to be excluded? Then take that on fish culture. Some of my sporting friends would be glad to distribute that.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss this question. It seems to me that we have a rule that no amendment in regard to appropriations shall be made unless it comes from a committee with previous notice. This evidently involves a cost of two or three hundred thousand dollars. I should like to make the inquiry whether this amendment is in order or not. If it comes in conflict with that rule, as it clearly seems to me it does, it is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that as no appropriation specifically is made in the amendment, it is not amenable to the point of order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It involves the expenditure of money. I do not desire to discuss the question; but it seems to me that it is clearly in conflict with the spirit of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WEST. Let it be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment as first proposed reads:

That three hundred thousand copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture shall be printed for circulation, which shall be duly stamped with postage-stamps; two hundred thousand copies for the use of the House, seventy-five thousand copies for the use of the Senate, and twenty-five thousand copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the words "which shall be duly stamped with postage-stamps."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON.]

Mr. WEST. Now I raise the point of order that, the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey having been rejected, this amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky does increase the appropriation by these very postage-stamps that are put upon the documents. I submit that to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that as the amendment contains no specific appropriation it is not open to the point of order; but he is willing to submit the matter to the Senate and have the sense of the body upon it if the Senator from Louisiana desires.

Mr. WEST. I do not desire it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAVIS. I think we had better have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOREMAN. I should like to have some explanation of this amendment. I do not understand how postage-stamps are to be put on these documents. It does not state whether the postage-stamps are to be placed upon the documents here or elsewhere, or by whom. It does not make it anybody's duty to do it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Carpenter, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Tipton, and Windom—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Wadleigh, Washburn, and West—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Brownlow, Cameron, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Harvey, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Pease, Stewart, Thurman, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 482) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Salem, in the State of Oregon.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution extending leave to the woman's centennial executive committee of Washington to occupy the Rotunda of the Capitol upon the afternoon and evening of the 16th of December next, for the purpose of celebrating the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston on the night of the 16th of December, 1773.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

A. A. SARGENT,
D. D. PRATT,
JOHN P. STOCKTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHARLES O'NEILL,
J. M. RUSK,
ERASTUS WELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 3679) defining the qualifications of territorial Delegates in the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. No. 3535) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. No. 1565) relating to the commissioners of claims, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 3641) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company," approved May 17, 1872—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EASTERN BRANCH BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern branch of the Potomac River at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, which was to insert after the word "appropriated," at the end of the first proviso, these words:

And no part of this appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until contracts shall have been entered into with responsible parties and with good and sufficient sureties to be approved by the Secretary of War for the construction and completion of said bridge, including the masonry, iron-work, and causeway, at a cost not to exceed $146,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent, without previous notice, to introduce a bill which is necessary to correct a mistake in an appropriation bill. I should like to have it printed so as to have it acted on to-morrow morning.

By unanimous consent leave was given to introduce a bill (S. No. 955) to amend the "act to ratify an agreement with certain Ute Indians in Colorado;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SHIP ALHAMBRA.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3741) to authorize the issue of an American register to the ship Alhambra; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I am told by a member of the House that this bill has passed both Houses twice in the last Congress and this, and fallen between the two. It is a very small matter, and I ask that it be acted upon at once.

By unanimous consent the bill was read three times, and passed.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE CLAIMS COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone that and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that bill will not be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania. If it be voted down, the Senator from Michigan can then make his motion.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope this bill will be taken up. My constituents are largely interested in this measure, and I hope the motion will not be voted down.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Michigan will listen to a very brief statement he will probably see that this bill will not occupy very long. It is a bill making appropriations for the payment of about a thousand claims, and if read regularly through it would take probably near an hour to read it; but I presume that unanimous consent will be given to act upon the amendments to the bill without going through the reading of the whole of the thousand names. If that be done, I think the amendments can be acted upon in a very short time and the bill disposed of. It is, as has already been stated by the Senator from Virginia, a bill interesting to a very large number of people, and I hope it will be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope not.

Mr. DAVIS. There are nearly a thousand persons interested in this bill in various amounts, ranging from fifty to three or four thousand dollars. I hope the Senate will take it up. There will be no dispute about it.

Mr. SPENCER. I am satisfied it will only take long enough to read the bill to pass it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is for the Senate to decide whether they prefer this to the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 40, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, and West—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Buckingham, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Ingalls, Ramsey, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Windom—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Harvey, Howe, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Pease, Thurman, and Wright—18.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill I will ask to make a brief statement prior to asking unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the whole bill. The bill as originally received from the House appropriated $680,060.78, divided among the following States:

Alabama	$37,682 90
Arkansas	83,889 73
Florida	13,365 00
Georgia	23,537 20
Louisiana	152,563 00

The amendments which the Committee on Claims of the Senate propose will strike out from the present bill about $62,000. There was one item which we had proposed to strike out, and which by subsequent agreement of the committee we decided to retain in a different form. It would have left the amount $604,000 if that had been stricken out; and if it is retained it will make about $611,000.

Mr. SARGENT. What amendment does the Senator now refer to?

Mr. SCOTT. I will state very briefly the amendments which we propose. We propose to strike out three appropriations and send back the claims to the commissioners for re-examination, namely, one to William Bailey, of Louisiana, for $45,161.72; the case of Letitia Elsey and Mariah H. Turpin, each $3,563.48; the case of John Campbell, administrator of the estate of Stephen S. Springer, deceased, $9,225. The other one which we propose to retain in a modified form is to the legatees of John Fox, $7,545.

With the exception of the amendments to which I have already referred, the others in the bill are merely verbal for the purpose of correcting the errors that have crept into the bill in the names. The more substantial amendments are those that I have already referred to. While I have no desire on that subject, I will state that time will be saved if the Senate will be satisfied to dispense with the reading of the bill and take up the amendments. Senators will see by looking at the bill that it is simply an enumeration of the names and the amounts due to claimants, covering sixty-six pages.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there no legislation in it?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no legislation in it of any character but the appropriations and the amendments which I propose for the purpose of sending back some of the cases to the commissioners. I ask therefore to dispense with the reading of the bill and proceed to consider the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to interpose nothing to consume time. Before consent is given to the request, I call the attention of the Senate for illustration to what appears on page 53:

To the public school trustees of Manassas, for the material of the Bradby schoolhouse and church, $450, to be paid on the basis of a compromise between the school and church trustees on file in the case.

If the bill is not to be read, such matter as this and other special matter is to be passed in the lump. I suggest to the Senator that we ought to know a little more about the bill than we do in taking it as a sealed volume containing sixty-six pages and selecting from it four amendments, confining our attention to those.

Mr. SCOTT. As I said, I have no desire on the subject. I made the suggestion simply to save time.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not make an objection, but I say to the Senator——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the bill had better be read.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from New York desires an explanation of the particular subject to which he refers I will give it.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not select it; I happened to fall on that because I opened the bill at that page; but nobody can go through this bill who is not familiar with it. Still I do not make an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of this bill? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendments will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the Committee on Claims is on page 2, line 19, strike out "Gilreath" and insert "Gilbreath."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Secretary had better read where there is anything more than a mere name and amount. On page 17 I see something about the transfer of a judgment. Wherever there is anything except the mere name and amount I think the bill ought to be read. The Secretary can glance at it in a moment and see where those cases occur.

Mr. SCOTT. I have a memorandum of the amendments. The next amendment is in line 376, where the word "tennant" is misspelled.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 376, it is proposed to strike out "tennant" and insert "tenant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the clause on page 17, line 387.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, line 387, the bill reads:

To Elizabeth D. Wade, administratrix of the estate of Henry G. Wade, $9,750; and that the judgment rendered in favor of the United States against the sureties of the said Henry G. Wade, upon the bond given by Wade and his sureties for the purchase-money of the wharfboat, be, and the same is hereby, discharged.

Mr. SHERMAN. What does that mean?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Oregon is more familiar with this case than I am, he having examined it fully; but my recollection is that it is for the value of a boat which was taken and impressed into the service of the Government. Some claim arose about the boat after it was recaptured, and the judgment referred to here was against the sureties of Henry G. Wade upon a bond given by Wade for the purchase of the boat. This is a stipulation by which that judgment is to be released, the sum appropriated here being in full for both the value of the boat and its use while it was in the service of the Government. That is my recollection of it, but it is more familiar to the Senator from Oregon who examined the case.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state for the information of the Senate that the claim was made for a boat taken by order of one of our generals during the war and used on one of the Arkansas rivers. The boat was some considerable time afterward turned over to an agent of the Treasury Department and sold. At the sale the owner became the purchaser. Instead of paying the purchase-money, the officers of the Government took his bond with certain sureties for a certain penal sum conditioned for the payment of the amount at a certain time. Afterward suit was commenced on the bond in one of the circuit courts of the United States, and judgment obtained. The commissioners in passing upon the claim allowed the claimant for the use of the boat, and also recommended that Congress release this judgment. That is all there is of it. The Committee on Claims recommend the same measure that the commissioners did.

Mr. SCOTT. If nothing further be desired in reference to that, the next amendment is in line 436.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Committee on Claims is on page 19, lines 436, 437, and 438, to strike out the following item:

To John Campbell, administrator of the estate of Stephen S. Springer, deceased, $9,225.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. The next amendment is in lines 513 and 514.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 22 the Committee on Claims propose to strike out lines 513 and 514, as follows:

To William Bailey, $45,161.72.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator permit me to suggest before he goes on that while this is stricken out here the second section reported by the committee proposes to send the claim back for re-examination to the commissioners.

Mr. WEST. I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOGY. I will state that I have been called upon to investigate this claim of Mr. Bailey. I have done so with some care, and I am at a loss to understand why the committee have made a report against the claim. It is embraced in the report of the commissioners of claims. It appears to be properly sustained by abundant testimony. It passed the House, and I am at a loss to understand why the committee report against it. I therefore move that the amendment reported by the committee be non-concurred in.

Mr. WEST. I understand there is a motion now made by the Senator from Missouri to non-concur in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WEST. I wish to say a few words to the Senate on the subject of this claim. In the report that was made by the commissioners of claims and acted upon by the committee of the House of Representatives at the close of the last Congress, the claim of William Bailey for the sum stipulated in this bill was included, and the bill with that claim included in it was just about being passed in this body when some objection was made by some individual inducing the committee to withdraw their recommendation for its payment, to enable the commissioners of claims to consider the subject once more. Now the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania striking out the appropriation in favor of the payment of this claim, and also providing that it shall be recommitted to the commissioners of claims, is a renewal of just what was done twelve months ago. Consequently if there is any justice in this claim at all the claimant is subjected to the delay, the perplexity, and the privation of once more submitting his claim to the commissioners.

Now, there is certain testimony tangible here that can be laid before the Senate which I think will justify them in declining to accede to the proposition of the committee. In the report that the commissioners of claims made at the close of the Forty-second Congress they used specifically this language:

> After a careful examination of the testimony and all the papers in the case, and after the most thorough and searching inquiry, we find Mr. Bailey to have been a constant and consistent Union man during the whole war.

That was the finding of the commissioners; they themselves were compelled to admit that Mr. Bailey was a loyal man. There not being any written report from the Committee on Claims on this case, I have no means of knowing what their reasons are for withholding payment; but if the Senate will examine they will find that at the time the commissioners made this report there was a charge made against Mr. Bailey that he had been guilty of selling cotton to the confederate government. He was examined in regard to that. The commissioners also alluded to it in their report in these words:

> General Bailey, upon his examination in this case, swears that he did sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or to some confederate or State agent, alleging that he was compelled to sell it to get money to pay his taxes; and if he had refused it would have been taken or burned.

And yet, notwithstanding that investigation and admission by the claimant himself, for nobody else swore to it, the commissioners of claims considered that the claim was a just and equitable one and should be paid. There has come into the possession of the Government of the United States since this report was presented to the last Congress certain record evidence of the transactions of the confederate cotton bureau to what is known as the trans-Mississippi department. I was aware at the time this claim was presented to Congress last year of the existence of those records, and I was also aware, having examined them, of what they said in reference to Mr. Bailey. Those records prove conclusively, but no more conclusively than was proved by the admission of the claimant himself, that Mr. Bailey did sell that cotton; but his testimony is there, and the testimony is also there of the agent of the confederate government, that he sold that cotton under duress. The commissioners, in presenting a supplemental report particularly relating to this claim of Mr. Bailey, under the date of March 26, 1874, give the precise questions put to Mr. Bailey and answers made by him, as follows:

> Question. Did you contribute anything to aid the confederate cause?
> Answer. Never one farthing, neither directly nor indirectly.
> Q. Did not you have to pay tithes?
> A. I had; and I was compelled to sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or have it burned and destroyed, in order to pay my taxes. I sold it to a young man, an agent of the confederate government there.

There is some allegation here that the young man who is alluded to was a son-in-law of the claimant. The facts were that at the time this young man was there confiscating the old fellow's cotton, he was confiscating the daughter also, and there was a slight disagreement between them on the question of cotton and on the question of the daughter, and the young man got them both, but he got them both under duress and contrary to the assent of the claimant.

There is abundant and overwhelming testimony of loyalty. I have it before me, but I do not consider it necessary to trouble the Senate with it, because I claim this man's loyalty under the admission of the commissioners themselves. If it is necessary to go into that, I can do so. I shall briefly, however, refer to one affidavit in the case to show that this man was not only loyal to the Government, but was loyal in heart and loyal to the core, and it is to such men throughout the South that we should give our encouragement and assistance. Here is what one man says:

> During the Red River campaign there flocked to within our Army lines upward of ten thousand freedmen. These were of all ages and of every condition—sick, lame, naked, hungry. The Army was without adequate supplies, and the freedmen, in many cases, died by the wayside.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senator whether he reads from testimony taken before the commissioners?

Mr. WEST. Here is testimony given by a man and his testimony is referred to by the commissioners. It is given by a man whom I very well know.

Mr. SCOTT. That is not the question. Was it taken as testimony before the commissioners?

Mr. WEST. I am not prepared to answer that question, but I have not a doubt that it was.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the date?

Mr. WEST. The 27th day of April, 1874.

Mr. SCOTT. Then it was not taken before the commissioners.

Mr. WEST. Well, we will take it now. There is no question of his loyalty now raised. They have admitted his loyalty..

> It was during this campaign that I first met Mr. Bailey, and it was then—a year before the war ended—that he assisted in word and deed as none but a friend would do. The amount of supplies furnished from his place to the Army and the freedmen was immense. We must have had five thousand freedmen on his place at one time, and all these were in need of food which could be had at the time only from the country through which we passed. Nearly all the planters had concealed their stock of provisions or sent it within the lines of the enemy, but Mr. Bailey did not do so. On our arrival we were welcome to what he had, so that the Army on the one hand and the freedmen on the other swept everything. Not only did they take the pork, horses, sheep, and cattle that could be found, but the fences were burnt up for fuel, and I saw his mules driven away to the camp of the Army by some of our soldiers.
> At this time, as well as in 1865, Mr. Bailey was the friend of the Army, and declared to me that everything he had on earth he would rather sacrifice than see the Union destroyed; and so far as slavery was concerned he avowed the conviction that he could do better with free than with slave labor.

Mr. Bailey manumitted two hundred of his slaves in the State of Virginia before the breaking out of the war. He was a man of immense wealth, having immense estates in Virginia, having immense estates also in the State of Louisiana, with enough slaves there to provide amply for himself and his family, with a very large estate, and he manumitted those who were in Virginia. The report of the commissioners themselves admits this man's loyalty; there is overwhelming proof of it; and I cannot see with what propriety the Committee on Claims can recommend the remission of the case to the commissioners of claims. They have given us no intimation of what their object was; they have not told us that this man was disloyal; and so far as the testimony goes it is conclusive that he was loyal to the Government.

I have so far merely stated the outside of the case. If the chairman of the committee has evidence or will state to the Senate that he has evidence of the man's disloyalty, I should like to hear it.

Mr. SCOTT. I had hoped that this case would give rise to very little discussion. The amendment is offered by the committee not for the purpose of depriving General Bailey of compensation for supplies furnished to the Army, if he is entitled to it, if he was in the language of the statute under which he claims a loyal man during the whole of the rebellion, but it is offered for the purpose of having the question heard before the commissioners of claims, so that what I shall state hereafter bearing upon his loyalty and against it can be met by him and what he offers to rebut it can be heard by the commissioners upon cross-examination of the witnesses that he produces.

Now let me state as briefly as I can the true position of this claim. The Senator from Louisiana has not looked as closely at the history of the case as he would have done, perhaps, from the statement he has made, had he been called upon to investigate it in committee. He has stated that after it was first reported by the commissioners of claims it was sent back to them, and that they had re-examined it. He is mistaken as to a matter of fact. This claim—and I state the fact from an examinatian of the papers——

Mr. WEST. On that point will the Senator tell me what I am to think of what I see in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 23? "Office of the commissioners of claims"—the revision of the case by the commissioners. That is what I based my statement upon.

Mr. SCOTT. I am aware that the Senator was reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and I am giving him what I get from the record; and the debate in the House has in it ex parte testimony just like that the Senator read, taken since the question has been mooted in Congress. I will state the position I occupy on this question.

We established the commissioners of claims for the very purpose of enabling them to examine these claims dispassionately, to do justice to the claimants and to do justice to the Government. The complaint was made in Congress that the hearings before committees were all ex parte, and so they were; that anybody could make out his case; and it was desired that instead of an ex parte hearing there should be hearings where the Government could be represented, and where the claimant could present his case. The commissioners of claims after hearing this case upon the testimony presented, first reported it, as they were required by law to do, on the 1st of December, 1872, and they reported it favorably. The Senator by referring to the record from which he quoted will see that that is the case. The bill passed the House at that session of Congress. It came to the Senate and this claim was struck out of it upon the motion of the then chairman of the Committee on Claims, the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] upon information given to him from some quarter alleging the disloyalty of General Bailey. Upon that it went back to the House, the amendment was concurred in striking out this case, but the case was not sent back for re-examination and it never has been re-examined before the commissioners. It remained in the House of Representatives, where all the papers remain under the law, the report being made to the House. When the Committee on War Claims came to make up the bill at this session they again inserted this claim in their bill and it was reported back by the committee to the House. But during the winter at some time information came to the commissioners of claims that the records of the trans-Mississippi cotton department of the Confederate States showed that two sales of cotton had been made by General Bailey to the confederacy in November, 1862, and January, 1863, that a portion of each sale had been taken by him in confederate bonds and the balance in money. That communication was sent to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, and when the bill came before the House he moved to strike out this item, and upon that the discussion arose to which the Senator has referred. In that discussion statements, letters of General Sherman, General Sheridan, General Canby, and others were read, which had never been before the commissioners of claims at all.

Now what do we propose to do? We propose not to decide that General Bailey was a disloyal man, not to cut him off, not to strike at his case, but this testimony having come in against him——

Mr. WEST. What is the testimony that has come in?

Mr. SCOTT. If it is desired I will read it all; but I wanted to state the effect of the committee's action. As the Senator desires it, I will proceed to say what it is.

Mr. WEST. Where was that testimony taken?

Mr. SCOTT. I will tell the Senator; but one thing at a time. I have not the original book here although I have it in my committee-room, and I will therefore read an extract from a book which was obtained by purchase by our Government containing the archives of the trans-Mississippi cotton department under the confederate government—a transcript from that book of the agency which was kept by A. W. McKee, the person referred to as the son-in-law of General Bailey. This entry appears:

ALEXANDRIA, LOUISIANA.

A. W. McKee, Dr.

1862,
Nov. 14.	To cash amount paid W. Bailey for 536 bales cotton, in bonds	$30,000 00
	Balance paid in notes	18,731 44
			$38,731 44

A. W. McKee, Dr.

1863.
Jan. 1.	To cash amount paid W. Bailey for 680 bales cotton, in bonds	24,100 00
	Balance paid in notes	30,001 64
			54,101 64

Here follows the certificate that these entries are copied from the book. Thus from this book it appears that sales were made by General Bailey to the confederate agent, A. W. McKee, in November, 1862, and January, 1863, of cotton amounting to about $92,000, and of the purchase-money he took about $44,000 in confederate bonds and the balance in money. That is what appears against him on the book.

Mr. MERRIMON. May I ask the Senator a question at this point?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator if there is a fact or a circumstance in this whole case that tends to impeach the entire loyalty of the claimant except that simple memorandum, and furthermore whether he is any party at all to that memorandum?

Mr. SCOTT. That is the very reason why I wish to send this case back where he can be heard. Here is a book. The book itself is in the building; I have given an extract from it; and it is as to the regular business operations of that cotton agency in which appear these two entries showing that this man, on these two days, sold this cotton. The Senator asks me if there is anything else in the case which shows his disloyalty. So far as the question of disloyalty is concerned, I am not here, as I have already said, to say that General Bailey is or was a disloyal man. I am here to say that there is evidence enough to justify these commissioners in sending in this testimony as they did and in our sending this case back to them for re-examination. I do not want to prejudge him. I want to give him a fair opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WEST. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I desire to ask a question.

Mr. SCOTT. Put the question.

Mr. WEST. The question is, whether the papers relating to this Bailey case have not been withdrawn from the Senate and put in the hands of the commissioners of claims, between the time that the Government became the owner of these papers and the time that they made the report again?

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; so far from that, the commissioners asked whether they had the power to reopen a case and rehear it, and they obtained the opinion of the committees of both Houses that a case could not be reopened, and could not be sent back to them without an act of Congress; that after they had reported a case it was out of their hands, and it has never been back for re-examination, and there never has been a subsequent report upon it.

Mr. WEST. That is not the question I asked the Senator. I asked whether the commissioners themselves did not withdraw the Bailey papers from the files of the Senate, and have they not had them in their possession up to December, 1873?

Mr. SCOTT. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. WEST. I am told it is the fact.

Mr. SCOTT. I am informed exactly the other way. Now, Mr. President, I prefer to give these papers in the order in which they occur without interruption, and I will gladly, when I get them in, answer any question that may be asked about them.

Here are these two transactions, and I ask the attention of Senators who are listening to the dates, November 14, 1862, and January 1, 1863. It is alleged that two sales were made of this amount of cotton and that a certain portion of the proceeds was taken in bonds. On the 4th of February, 1863, a letter was written by A. W. McKee to M. M. Rhorer, a man who was in his employ. I say a letter was written, because it is a letter certified as found among the same papers and now in possession of the Government, and I will ask the attention of the Senate while I read it. It is a regular business letter written in the course of their transactions; and so that it may be seen that the points to which I make special reference come in the course of the letter, I will read the whole of it.

HOUSTON, February 4, 1863.

M. M. RHORER, Alexandria:

MY DEAR SIR: I arrived yesterday from San Antonio after a tedious trip and much delay in returning in consequence of high water, bad roads, &c.

I am in receipt of your several favors of 14th, 18th, 20th, and 25th ultimo. Contents of all carefully noted.

Col. Thos. Martin went to Richmond for money, and I hope will bring a good lot, unless the Secretary of the Treasury concludes that he would like to see some of our monthly returns ere forwarding more. This department is informed of funds en route long enough to have reached here twice. * * * Bonds are largely in demand here at par, and in some instances at 1 per cent. premium.

Now I call attention to this sentence:

When Lasere pays you, the same funds can be used to buy with, and if General Bailey wishes to exchange $10,000 of his bonds for notes, do so.

Now, mark it, Mr. President, a sale of cotton in November, 1862, about one-half taken in bonds; another in January, 1863, and nearly one-half taken in bonds; and this letter, February 4, 1863, in the regular course of business says, when you get this money, "if General Bailey wishes to exchange $10,000 of his bonds for notes, do so."

Mr. BOGY. By whom was that letter written?

Mr. SCOTT. Written by A. W. McKee, the confederate agent for the purchase of cotton, the man who paid General Bailey, according to the entry, the bonds and the money—written to his clerk at Alexandria, Louisiana.

Now I ask not whether General Bailey is disloyal or not, not whether he took these bonds, for it is alleged that he did not—his affidavit is put in here since the thing is mooted saying he never had one of these bonds. When a letter is written by a confederate agent in the regular course of business, directing his clerk to exchange $10,000 of money for bonds, is there not enough to put General Bailey on the defensive, for the purpose of showing that he did not get those bonds. We have made in the act of Congress continuous loyalty during the whole rebellion an element to be found by these commissioners before any man is paid; and if General Bailey sold cotton in 1862 or 1863 to the confederacy and took $40,000 worth of their bonds it was an act of as high disloyalty as it would have been to give them $40,000 worth of guns and ammunition, for cotton was their ammunition.

Mr. WEST. He had to sell it or they would take it.

Mr. SCOTT. We will come to that directly. I have his affidavit, put in here by himself since the thing was mooted, saying he never had the bonds. I produce this letter in connection with those entries not for the purpose of showing that he had the bonds, but for the purpose of saying that before we pass this claim it ought to go back before these commissioners, so that General Bailey may be permitted to meet this testimony; and if there is other testimony, as I am informed there is, bearing on this question, that it can be laid before the commissioners and they can cross-examine his witnesses.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he thinks that letter would be received as evidence in any court where Bailey was a party, a letter written by another man to his own clerk, not to Bailey, never coming to Bailey, but the simple statement of one man to another about something Bailey had done or might do, by which Bailey should not be criminated in any way?

Mr. SCOTT. I am glad the Senator puts the question. Within the last few days a pamphlet has been laid on our tables containing the affidavit of A. W. McKee, the man who it is alleged wrote this letter, and I have no doubt the Senator has seen it. It has been made in this city. He is living. When he was taken before that commission to make out the loyalty of the man who was his father-in-law, he could not tell whether he wrote that letter or not.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator say he was his father-in-law at the time the letter was written?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir; I believe he was.

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; he was not his father-in-law until after the war.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, so far as that is concerned there is no exact date fixed as to when he did marry the daughter; but the Senator is mistaken in that respect. He was his father-in-law before the close of the war.

But, Mr. President, let me go on, because I am so constantly interrupted at the end of every sentence that I can hardly keep up any continuity in this statement. I was saying that there was evidence enough here to put General Bailey on the defensive for the purpose of showing whether he was loyal or not. Let me read on:

There is no objection to purchase his—

That is General Bailey's—or your brother's cotton.

Showing, according to a statement of this agent at that time, that he takes it for granted that General Bailey's cotton can be purchased.

This follows right after the mention of General Bailey about the $10,000—

There is no objection to purchase his or your brother's cotton; and if you can pick up enough to pay all expenses in this wise it is all right. I would not advise any alliances, however, with General B. More anon.

That sentence has been differently construed. One construction has been put upon it that General Bailey was a Union man, and there should not be any more alliance with him on that account. Another construction was that this man, writing to his familiar, his clerk, his confidant, referred to an alliance, in a playful way, to the General's daughter. I do not know which it is; but here is the letter following up these two alleged sales, showing that it was proposed, first, to exchange money with him for the confederate bonds which this agent said he had; and, second, to buy more cotton from him.

Now I go on to the other papers that are in the case. The third paper which I referred to, found among these archives, is a memorandum of G. W. Sentell's purchase of cotton for Bailey & Ward. I will not take the time to read the whole of that, but here are nine hundred and eighty-five bales of cotton purchased for Bailey & Ward, and this letter attached:

AUSTIN, TEXAS, May 12, 1864.

DEAR SIR: On my arrival at Houston I bought from Major A. W. KcKee, as the agent by power of attorney from William Bailey, all the interest of the said Bailey in the nine hundred and eighty-five bales of cotton in the parish of Bossier. In the payment of the tax, &c., on the cotton, charge the same to my account.

I do not know to whom the letter is addressed, but it was written on the 12th of May, 1864, by J. T. Ward, in which he speaks of buying from Major A. W. McKee, as the agent by power of attorney, from William Bailey all the interest of Bailey in the nine hundred and eighty-five bales of cotton in the parish of Bossier.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator will allow me, is there anything disloyal in that one man buying cotton from another?

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; but mark it: A. W. McKee is the agent for the Confederate States, purchasing cotton.

Mr. WEST. What is the date of that transmission?

Mr. SCOTT. One thing at a time while this cross-fire goes on between the Senator from California and the Senator from Louisiana.

Major A. W. McKee is the agent for the purchase of cotton for the Confederate States, and on the 12th of May, 1864—he had remained as agent during all of this time—J. T. Ward, in a business letter calls A. W. McKee the agent by power of attorney from William Bailey. It is alleged that William Bailey and A. W. McKee were at daggers points because McKee had married his daughter, and it is a little singular if that be so that General Bailey, a loyal man, would select the agent of the Confederate States as his attorney in fact for the purpose of selling his cotton. That is not the way in which a loyal man would act according to my experience of human nature.

Mr. WEST. Mr. McKee was not the agent at the date of that transaction.

Mr. BOGY. That was before the marriage.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know when the marriage occurred exactly.

Mr. BOGY. I state the fact to be that it was before their marriage. Now the Senator answers that he does not know, and I know he does not know.

Mr. SCOTT. The difference between me and the Senators who have examined this case is this: I have looked all through the testimony to find the date of this marriage; I wanted to see it; I do not find it in the testimony. They have information perhaps from parties who can tell. Mr. McKee is here himself, and he has made an affidavit within the last week; but according to the statements in the testimony I drew the inference that it was very soon after this time in 1862 and 1863 that McKee married General Bailey's daughter.

I am not here, as I have repeatedly said, to argue these facts for the purpose of determining in the Senate that he is disloyal, but for the purpose of saying that before we set the precedent of paying to any man $45,000 for supplies who in 1862 or 1863 sold cotton to the amount of $90,000 to the confederacy, that man and the Government both should have a fair hearing. It is not General Bailey alone. That is not the question. This is the first case that has come before Congress arising out of the examination of these commissioners of claims involving the question of whether a sale of cotton to the confederacy is of itself one of those disloyal acts which should deprive a man of his claim before that commission. If you vote this case in before this testimony has been heard before the commissioners of claims, before the Government has the opportunity of being heard, it is not simply the appropriation of $45,000, but it is opening the door to an avalanche of cases of a similar character, and the application will be made to open the door to extend the time for filing claims. It is on your table now. A bill came over from the House to-day to extend the time for filing the claims before these commissioners; and I warn the Senate that before they set any precedent it should be in a case fully heard before the commissioners of claims. This one has not been. This testimony which I have now read has all come to light since the commissioners of claims reported upon it.

Mr. ALCORN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ALCORN. If a citizen of the Government of the United States as it existed at that time had purchased cotton of the confederate government, would the Senator take that to be a disloyal act on the part of the citizen of the United States? Would the purchase of cotton from the confederate government have been held to be an act of disloyalty?

Mr. SCOTT. I am not going to turn aside to discuss the question whether a purchase by a citizen from the Confederate States would be an act of disloyalty or not. I am discussing the question of the sale of cotton by a citizen to the Confederate States, and one question at a time is enough.

The next paper that is furnished from these archives is a list of cotton:

List of cotton purchased by M. M. Rhorer, sub-agent of A. W. McKee, general agent for Louisiana.

Date.	From whom.	Residence.	Bales.	Where deposited.
November 14, 1862..	Wm. Bailey.....	Alexandria ...	536	On his plantation.
(Here follows a list of sixty-nine other names.)
May 27, 1863	W. Bailey.....	Alexandria ...	21	J. P. Grimball's plantation.

Here are three distinct sales: one November 14, 1862; second, January 1, 1863, both large amounts; and third, May 1863, for twenty-one bales. These papers show these sales, if they are entitled to credit. It may be said they are not evidence against General Bailey. I say that while they are not to be taken as conclusive evidence against him, they are that kind of evidence which when produced should bid us halt before we pay him until he has had an opportunity of meeting it and rebutting it if he can.

If the Senator from Louisiana desires to see what report these commissioners have made, here is the report, the only other report which they did make after the first report, and after this testimony came into their possession. I think, as the Senator from Louisiana has alluded to it, I will have it read, and I will send it to the desk for the purpose of having it read. The date will show when they made the communication and sent it to Congress.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The records of the trans-Mississippi cotton bureau, purchased by the Government since the report was made in the case of William Bailey, No. 980, show facts which we deem it our duty to report to your committee. The case having been reported by us to Congress, we do not feel at liberty to make any further investigation of it unless specially directed by that body to do so.

It clearly appears that General Bailey sold to the confederate government on the 14th of November, 1862, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton. His son-in-law, Andrew W. McKee, had been appointed by the confederate government, namely, in October, 1862, general agent for the purchase of cotton in Western Louisiana and Texas. The first sale made was by General Bailey November 14, 1862. This five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton was no part of the eight hundred and thirty-four bales litigated in the United States district court for the eastern district of Louisiana in 1864. It may be perhaps the cotton referred to by General Bailey (see his testimony before the commissioners of claims of November 14, 1871, page 5) in his answers, as follows:

"Question. Did you contribute anything to aid the confederate cause?

"Answer. Never, one farthing, neither directly nor indirectly.

"Q. Did not you have to pay tithes?

"A. I had; and I was compelled to sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or have it burned and destroyed, in order to pay my taxes. I sold it to a young man, an agent of the confederate government there."

He subsequently tells of an armed force coming out to burn his cotton; of his telling them he would sell it, &c. The statement is confused and inconsistent, the date uncertain, but might be November, 1862; and if the young man, the agent, was his son-in-law, it may identify the transaction, but will make the story of duress or an armed force very improbable.

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained that General Bailey on the 14th of November, 1862, sold, voluntarily, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton to the confederate government; that he was the first leading planter to so sell his cotton; and that his son-in-law was the confederate agent who bought it. It further appears from the "day-book" of the cotton agency in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury (to which our attention has recently been called) that A. W. McKee, as confederate agent, bought of William Bailey, November 14, 1862, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton, and paid him therefor in confederate bonds $20,000 and in notes $18,731.44, making a total of $38,731.44; also that on the 1st of January, 1863, McKee bought of Bailey six hundred and eighty bales of cotton, and paid him in bonds $24,100 and in notes $30,001.64; making $54,101.64.

It also appears from the papers that one G. W. Sentell bought for William Bailey, or for Bailey & Ward, nine hundred and eighty-five bales of cotton in the parish of Bossier; that Bailey, through his son-in-law, the confederate agent, (McKee,) sold his interest therein to Ward, and that soon after the confederate government took possession of all this cotton for its own use. Considering the relations of Bailey and McKee, and that the property soon went for confederate use, it seems probable that Bailey should have shared in this purchase, and that it was made for confederate use.

It also appears from a letter found among these papers that Captain W. W. Withenburg was an agent of the confederacy under McKee, and engaged in transporting cotton for the confederate government to market.

He was an important witness for and much relied on by General Bailey to establish both the facts and loyalty in his case. He claimed to have been loyal himself to the cause and Government of the United States. His connection with the confederate government was not made known to us at the time; but that fact would seem to have an important bearing on the credibility of the witness.

A. O. ALDIS,
J. B. HOWELL,
O. FERRISS,
Commissioners of Claims.

Hon. WILLIAM LAWRENCE, M. C.,
Chairman Committee of War Claims, &c.,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SCOTT. It will be seen from what has already been stated, taken in connection with this last paper read, that General Bailey alleged that he sold his cotton for taxes, that he sold it because if he did not sell it it would be burned, and it has been stated here and elsewhere that a trial occurred in New Orleans with reference to this and other cotton, in which it was shown that part of the cotton which he was alleged to have sold was never delivered; the sale was canceled. Now, I call attention to General Bailey's testimony. I have the whole of it here, and I have read it carefully as to the manner in which he stated the sale of these five hundred bales. Let it be remembered that Mr. McKee has been his son-in-law. It has not been stated, although I am informed since I was on the floor before that by reference to other papers, all of which I have not brought in here, it has been discovered that in 1864 when this agent McKee was on his trial before a confederate court-martial letters were there produced from his wife in which reference was made to their child. That is pretty good presumptive evidence that they were married before 1864. In stating the sale of this five hundred bales in his testimony General Bailey stated—I do not take time to quote him—that he was compelled to sell the five hundred bales or have them burned and destroyed, and in another place that he sold that cotton in order to pay taxes. To whom does he say he sold it? He says to "a young man, the agent of the confederacy." He does not name him at all; he does not say who he was in his testimony; but says he sold it for these purposes, and for the purpose of preventing it from being burned. The testimony in other parts of the case shows that no cotton was burned in that vicinity until probably a year after that time, in November, 1863.

Let me now refer to the dates. I do not deny that there is testimony in this case showing the strongest expressions of loyalty by General Bailey; but let us look when they are professed to have been made. These sales were in 1862 and 1863. That territory was then under confederate control. In 1864 General Banks arrived on the Red River, and he occupied General Bailey's plantation, and it is for the supplies furnished to that army after its arrival that this allowance is made, not for cotton in any form. I do not wish it understood that the claim is for cotton, although a part of it is for cotton destroyed by the troops, or used by them for bedding; but the claim is for supplies furnished after the arrival of General Banks in Louisiana in 1864. Now, then, if General Bailey did sell cotton in 1862 and 1863, the expressions of loyalty after 1864 can be readily accounted for consistently with this act of disloyalty in 1862 and 1863. He became a Union man——

Mr. WEST. It was a nice time to be a loyal man down there in 1862 and say anything about it!

Mr. SCOTT. That is what I am saying, Mr. President, that he may have committed acts of disloyalty, those acts which this Government in self-protection is bound to consider acts of disloyalty in 1862 and 1863; and whatever his expressions of loyalty may have been in 1864, after the arrival of General Banks, after he was under the protection of the flag, can be accounted for very consistently with those acts in 1862 and 1863. If he is entitled to this claim on the ground of his active loyalty before the arrival of General Banks on that ground, and if he shows that these transactions are not properly represented by these books, I shall be the last man to deny him his money.

But let me go on, Mr. President. I do not wish to take up time in going over all the allegations that have been made in this case. It has been said that in a trial at New Orleans the six hundred bales were shown not to have been delivered. I have looked through that testimony and let me state what there was in that. In 1864 eight hundred and thirty-four bales of cotton were libeled. The United States claimed these eight hundred and thirty-four bales of cotton as having belonged to the Confederate States. Proceedings were instituted in the United States court, and in those proceedings a number of witnesses were examined. There is no testimony identifying the six hundred and fourteen bales which appear in the books in January, 1863, as the same cotton which made up any part of those eight hundred and thirty-four bales. There is a reference to a sale of six hundred bales, but the specific date when it was sold, or an identification with these six hundred and fourteen bales is not given; and more than that, there is nothing to know what became of that proceeding. I have inquired for the purpose of showing what became of it. The testimony is given. There is no decree. My information is that by some arrangement between General Bailey and the officers of the Government a compromise was effected in regard to that cotton, which leaves the question of whether it was confederate cotton or his cotton entirely unsettled. I do not know what that compromise was, but I have looked through the testimony and I do not find anything in it which would disprove the statements that are made and that are relied upon as coming from these books.

There is a great deal of testimony that I might refer to if I were disposed to take up and argue the question of actual loyalty. If I am compelled to vote upon that, if the friends of General Bailey insist here that this tribunal, now, upon ex parte testimony brought in to meet this testimony which is also ex parte shall decide upon his loyalty, I shall vote upon it; but I want to send him back where he will have a fair showing.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the Senator will tell us anything he knows against the loyalty of General Bailey. If there is anything hidden, do not use mysterious language, but let us know it.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not wish to say what A, B, and C have told me.

Mr. SARGENT. That is not proof.

Mr. SCOTT. We have erected a tribunal for hearing these parties.

Mr. WEST. And they do hear what A, B, or C says. That is the trouble.

Mr. SCOTT. And they do send in to the Congress of the United States records which show that General Bailey ought to have a fair opportunity of a hearing before them. That is what I am showing.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand the chairman of the committee to make but one point, and that is that there is testimony before the Senate showing that General Bailey at some time or other sold certain cotton to the confederate agent, and for that reason the chairman of the committee desires that this claim should go back to the commissioners in order that they may investigate that fact. Now, I do not understand that it is claimed by any person, not even by the chairman of the committee, that General Bailey or Mr. Bailey, whoever he was, committed any other act or thing that looked toward disloyalty except the single fact of having sold cotton to a confederate agent. I ask the chairman of the committee if Mr. Bailey when he was examined as a witness before the commission did not admit before that commission that he sold certain cotton to the confederate agent, and did he not there state that the books of the confederacy would show that fact? The point I wish to make is this: was not that fact called to the attention of the commissioners when this case was before the commission, and did they not then have full and ample opportunity to investigate the whole question and pass upon it, and therefore why the necessity of referring the case back again now?

Mr. SCOTT. I will state for the information of the Senator from Oregon that when General Bailey was before the commission he did say that he had made a sale of cotton to the confederate government and gave two reasons for it. One was that he had sold it to pay taxes; the other was that he sold it because if he did not sell it it would be burned. He did say in reference to the date that their books would show the date; it was a question of date; but he said not one word about having taken part of the proceeds in confederate bonds, and that fact was not before the commissioners when they made up their finding. The fact that he sold six hundred and fourteen bales was not before the commissioners, for General Bailey referred only to the sale of five hundred bales, and in neither instance did he say a word about having taken any part of the payment in bonds. This testimony produced shows not only two sales, but two different receipts of confederate bonds and confederate money to the amount of thirty or forty thousand dollars. It shows more than that; it shows that he got money for other purposes than to pay taxes; he was buying other cotton. It shows more than that; that he had a partner in the purchase of that cotton, and this testimony shows that that partner was a disloyal man. Positive testimony, if these books are testimony, circumstantial testimony enough certainly for the Government to say that this case shall go back to the tribunal which we have constituted for the purpose at the same time of doing justice to loyal claimants and protecting the Government against improper claimants. That is all I am asking.

I go further now. As the Senator from Oregon has said that this is the only circumstance, I will say there are other circumstances. The case is developing. Since this question has been made, or since it became apparent that it was going to be discussed in the Senate, I followed it a little further, and I may as well refer to that now; and I find in the War Department among the archives from the Confederate States, not those purchased from the trans-Mississippi department, but other archives, a copy of the proceedings of a confederate court-martial in which this man McKee, the confederate agent, was tried upon charges and specifications, and one of those charges, the fourth, with different specifications, was that he had confederated with Bailey to defraud the confederate government out of about a thousand bales of cotton on Bailey's plantation.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the Senator if he brings it forward as a proof of Bailey's disloyalty that he confederated with another man to steal from the confederate government?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator seems to assume the attitude that I am bringing testimony against General Bailey and trying to convict him.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator said if we wanted other evidence of General Bailey's disloyalty he was prepared to give it, and I challenge him to produce it.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not say I was prepared to give it, if the Senator will pardon me. The Senator from Oregon rose and asked me if I had a single thing to show General Bailey's disloyalty except the transcript from these books.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is answering by reading a document showing that General Bailey aided somebody who stole something from the confederate government, as a proof of his disloyalty against the Government of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not got through with my statement. I was stating the fourth charge, containing various specifications, and I had not gone any further. Let us see what came on.

Mr. SARGENT. I will not ask the Senator any more questions. I am sorry he is so impatient of questions. I do not desire to interrupt him.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not impatient of questions at all. I have been on the floor here intending to make a calm statement of these papers from beginning to end, and every Senator who seems to be advocating the payment of this money appears to take it for granted that he must cross-examine me at every stage.

Mr. SARGENT. I only wish to apologize for interrupting the Senator; I do not desire to trouble him.

Mr. SCOTT. I only wish to get the facts before the Senate. I am not arguing the case to show disloyalty on the part of General Bailey; I am simply showing that there is enough to send this case back to the judicial tribunal; that is all.

This charge is of disloyalty to the confederate government charged against McKee. What do they charge him with? Confederating with Bailey. It does not show that they were very great enemies. True, he was charged with confederating with Bailey to defraud the confederate government out of a thousand bales of cotton belonging to the confederacy on Bailey's plantation. There is some evidence to show that Bailey had sold the cotton on his plantation to the confederate government. These are circumstances which I think General Bailey ought to have the opportunity of meeting. They are brought out.

Why did I look for this? Because an affidavit was placed in my hands by the friends of General Bailey since this case came to the committee, alleging that McKee had been in irons and he was not worthy of belief, although his testimony had not at that time been brought before the Senate. Since then it is before us in a printed statement, and finding he had been in irons I wanted to know why, and pursuing my inquiries I found that this was the reason why he was in irons. He was tried and he was sentenced to be shot. He has not been shot, for he has been here giving his affidavit.

General Bailey may explain all this; he may answer, as Senators here attempt to answer, that the allegation that he was assisting McKee to defraud the confederacy is in his favor instead of against him. If it is in his favor, let it be so. I do not withhold it. I am giving the fact, and what I introduce it for is to show that Mr. McKee's testimony has been laid on the tables of Senators since this case has been before us, and now, mark it, Mr. President, he refers to the five hundred and thirty-six bales; he gives no account of the six hundred and fourteen bales at all, although he is the man who paid the money; and I ask Senators, without reading it, to take up that ex parte affidavit laid before us, examine it with reference to McKee's relation to this whole transaction, and there is enough in that to show that this case ought to go back for examination.

I do not wish to take up any very great length of time in discussing this question. I had hoped it would be passed over, for I felt I was doing General Bailey a kindness in sending this case back to the commissioners of claims. When it was here before it was struck out. It remained here. Now it is put in the bill, and this testimony is before us from the commissioners of claims, showing that if this testimony had been before them at that time a different result might have been arrived at. I will not condemn him on it. He ought not to be condemned on it. It is ex parte testimony, but he has given ex parte testimony also; and now I say the proper mode of proceeding is, as we have erected this tribunal, to send the case back there and let him meet these allegations. He knows them. Let the evidence on the part of the Government, if there be more of it, be produced where he can cross-examine the witnesses, and let the case be decided upon its merits.

But, Mr. President, in a case involving the question of whether the sale of cotton in large amounts to the confederate government in 1862 and 1863 was an act of disloyalty which ought to deprive a man of the right to claim before the commission, I cannot consent without entering my protest against it that any such claim shall be incorporated in this bill, and I think a little reflection upon the consequences that are to result will satisfy the Senate that the proper mode of proceeding is to send this case back to the commissioners of claims.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the proposition that is made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and, as I understand, the majority of the committee on claims, is that this case be sent back to the commissioners of claims in order that they may report that this man is disloyal. That is really what it amounts to, stripped of everything in the way of paraphrase. These commissioners have gone out of their way to write a document to show that they believe this man is not entitled to this relief, and now we are asked to send back this case before this tribunal which has thus pronounced judgment in advance. That is just what this proposition is, neither more nor less. If any one will read the document to be found on page 8 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 23, which was sent up to the desk by the Senator from Pennsylvania and read, he will find that all through it there is a prejudice forcibly expressed against General Bailey and an evident desire on the part of these commissioners to get their hands again upon this case.

It is contrary to everything that is fair and just to take a case from an impartial body, as this Senate is, and send it to a court to be decided but one way. They roll this alleged newly discovered testimony as a sweet morsel under their tongues; they parade it in italics; they insist that they cannot get hold of the case because they have reported it to Congress; and they in effect solicit that it may be sent back to them in order that they may give what they esteem to be the legitimate facts of this testimony and rule this man out of court.

If there is any merit in his case, if there is anything in his testimony of loyalty, if there is anything in any consideration of the duress to which he was subjected and to which all citizens in that region were subjected in 1862 and 1863, then I want the Senate to pass upon this question, and not send it back to a tribunal so obviously prejudiced as these commissioners are shown to be by this document. I am not reflecting upon these gentlemen. I have no doubt they are following what they deem to be the line of duty; but it is an extremely narrow line, which is not tinged for a moment with any consideration of equity. For the Senate to obey their behest and send this case back to them after it has come here is simply to exclude this person from any conclusion except the one which they have drawn in these papers.

Now, sir, there is one prominent fact which stands out in this case, and that is that General Bailey sold cotton to the confederacy. That is clearly and distinctly proved. It is not so clearly and distinctly proved whether he took bonds for it or whether he took money for it. Whether he took interest-bearing obligations or non-interest-bearing obligations. Confederate money is a matter on which great stress is placed by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but to my mind it amounts to nothing. Where is the distinction? What difference does it make whether he took confederate bonds or confederate money? And yet upon that distinction they endeavor to make a point against General Bailey.

Mr. MERRIMON. The evidence taken in the case that was tried shows that he did not take the bonds.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. Has the Senator read that testimony?

Mr. MERRIMON. I read a summary of the testimony.

Mr. SCOTT. I could not find any such testimony, and I read it through.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania is a very industrious man. We have reason to admire him for the evidences of it that he shows us every day; but when he takes up a bill of nearly one hundred pages, with an item to every line, and goes through the whole bill, he cannot necessarily be as well posted on all the facts with reference to each item as Senators who have had their attention drawn to a single item of the bill, and made that a matter of investigation. Therefore, while admitting the industry of the Senator, I still insist that we who have examined this claim and all the accessible testimony upon it, and have tried to get at the facts and do what was right, have a right to claim some knowledge on this subject, even if we are not members of the Committee on Claims.

Now, sir, it is a fact with reference to the form of regulations (which was a printed form) used in the purchase of cotton by the confederate government, it was always printed in the document that payment was made in confederate bonds. I understand the testimony to be that General Bailey refused to take the bonds, if that fact makes the least difference. I only comment upon it because the Senator from Pennsylvania seemed to lay some stress on that point. But McKee, who was not on good terms with General Bailey in 1863, who seized this cotton, and seized it among the first, who compelled General Bailey to sell his cotton and to sell among the very first, sometime thereafter, writing to his own clerk, and of course knowing that the paper which was in print referred to bonds as given for cotton in this case as in all others, said perhaps bonds which are 1 per cent. premium—I suppose he meant premium over confederate currency—could probably be obtained from General Bailey by giving him money for them. That was all, and that in itself is easily explainable under the idea that this was the printed form, and this person referred to the printed form, and knowing that this negotiation had been made by which the cotton was obtained by the confederate government, supposed that there was a place where bonds could be had. For what reason he wanted them I do not know, and that is entirely unexplained.

But, sir, the great fact stands out that this man did sell more or less cotton to the confederate government. It is a mistake to suppose that that fact was found out recently by these commissioners of claims. I call attention to the language of their report on this very case. They say:

> General Bailey, upon his examination in this case, swears that he did sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or to some confederate or State agent, alleging that he was compelled to sell it to get money to pay his taxes; and if he had refused it would have been taken or burned.

They did not cross-examine him on that statement. Here was this horrible crime committed of selling cotton to the confederate government. Their extract from his testimony, as given in the letter which they now send and which has just been read at the desk, shows that they did not cross-examine him upon it. They took his statement. They did not ask him the name of the agent. The Senator from Pennsylvania thinks it is atrocious that he did not state that this man's name was McKee. Was there anything said to call his attention to that? Did they ask what confederate agent it was? They themselves placed no value upon that point, because they say "he sold it to the confederate government or some agent of the confederate government." The gravamen of the statement was that he did sell cotton to the confederate government, and that is the crime now alleged against him. These commissioners understood that. It was there in his own statement. When you afterward found the books of the confederacy which showed that they had bought of him, it only proved what he had said that he had sold it to them. Is there anything in that fact that should cause us to refer this case back to the commissioners of claims? They follow that statement, that he did sell this cotton to the confederate government, in this way:

The cases of loyalty among the large landed proprietors of the South were so very rare, that we felt it to be our duty to investigate this case thoroughly, and after doing so we feel fully justified in reporting this claimant as loyal.

They say that after stating that he sold cotton to the confederate government. Do they want this case referred back to them in order to say that if he sold cotton to the confederate government they would be justified in reporting him as disloyal? If that is so I say the court is whimsical; that it acts on no well-considered opinion; and that we had better abolish it; at any rate we had better not send back to them cases which are doubtful, but send them only cases which are very clear, only cases involving questions of amount and not questions of principle.

I say there is nothing new discovered in this case. The parade of documents which the Senator from Pennsylvania makes and the reference to the confederate books only relate back in effect to that which was determined upon before and to this very man's testimony. He was upon the stand swearing to these very things, and this commission, in view of his affidavit to these facts, say he is a loyal man, and that cases of loyalty among large landed proprietors of the South were so rare that they felt justified in reporting this case favorably to Congress, and glad to do so.

What amount did they report? Forty-five thousand dollars. His claim was for $105,000, and they cut down the claim of this loyal man nearly two-thirds, allowing him but two or three dollars for a ton of hay where the hay was worth thirty or forty dollars. That was the system which they followed. They cut down this highly loyal man, as they reported him to be, below the prices of the articles taken either in the confederacy or within the loyal States, and upon no distinguishable rule. They had ample testimony before them as to the loyalty of this man, and it will not do to whistle it down the wind and to say that the distinguished military men who were brought in contact with this man and who knew him, as General Sherman said he had known him for years, were entirely mistaken. They were talking about a man, as was in proof and as will not be denied, who once owned a large number of slaves on a plantation in Virginia. Under the laws of Virginia he was allowed to emancipate his slaves. He did so; he manumitted them and went off down to Louisana. He was not allowed under the laws of that State to manumit his slaves, but it is in evidence that he treated them with great kindness; that he was an anti-slavery man—rather unpromising materials to make a disloyal man out of. In this condition the war caught him two or three years after he went down there with a large plantation on his hands. General Sherman, with reference to this man with these antecedents, says:

General Bailey, of Rapides Parish, Louisiana, personally known to me before the war, and universally recognized as a Union man throughout the period of hostilities—

Is General Sherman a man who writes without weighing what he says? He says General Bailey was universally known throughout the period of hostilities as a Union man and known to him personally before the war. There is no doubt about his identity—appeals to me personally to befriend him with you in the matter of a claim for cotton which has been formally presented for your adjudication.

This was in relation to another matter. General Sherman goes on to state that in his official capacity he cannot meddle with such business; but he says he has a "strong personal regard" for this gentleman.

General Banks, the major-general commanding the department, says——

Mr. SCOTT. None of that testimony was before the commissioners.

Mr. SARGENT. Whether the testimony was before them or not, it is before the Senate, and it has force and weight. We are trying this case. There is no appeal from us back to these commissioners. I know of no provision of the statutes that requires us if we are in doubt to solve that doubt and ease our consciences by virtue of this commission. They are functus officio. They have acted on this matter, and having acted on this very point, that this man did sell cotton and having sold cotton was a loyal man, I want to know what there is to take this case back to them. You might as well send back every case against which some one whispers to you here. It is said that this case was struck out of the bill last year because somebody whispered something in the ear of the then chairman of the Committee on Claims, and you want this matter to go back again now, because of the whispers and insinuations of some persons, enemies of his very likely because he was a Union man; because he would be certified to as loyal by such men as Sherman and Canby and the whole Louisiana delegation in the House, and by Governor Wells, of Louisiana, and other undoubted loyal men all through the war. Men who know that because they were disloyal they cannot get their claims allowed will gladly whisper slanders about their neighbors who stood up under a hail of persecution that could only be exceeded within the confines of the infernal regions. The man in that region who either by wink or nod, by word or act, showed that he had any sympathy with the Yankees, with the Government of the United States in the struggle that was then going on, was a marked man, not merely ostracized from society, but liable to be shot down on the highway. He was hauled before persecuting courts, placed under continual espionage. A man who under these circumstances could stand up and preserve anything like manhood, anything like decency, anything like loyalty to the Government, would make not one, but hundreds and thousands of enemies who would gladly follow him with their enmity to the very grave itself, to the portals of your courts, to the Senate of the United States, and whisper in the convenient ear of some Senator, anxious to do right but hurried with business, "There is something wrong in that case; there is a cat under that meal," in order that that man might be prevented from getting his claim after he had been shorn down two-thirds of the amount which had been taken from him to supply the United States Army.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was an anonymous letter sent.

Mr. SCOTT. Twice, perhaps three times, the Senator from California has used a phrase that the enemies of General Bailey or persons hostile to him are whispering in the ears of Senators allegations prejudicial to him. Of course the meaning and direction of that cannot be misunderstood. Now I wish to say that I know of no one who has brought before the committee, I know of no one who has come to me to say one word against General Bailey. All that has been done has been to put in my hands papers from the officers of the Government which have been laid before them. But a more persistent effort to put everything into my ear, through agents, attorneys, and lobbyists, in favor of this claim, I have never met. I have been waylaid on all the avenues of the capital for the purpose of throwing into my ears something in favor of General Bailey. If there are any influences here against this claim, so far as I know about them they have not been brought to bear on the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. I did not intend to suggest, and I do not think the Senator should have so understood me, anything improper on his part or that of the committee. I understood him and the committee——

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the Senator just now to say that those here who were for sending the claim of General Bailey back to the commissioners had had whispered in their ears slanders against him.

Mr. SARGENT. I made the remark, following the Senator, that at the last session this case at the last moment was dropped from the bill on account of some private communication made to the chairman of the Committee on Claims. Am I correct?

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot say whether or not. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] can answer for that. He was then chairman of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SARGENT. I repeated what was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, rendering almost literally his words. He stated the fact I was commenting upon. I was saying that these demands could be dropped on account of private communications in the ears of Senators——

Mr. SCOTT. I made inquiry to learn whether it was true that statement was made to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SARGENT. I take the Senator as authority. I have no doubt the statement is true.

Mr. SCOTT. My information at that time was from the Senator from Wisconsin himself that such information had come to him. Whether it was whispered in his ear or where it came from I do not know.

Mr. SARGENT. When I spoke of its being whispered in the Senator's ear, of course that was a mere figure of speech. It may have been shouted to him from the house-tops; but other Senators did not hear it; and the message struck the very spot where it would reach the bill. I was simply arguing that some enemy might have done this.

The Senator speaks about the importunity which is made for this claim. Are there not importunities for all claims? Are we like the unjust judge who finally yielded on account of urging and would not on account of justice? How otherwise, I ask you, are they to get their claims recognized before Congress? It is only by bringing them to the attention of Senators and members. I do not think they are to be despised, I do not think they are to be stigmatized because they are anxious, when they are ruined by the delay of Congress, that Congress shall attend to their cases. I cannot find it in my heart to object that any man who has an honest demand against the Government shall come to me, take my time, valuable as it may be, and plead with me to listen to him while he tells me of his wrongs or his rights. I think he has a right to do so; but when it becomes so wearisome that we cannot listen under such circumstances, then it seems to me we ought to pass the claims without examination. If we cannot give the time to examine them and find out that they are right, they should pass without it. When we complain of the labor and difficulty and importunity which are borne upon us and refuse to give any hearing to supplicants, Congress had better grant their prayers. The Government cannot afford to be deaf to petitions. It had better be improvident in granting them than do injustice.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Senator say that when a Senator refuses to be waylaid in all the avenues of the capital he refuses to listen to a claimant? I say to claimants always, "I will decide your case on the testimony presented to me; and your verbal statements are not testimony." But if the Senator is disposed to criticise the remark which I made, all the punishment I can wish to impose upon him is that he shall be associated with me upon the Committee on Claims, and he will then understand the full force of the remark which I made.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt it is a very onerous position, and I endeavored to do full justice to the Senator by speaking of the industry with which he fills it. I do not wish to be understood as reflecting on him in any respect. I have certainly not spoken in any unkind feeling or in a spirit of depreciation; but I do say it is inseparable from that place and inseparable from the office of Senators that we listen to the petitions of the people, to those who have grievances to redress, to those who have legitimate claims against the Government; and the Senator exaggerates, in the same spirit that I did myself perhaps in speaking of whispers, when he speaks of being waylaid on every avenue and every corner of a street. We are not waylaid on every avenue and corner of a street. Claimants do come to our houses, and frequently come at inconvenient periods, come to our committee-rooms, sometimes lay siege to us on the streets; but they do not speak with any more importunity than they have a right to do if we should attend to their business and neglect it.

There are men who come to this capital in the bloom of youth and bright hope of manhood, ay, and women too, widows and orphans, and they see the flag go down on the 4th of March, that ends the Congress, year after year until their locks grow thin, until they are stooped with age, unable to get the ear of Congress with their importunity, and finally die, and their heirs perhaps may get the claim or may not. Is not that so? I do not say that it is a shame that Congress has done so, for I know with the burdens and the labors of forty millions of people we are overwhelmed; but I say we ought not to complain of these importunities, and if sometimes they are not in good taste the cause should speak to us if the manner of these persons does not.

But I was speaking about the loyalty of Mr. Bailey. I was quoting from the testimony of General Sherman, who speaks with life-long knowledge of him, and particular knowledge of his history during the period of hostilities. I was referring to the testimony of General Canby. General Oliver O. Howard, who is a Christian gentleman, a man of high character, a man whose word is unsullied—and I challenge contradiction of it—introduces this gentleman to General Mower, and says:

Allow me to introduce to you Mr. William Bailey, of Louisiana. I hold in my hand a very high recommendation of him as a Union man, thoroughly in sympathy with free institutions and humanity. The recommendation further calls to my mind a past record of the best character.

Calls to his mind, of his own knowledge, "a past record of the best character."

He is a planter in the vicinity of Alexandria, Louisiana. Any sympathy or assistance you may render him will be appreciated by him and afford me gratification.

These letters were written and express just what they say by men who know the meaning of language and men who are jealous of their own reputations and of that which they say, and could not be obtained by disloyal men. I ask the Clerk to read a letter signed by every one of the Louisiana delegation in the House of Representatives, testifying to their personal knowledge of this man and of his loyalty.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 9, 1874.

DEAR SIR: We beg to call the favorable attention of yourself and fellow-members of your committee to the cases of William Bailey and Whitty M. Sasser, included in the "Southern claims bill" now before you. We do so, as Representatives of Louisiana, in order to express our unqualified belief that both Bailey and Sasser were consistent and faithful friends of the Union throughout the entire rebellion; and that it would be an act of great injustice to pronounce them "disloyal" on the ground that they sold certain cotton to the rebel authorities. The well-known condition of "duress" that existed at that time in Northern Louisiana, as well as the absence of any other purchasers than confederate agents, from whom currency could be obtained for paying taxes and carrying on plantation business, alike made such sales absolutely necessary in most cases; and not even a suspicion of disloyalty should, we think, be attached to Bailey or Sasser on this account.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE L. SMITH.
FRANK MOREY.
C. B. DARRALL.
J. H. SYPHER.
L. A. SHELDON.

Hon. JOHN SCOTT,
Chairman of Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I know the Senator from California does not wish to do any injustice by the introduction of that letter. That letter is one that was printed in a statement that has been laid on the desks of Senators as a letter laid before the Committee on Claims. It is addressed to me as chairman. Now I say that that letter reached the committee-room after this case had been decided. It never was before the Committee on Claims at all. I only refer to it as showing the persistency with which a feeling has been worked up here, and to say that the Senator from California of course is not aware in introducing it that that was the fact.

Mr. SARGENT. Then if the committee made up this judgment without referring to this letter, this letter is valuable as additional testimony to the Senate. You have not acted on the letter. You have not acted on the consideration that GEORGE L. SMITH, FRANK MOREY, C. B. DARRALL, J. H. SYPHER, and L. A. SHELDON, honorable members of the other House, associated with us, and well known to us, speak of their own knowledge of the loyalty of this man and say that you are doing great injustice in not allowing this claim.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator misapprehends my point. I referred him to a printed statement laid on the desks of Senators which alleges that a letter, which he has sent to the Chair and had read, addressed to me, was before the Committee on Claims, undertaking to allege that we decided against the case notwithstanding that letter. I now state as a fact that the letter which he thus sends up reached the committee-room after the case had been discussed and was disposed of.

Mr. SARGENT. That I understand.

Mr. SCOTT. Whether it was testimony that might have weighed or not, I do not undertake to discuss.

Mr. SARGENT. That I understand perfectly, and I was commenting on that fact that the judgment of the committee was made up before this came. That does not make it any the less valuable to the Senate that Mr. SMITH and Mr. SHELDON and these other gentlemen say that they know themselves that Mr. Bailey was a loyal man. That does not make it less valuable as testimony, because it was not before the committee before they decided. That makes it more valuable, because the testimony of these gentlemen must have some weight with any man. It must have some weight with the Senate most assuredly, when five gentlemen like these say this was a loyal man according to their own knowledge. It is a misfortune in this case that their testimony was not before the committee because it probably would have changed the result; at any rate it might have made them hesitate a little longer before they came to this conclusion. But on account of its great value as the testimony of these men, I add it to that of Sherman, of Sheridan, of Canby, of Howard, and all those other eminent men who speak of their own knowledge of the record of this man, of his sacrifices in the cause of the Union, of that which he suffered from day to day on account of his adherence to the cause which seemed lost in the South; and any man who would dare to do it was the object of malignity and hate on the part of his neighbors, which we in the more settled feelings of the North had no opportunity to appreciate or to measure.

General Canby says about this gentleman, General Bailey:

This gentleman has been a great sufferer in person and in property by the rebels because he was a Unionist, and I am sorry to say by our own troops, although he was protected by a safeguard.

Is such testimony worth nothing? Has it no bearing at all? The Senator say he speaks as a friend of Dr. Bailey when he asks that this may be delayed a year. Here is a man impoverished and broken down on account of his losses in the rebellion, and the Senator speaks as a friend to him in asking that he shall go back and prove his loyalty! How shall he prove it? By calling General Sherman up to swear that he had known this man before the war and through the hostilities and that he was a constant Union man? The Senator assents. I say no, sir. I say here is the proof. Is there any doubt about the authenticity of these letters? The proof is before the Senate. It does not need to sift it through these commissioners who will not give it any value because they say this man sold cotton to the confederates, a thing which they knew before he had done, and yet said in the judgment that he was a loyal man. To send the case back for the testimony of Canby and Sheridan and Howard is a mere form. It is an insidious blow at the proposition that the man be paid, I do not care how you disguise it. You may talk about excellent feelings to this man; you may say you love him, that you do this as his friend; but I say it is an unfriendly act, whatever the intention may be, to send him back to these commissioners where there is no law requiring us to send the case back, where there is no appeal from us to them. It is to ignore all these gentlemen and go back to the written judgment you have in advance published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

With all the frankness of the man himself, not drawn out of him, he admitted that he had sold cotton to the confederacy, not being particular as to amounts or dates, because he was not cross-questioned about it, but with this admitted in advance I am in favor of disposing of this case by the Senate, and letting this man go off with the little pittance that the commissioners, even in their highest view of his loyalty, were willing to allow him out of the more than $100,000 claimed in his account.

Furthermore, if it shall be held that in all cases where there is division of opinion in the Senate we cannot pass upon them but must send them back to the commissioners of claims, I should like to ask when we shall ever dispose of these matters? It is just as important that the commissioners shall reconsider a question as to amounts as the question said to be here involved. The principle would carry back half the cases reported by the court, and every one where a doubt could be raised by anybody.

Further, in reference to this man, he had a safeguard and he took the oath under Lincoln's proclamation. A very serious question has been discussed in both Houses of Congress whether that of itself did not entitle a party to the restoration of all his rights under the laws of Congress, where such taking did not work entire amnesty and oblivion of past offenses. But such argument is not necessary in the case of this man, because there was never anything disloyal in his conduct requiring it. It does not make any difference whether there were five hundred bales of cotton sold or subsequently six hundred more; the disloyal act was just as great in selling the first five hundred as the six hundred subsequently. The discovery of six hundred subsequently sold or any other amount does not make the man more or less a Union man. It does not make him a loyal man because he only sold five hundred bales, because there was no virtue in that. If selling cotton was disloyalty, then selling a single bale was disloyalty. Now he came forward frankly and admitted the whole case as it would be if it were sent back to the commissioners of claims; that is, that he sold cotton. He says he did it under duress, when he had to pay his taxes, and if he did not do it the cotton would have been seized. He did not sell all he could sell, but he only sold five hundred or at most a thousand bales, and yet he had, as is admitted, on his plantations nearly three times that amount.

If he was selling because he could make a speculation by selling cotton, and selling because he wanted to put cotton which the Senator says was ammunition in the hands of the confederate government, why did he not put more there? He had it. He could have sold more. The very fact that he sold a part and no more would imply that the part he sold was what he was compelled to sell. If it was of his accord, there was the confederate government ready to take the rest on the same terms. If it was a good bargain for him to sell it or a favor to the confederates, there was an opportunity for him to extend the favor. On the contrary he only sold about a quarter of the amount which he had, and that he frankly admits. In addition to that when there was the first opportunity for loyal men to make themselves known in Louisiana, when Banks came there with his army and liberated the sentiment of the people, this man was the vice-president of a meeting which met to welcome the Union forces into that part of the country. Was that a disloyal act? Was there any necessity for it? Could he not have gone off and hid himself as disloyal men did, as other citizens of the State of Louisiana did? On the contrary he came forward with another person whose name is mentioned in this bill, and presided or assisted to preside over a loyal meeting called to welcome the United States forces. I ask if that was the act of a disloyal man? And this was subsequent to the sale of the cotton. Is this to be brushed aside like all the rest?

This proof shows that he had the same feelings he had when he went to Louisiana as an abolitionist, having emancipated all his slaves in Virginia at the great sacrifice of his property. They were worth from $1,000 to $3,000 apiece, and he emancipated a large number. He shows that the old abolition feeling which existed in his mind, and which necessarily and naturally made him a loyalist, still existed, and at the very first breathing spell, the first ray of light let in on Louisiana showed him with his hand outstretched to receive the Union forces and welcome them when they came there. Such a man of course ought not to be entitled to consideration; he ought, on any anoymous communication, or secret whisper, or pleading of anybody, to be deprived of the little practical right which was conceded to him in this bill! Let us haste to crucify him.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I shall vote with the committee upon this proposition; and I think it would be extraordinary, to say the least, if the Senate should override the committee. But at this moment the Senate, if it is not without a quorum, has scarcely more than a quorum present; and there is upon the table business of an executive character which it will oblige a number of Senators if we may have a short session to dispose of. The Senator having charge of this bill has no objection to an executive session; and therefore as the bill must go over in any event, I submit the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senate to yield to me to make a motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I will hear the motion.

DAILY SESSIONS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. By the order of the Senate the hour of meeting will be twelve o'clock to-morrow unless otherwise ordered. Now in the interest of economy of time, which I am sure we all desire, I make this general proposition for the residue of the session unless otherwise ordered:

Ordered, That on and after to-morrow the Senate will meet at eleven o'clock a. m. and remain in continuous session until six o'clock p. m. on each day, unless otherwise ordered.

That will make it a little flexible. That will give us seven hours continuous session, about as much as human endurance will admit, according to my experience, and we are more likely to accomplish the necessary results than in any other way.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no objection to that, I imagine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I offer the order which I have just read.

The order was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope not.

Mr. CONKLING. The motion is not debatable; but I ask my friend to allow some of us who want a short executive session a hearing. It will not interfere with him at all if we devote five minutes to executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. With the understanding that I shall have an opportunity to take up business from the Committee on Commerce when we come out, I shall not object.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator can make his motion afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 29, noes not counted.

A. H. VON LUETTWITZ.

Mr. SPENCER. While the doors are being closed I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 633) for the relief of A. H. von Luettwitz, late lieutenant Third United States Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble states that A. H. von Luettwitz, late a first lieutenant in the Third United States Cavalry, who was cashiered from the United States service by sentence of a general court-martial on the 8th day of July, 1870, has established his innocence of the charges upon which he was so cashiered the United States service. The bill therefore directs the Secretary of War to amend the record of A. H. von Luettwitz so that he shall appear on the rolls and records of the Army for pay and rank as if he had been continuously in service; and the amount required for the payment of this officer is appropriated out of any money in the United States Treasury not appropriated for other purposes.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the bill by striking out the words "pay and," in line 5, and in line 6 after the word "service" striking out the words "and that the amount required for the payment of this officer be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the United States Treasury not appropriated for other purposes," and to insert, "provided that nothing shall be paid to him for the interval of time from the 8th day of July, 1870, until the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to amend the record of the said A. H. von Luettwitz so that he shall appear on the rolls and records of the Army for rank as if he had been continuously in service: Provided, That nothing shall be paid to him for the interval of time from the 8th day of July, 1870, until the passage of this act.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What amount does that call for?

Mr. SPENCER. It does not call for any money.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 733) regulating gas-works, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3740) to create the Bozman land district in the Territory of Montana;

A bill (H. R. No. 3584) to grant certain lands in the Territory of Arizona;

A bill (H. R. No. 3611) for the relief of Nelson Green; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 111) authorizing the President to negotiate with civilized powers in regard to international arbitration.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on the Library, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MERRIMON, Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. PRATT, and Mr. ROBERTSON submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2545) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and, after eleven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 1142) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to indemnify the holders of pre-emption and homestead certificates and certificates of entry and patents upon lands in Iowa within the so-called Des Moines River grant on account of failure of titles, and to procure a relinquishment of the paramount titles to the United States—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 3611) for the relief of Nelson Green—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 3584) to grant title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 111) authorizing the President to negotiate with civilized powers in regard to international arbitration—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TAX ON SAVINGS-BANKS.

The bill (H. R. No. 3678) for the relief of savings institutions having no capital stock and doing business solely for the benefit of depositors, was read twice.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to have the bill put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that no further collection of internal-revenue taxes shall be made on the earnings of savings-banks or institutions for savings having no capital stock and doing no other business but receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits without profit or compensation to the association or company, whether the earnings of the same have been or may hereafter be divided annually, semi-annually, or at any other period.

Mr. SCOTT. Before that bill is proceeded with, I wish to have it understood that the unfinished business is not displaced by this or by the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly not; it is laid aside informally for the purpose of taking up bills from the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT MONTGOMERY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 899) to constitute Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery.

Mr. SCOTT. I understand the Senator from Michigan desires to proceed with bills from the Committee on Commerce. If the bill of which I have had charge this afternoon relating to the payment of southern claims is not displaced, as I am not well enough to remain in the Senate during the evening, I shall make no objection to his proceeding with bills of that character.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope by unanimous consent that bill will be laid aside informally and will be left as the unfinished business for to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) If there is no objection the bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has referred will be laid aside informally to be considered the unfinished business to-morrow.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask the Senator from Michigan whether he proposes to bring us back here to-night?

Mr. CHANDLER. I propose to continue right on with these miscellaneous bills and not to take up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 899) to constitute Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce proposes to amend the bill by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That the law constituting Selma, Alabama, a port of delivery, approved January 27, 1858, is hereby repealed; this act to take effect June 30, 1874.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HORN, JR.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2398.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2398) granting a medal to John Horn, jr., for his heroic exploits in rescuing men, women, and children from drowning in Detroit River, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE AT LA CROSSE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3586.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3586) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LETTERS FOR VESSELS' NAMES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 683.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 683) to authorize the use of gilt letters for the names of vessels was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships and vessels," approved December 31, 1792, so as to allow the name of any vessel to be painted upon her stern in yellow or gilt letters.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES DE LONG.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up House bill No. 526.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 526) for the relief of James De Long was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to James De Long, late consul at Aux Cayes, Hayti, $2,816; $1,166 of the sum so appropriated being for money advanced and expended by him for the relief of destitute colored emigrants colonized under authority of the acts of April 16 and July 17, 1862, and $1,650 being for extraordinary expenses incurred by him at the siege of Aux Cayes during his consulship at that place.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 528) to protect the navigable waters of the United States from injury and obstruction.

Mr. STOCKTON. Do I understand that these bills are called up subject to one objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. STOCKTON. I object to that bill, and I desire that it shall not be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is whether the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from New Jersey will pardon me, I will suggest that his colleague has an amendment which will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from New Jersey. His colleague will offer an amendment which will be accepted. I ask that the bill and amendment be read.

Mr. STOCKTON. I would rather that at this time of the evening a bill of that kind should not be passed. It is a very important bill regulating all the harbors of the United States. But if my colleague, who understands this question quite as well if not better than I do, has examined the bill and is satisfied that it is correct with his amendment, I shall not object.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would a little rather that the Senator should look at the bill himself, and that other Senators should do so. The effect of the bill, as I have read it, is to make it an offense not only to deposit ballast but to make any deposit in the waters of the United States without the consent of certain officers named, which is going a great way. The amendment which I was going to propose is this:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to either permit or prohibit the construction of piers, bridges, bulk-heads, or other structures, or the filling in of flats on the borders of navigable rivers.

That is an amendment which I introduced to a like bill last winter or the winter before, and which was passed by the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. That amendment I will accept if it is acceptable to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. STEVENSON. This is too important a bill to be passed without consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I will pass it over and go to the next bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to take up the bill is withdrawn.

OCEAN-COURSES FOR STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up Senate bill No. 368.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 368) to provide for the establishment of an international commission of the maritime powers to lay down ocean-courses for steam-vessels, and otherwise provide for increased safety of sea-travel, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a commissioner on the part of the United States to meet with such other commissioners as may be appointed by the maritime powers of Europe to frame such international laws and regulations as may seem adequate to secure increased safety to ocean-travel by the laying down of ocean-courses for inward and outward passages, summer and winter, of steam-vessels, by the enforced use of electric and other lights upon all steam-vessels crossing the North Atlantic or other fog latitudes, and the requirement of sufficient raft-accommodation on all iron steamers for the safety of life in case of disaster.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the bill by inserting as section 2:

That the compensation of such commissioner shall be $2,000 and necessary traveling expenses, to be certified to and allowed by the Secretary of State; and no appointment shall be made pursuant to the act until one or more of the maritime powers of Europe shall signify its readiness to appoint a commissioner or commissioners to co-operate in securing the object in the first section mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRAGUE subsequently said: I enter a motion to reconsider the vote on the bill (S. No. 368) just now passed, to provide for the establishment of an international commission of the maritime powers to lay down ocean-courses for steam-vessels, and otherwise provide an increased safety of sea-travel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

CHARLES J. SANDS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up House bill No. 1206.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1206) for the relief of Charles J. Sands, of Brooklyn, New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Charles J. Sands of $202.39 for salary due him for service as United States marshal of consular court at Chin-Kiang, China, from the 5th of October, to the 19th of December, 1865, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. & W. R. WING.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up House bill No. 2898.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2898) for the relief of J. & W. R. Wing of New Bedford, Massachusetts, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

By the bill the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to Messrs. J. & W. R. Wing, agents and managing owners of the late American whaling-bark Xantho, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, the sum of $642.22 in gold, in full payment for expenses incurred by them for the support and transportation of the crew of that vessel after its wreck in the Indian Ocean, June 18, 1871.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 775.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 775) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Portland, in the State of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the bill by inserting at the end of section 1 the words:

Provided further, That the said bridge shall be so constructed and built as not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously affect the navigation of the river; and in order to secure a compliance with these conditions, the corporation, association, or company proposing to erect the same, previous to commencing the construction of the bridge, shall submit to the Secretary of War a plan of the bridge, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge, and for the distance of a mile above and below the site, exhibiting the depths and currents at all points of the same, together with all other information touching said bridge and river as may be deemed requisite by the Secretary of War to determine whether the said bridge, when built, will conform to the prescribed conditions of the act not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously affect the navigation of the river: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may detail an officer to superintend the survey and examination of said river with a view to said location.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as section 2:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving said plan and map and other information, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such a plan and at said locality will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously affect the navigation of said river, to notify the said corporation, association, or company proposing to erect the same that he approves the same; and upon receiving such notification the said corporation, association, or company may proceed to the erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location. But until the Secretary of War approve the plan and location of said bridge, and notify the said corporation, association, or company of the same, the bridge shall not be built or commenced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A VESSEL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the bill (S. No. 855) authorizing an American register for the French brig Sidi, and a change of the name of said brig to that of Sea Waif, be indefinitely postponed for the purpose of taking it off the Calendar, as we have passed a House bill on that subject.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WALKER.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move next to take up House bill No. 2292.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2292) for the relief of William Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William Walker, of Milton, Wisconsin, of $374.98, for unpaid salary as vice-commercial agent at Gaboon, from October 1, 1870, to February 12, 1871.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 808) for the better protection of immigrants.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is one of a class of bills so common now in Congress interfering with private matters. I do not know how objectionable it is in its details, but I should like a vote of the Senate whether it shall be taken up or not.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and his letter is with the bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It had better be laid over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. MERRIMON. It is very manifest that there is no quorum present. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; let me get through. I shall be through in twenty minutes, I think. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion. I shall be through in twenty minutes at the outside.

Mr. MERRIMON. Well, I withdraw the motion.

INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to take up House bill No. 2887.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2887) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that it shall not be lawful to bring any vessel or vehicle coming from a foreign port or country, and affected with a contagious or infectious disease, or conveying persons, merchandise, or animals affected with contagious or infectious diseases, into any port of the United States, except under the regulations hereinafter provided.

The second section constitutes the Surgeon-General of the Army, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, and the supervising surgeon of the marine hospital service, ex officio, a board to make the regulations to be observed by persons controlling vessels or vehicles coming from foreign ports or countries into ports of the United States by passengers upon and persons connected with vessels or vehicles so coming, and by pilots at the several ports of entry, to the end that no persons, animals, or goods affected with infectious or contagious disease may enter the United States. The board may prescribe the times, manner, and places of performing quarantine by vessels, vehicles, persons, animals, and goods coming from foreign ports or countries, and may make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent with law, and alter and amend the same, for the efficient execution of the purposes of the act; but no rule or regulation or amendment to the same is to have effect until approved by the President. The board is to make report annually to the Congress at its meeting in December.

Section 3 provides that there shall be detailed or assigned by the President from among the commissioned medical officers of either the Army or the Navy, or from among the surgeons of the marine-hospital service of the Treasury Department, to be selected without regard to rank, but solely with reference to skill and experience in hygiene and public sanitary science, one who shall be the secretary to the board, and shall in addition, under the direction of the board, be charged with the supervision of all matters pertaining to the establishment and maintenance of the system of quarantine provided by the act.

For the execution of the duties arising out of the act the fourth section provides that medical officers of the Army or of the Navy, or surgeons of the marine-hospital service of the Treasury Department, may be detailed or assigned, according to the exigencies of the service, with especial regard to economy and efficiency; but no person in the employment of the Government so detailed or assigned to duty is to receive any additional compensation therefor; and the President of the United States is to issue such instructions to the officers of the various Departments of the Government not interfering with their peculiar duties as shall secure the aid and co-operation necessary to perfecting and enforcing the regulations provided for.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the bill in the sixth section by inserting after the words "apply to" the words "or interfere with;" so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to apply to or interfere with the health regulations and quarantine measures maintained by States or municipalities; and such local systems and their appendages shall remain under the control of the respective local authorities.

Mr. STOCKTON. I regret very much to object to so many bills; but this is one of the same class, interfering with the regulations of harbors in quarantine matters. The highest power that is exercised in this country is the power to protect health. The municipal governments exercising this power go further in their action than is permitted to any other body. Why should the United States assume this power? Why should the Senate at this time of the evening pass a bill giving a jurisdiction to the United States that never has been claimed before? I cannot understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will read the last section he will see that it does not interfere in any way, manner, or shape with local regulations.

Mr. STOCKTON. I listened very attentively, and I heard those words with pleasure; but while it does not interfere, it establishes a system never established before, a Federal Government system of quarantine in reference to harbors in the different States. It seems to me that that involves a great principle. I do not mean by objecting to the bill to say that there may not be some propriety in it; but it certainly ought not to be passed in this way, as there are but six or seven Senators in the Chamber.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I will lay it aside.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to appeal to the Senator from New Jersey to withdraw his objection. This bill was prepared with a great deal of care by the member of Congress from the Mobile district. The object was to keep the yellow fever out of the Gulf ports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been laid aside by the consent of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER. I was in hopes the Senator from New Jersey might withdraw his objection.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2655.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2655) to provide for the establishment of life-saving stations and houses of refuge upon the sea and lake coasts of the United States, and to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1564 establishing life-saving stations, and appropriating therefor, and that it be indefinitely postponed, as it is virtually the same bill as that just passed.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3522.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3522) to extend the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof inserting:

That the Light-House Board are hereby directed to cause examinations to be made, and to report to the Secretary of the Treasury what light-houses, lights, beacons, and buoys are required for the better security of navigation on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, including specific statement as to the respective localities where and by whom now maintained, where required, and estimated cost of their construction and maintenance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 747) to facilitate and regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I must object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan insist on his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Let it lie over.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the bill is objected to, I cannot insist under the present circumstances.

Mr. SPENCER. I am very sorry that the Senator from Massachusetts objects to this bill. I think it is amended so that it will not be objectionable.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not object to hearing it read; but unless it is changed materially from what it was when I last saw it, I must object to its consideration.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think my friend from New Jersey will withdraw his objection to the bill (S. No. 808) for the better protection of immigrants. If the Senator would listen to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury I am sure he would not object. I appeal to my friend to allow that bill to pass. It brings foreign ships under the same regulations now imposed on our own, and is really very important, in my judgment. The committee were unanimous.

Mr. STOCKTON. The Senator from Michigan asks me to withdraw my objection, and he is exactly in the same position as the one who told me he came near having a very fine horse. He met a man riding on a nice horse and asked him to give it to him, but the man said "no." I was trying to listen to the Senator when we were pressed with other business, hoping that I could agree with him. I will say to him candidly that it is really unpleasant to me to object to a bill when I have the power, there being no quorum in the Senate, to prevent its passage of my own volition. It is very unpleasant to me to feel obliged to resist these appeals, but, as I said when the bill was up, I really think it is a bad bill and I should not like to see it passed without other Senators examining it.

So far from the Senator persuading me to support the bill, I should like to get hold of him for two or three minutes to tell him what I think about the bill, and I feel satisfied I could persuade him that he would be sorry himself to have the bill passed. It is a bill, as I understand, taking a subject which is now entirely in the jurisdiction of the courts in the cities and States where the immigrants land, and putting it under congressional care. It is the tendency of all the bills from the Committee on Commerce. They all seem to tend in one direction. When you accomplish this object, when you have done this thing, you will find that you have absolutely destroyed the safeguards which have been put over immigrants under the laws of the States. I do not think that other gentlemen in the Senate who are absent now would feel that I did right if I allowed the bill to go through.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to express my gratitude to the Chair and to the Senators who have been thus kind to me. I have no more bills to offer at present.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and thirty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 17, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

Mr. CROOKE. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with; it is very long.

Mr. SENER. I object; the House is too thin.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the Journal, but before concluding,

Mr. COTTON. I ask that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. SENER. I withdraw my objection.

No further objection being made, it was so ordered.

REPORTS FROM THE DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. COTTON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia have one hour this morning to conclude their reports. Under the rule they were entitled to submit their reports on Monday last, it being the third Monday of the month; but it being within the last ten days of the session they were deprived of their opportunity. I understand the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] who has a motion to suspend the rules coming over from yesterday, is willing that we should take an hour now.

Mr. TREMAIN. Will my matter come up immediately afterward?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. POTTER. I have an unfinished matter from yesterday, upon which a division was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman afterward.

No objection was made, and the request of Mr. COTTON was granted.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. COTTON. There is a bill in the hands of the Clerk, which was reported the other day by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICE.] I ask that it be now considered.

The pending bill was a bill (H. R. No. 3641) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company," approved May 17, 1872, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment.

The bill provides that the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company may extend its tracks in Washington City, District of Columbia, from Seventh street west, down Water street, to the intersection of P street south, thence along said P street to the west side of the arsenal gate; provided that wherever the foregoing route may coincide with the route of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, on Water street or elsewhere in the District, or connect portions of such route, but one set of tracks shall be used by both companies; which are hereby authorized and empowered to use such tracks in common, upon such fair and equitable terms as may be agreed upon by said companies; and in the event the said companies fail to agree upon satisfactory terms, either of said companies may apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which shall provide for proper notice to and hearing of all parties interested, and shall have power to determine the terms and conditions upon which, and the regulations under which, the company thereby incorporated shall be entitled so to use and enjoy the tracks of such other street-railroad company, and the amount and manner of compensation to be paid therefor; and provided further, that neither of the companies using such track in common shall be permitted to make the track so used in common the depot or general stopping-place to await passengers, but shall only be entitled to use the same for the ordinary passage of their cars, with the ordinary halts for the taking up and the dropping of passengers.

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That such railroad track shall conform to the grade established by the board of public works of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RICE. I desire to state to the House that this bill is for the purpose of allowing the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, already built, to extend its track about three hundred yards, not for the purpose of benefiting the company, but for the benefit of the property-owners in that region. This railroad terminates at the foot of Seventh street. There are three wharves near there from which excursion steamboats run, but this railroad does not extend to those wharves. The owners of the wharves desire to have the railroad extended. The railroad company are willing to do this if permission is granted by Congress. I have been over the ground. The street is not yet paved; and the provision is made that this shall be done in conformity with the grade established by the board of public works. I believe that this measure is entirely proper for the accommodation of the people.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COTTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3739) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the creation of corporations by general law," approved March 3, 1870; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

The first section amends the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the creation of corporations in the District of Columbia by general law," approved May 5, 1870, so as to authorize the formation of companies under the provisions of said act for constructing locks, docks, and wharves in the District; and for these and all other purposes mentioned in said fourth section subscriptions to the capital stock, or any part thereof, of such corporations as have a capital stock may be made in lands and leases of lands, or easements, rights, and privileges relating to the object of such corporations, (where the property so subscribed shall be such as it is proper that the corporation shall own for the advancement of the purposes for which it was incorporated,) at a valuation to be fixed by a board of appraisers consisting of three competent and disinterested men appointed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia or any of the judges thereof, upon a petition filed for that purpose, whose report and appraisement, to be made under oath, shall be approved by the said court; but such subscriptions shall not be otherwise received, nor shall they be so received, unless the same shall have been previously authorized by the stockholders assembled in general meeting, pursuant to a call, to consider the propriety of receiving the said subscriptions and of fixing the terms upon which they shall be received. Where property of any kind is received by the authority of the stockholders, in general meeting as aforesaid, in payment for stock, the books of the company are to be so kept as to show at all times fully what property was received for the stock, at what value, and the number of shares of the capital stock issued for the same. In all other cases money only shall be considered as payment of a subscription to any part of the capital stock.

The second section provides that the act referred to be further amended so as to authorize the formation of mutual life and fire insurance companies, which shall be subject to all the provisions of said act so far as the same may be applicable thereto.

The third section provides that Z. D. Gilman, William Dickson, William H. Pope, George W. Stickney, Charles H. Moulton, Henry D. Barr, Giles H. Edwards, William Tyler, N. G. Starkweather, and their associates, a company organized under the name of the Cottage Hill Company, for the purpose of improving certain real estate contiguous to Washington, by the construction of cottage, villa, and other residences, be authorized to organize as a body-politic and corporate under the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the creation of corporations in the District of Columbia by general law," approved May 5, 1870, in the same manner and with the same rights and privileges, and subject to the same regulations and restrictions, as are therein provided with regard to corporations authorized by said act.

The fourth section declares it lawful for associations of three or more persons desirous of carrying on any lawful business within the District of Columbia to organize under the provisions of the aforesaid act; and they shall be entitled to all the privileges and subject to all the regulations and restrictions therein provided with regard to corporations authorized by that act.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, the act of May 3, 1870, for the formation of corporations in this District purports in its terms to be a general incorporation act, but it is not so; it is somewhat restricted.

Section 4 provides that—

> Corporations may be formed for manufacturing, agricultural, mining, mechanical, business, insurance, mercantile, transportation, or marketing purposes.

This would not seem to include corporations for improving real estate. A corporation has been formed in this District for that purpose. This bill authorizes that company to incorporate under the general law, and it further provides that hereafter corporations may be formed for any lawful business under this general incorporation act, and that insurance companies mutual in their character may also be organized under this law. All these corporations, I will say, are confined to business within the District of Columbia. We further provide that corporations may take stock subscriptions in land where the land is deeded for the business of the corporation and for no other business; but the consent of the stockholders is first to be obtained, and the land is to be appraised by commissioners to be appointed by one of the courts of the District. This is the effect of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Does this bill allow real estate to be subscribed for stock in these companies?

Mr. COTTON. That portion of the bill in respect to taking land for stock was for the benefit of the wharfing company.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill modifies the general law allowing land to be subscribed as stock. I wish to know if it so amends the law in reference to corporations simply as regards those dealing in real estate?

Mr. COTTON. Instead of passing a special law in reference to this wharfing company we thought Congress would much prefer to pass a general law. We provide in this bill where a corporation may need land for the purposes of the company it may take it in subscription for stock. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COBURN. Is this bill a charter for a mere building company? I understand the original charter was for a company to build houses. I hope the gentleman will state what was the original law.

Mr. COTTON. The original law was for various purposes. This provides that persons may incorporate in the District of Columbia for any lawful business. It is like the general incorporation law of Illinois and Iowa. That is embraced in the last section of the bill.

Mr. COBURN. What is the specific object of the bill?

Mr. COTTON. First, it authorizes corporations to take land where they need it for the actual business of the corporation, in place of insisting the stock shall all be paid in money. In the next place, it allows corporations to be formed in the District of Columbia for any lawful purpose. It is in effect a general incorporation law.

Mr. COBURN. Is this an amendment to the general law?

Mr. COTTON. There was a company organized heretofore. That seemed to be outside of the law. We legalize that company and make it a valid corporation in this law.

Mr. COBURN. But subject to the general provisions of the law in reference to corporations.

Mr. COTTON. Yes; and we cure the defect in reference to that corporation as at present organized.

Mr. COBURN. I see also a provision for life insurance companies.

Mr. COTTON. The present law does not seem to cover insurance companies. We provide they may be incorporated under this act. After specifying all these cases we put on the general provision that hereafter any persons in the District of Columbia may incorporate themselves for any lawful purpose. It is the same as the general incorporation act of Illinois and of Iowa, and I believe of other States.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am not quite satisfied in regard to this bill. It is an attempt to establish a general joint stock company law under which all manner of associations may be organized—insurance companies, manufacturing companies, wharf companies, dock companies, &c. It allows them to subscribe not in cash alone but in real estate. It strikes me the provisions of the bill are very loose.

The gentleman from Iowa likens the bill to the general joint stock company law of Illinois and of New York State. If he will take the statute of New York—and perhaps there are others who can speak of it with more certainty than I can; but I refer to one department—if he will take the New York law in regard to insurance companies he will see that that cannot be done in any one line or any one section. It is impossible for a section to be framed to provide a general law, for the incorporation of insurance companies as it ought to be done. Here we have but a line or a section providing a general law, merely naming the companies. I would much prefer a bill like this should be carefully matured by the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a subject not lightly to be dealt with. Under it all manner of corporations can be framed in this District of Columbia. Under it there may be subscriptions, not in money alone, but in real estate and in almost anything else they may choose to pledge for stock. If in order, I move the reference of this bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman mistakes the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. If it appears I have mistaken it, after it has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and examined then it can be reported back to the House and passed. There should be some examination by that committee of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. COTTON. There was a general law passed in 1870 to which I will call the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut, and that law does contain all the safeguards to which he has referred. I have the law before me, and the gentleman can look at it. This simply provides for corporations to be formed under the general law which contains all the necessary safeguards. The last section of this bill merely provides that persons in the District of Columbia may form corporations for any lawful business.

Mr. COBURN. Will the gentleman explain the last section authorizing three persons to be incorporated for the purpose of going int any sort of business?

Mr. COTTON. That is because the old law reads that way. The fourth section of the act of May 4, 1870, provides that "at any time hereafter any three or more persons who may desire to form a company for the purpose of carrying on," &c., may incorporate. We adopt this provision in regard to the corporation of three or more persons in this bill, because the existing law provides for the incorporation of that number of persons. And instead of limiting their incorporation to certain business purposes, we provide that they may be incorporated for any lawful purpose. And that is exactly in accordance with the laws in the States. We are careful to confine them in their operations to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. Would that authorize the grangers to be organized as a corporation?

Mr. COBURN. It would authorize the organization of almost anything. In the States, as I understand it, the power to incorporate is given for certain specific business purposes, and not for any purposes whatever. The acts of incorporation in the States mention the purposes for which organizations can be incorporated.

Mr. COTTON. The gentleman is mistaken. They do not. The statutes in the States include this very language: "And persons may incorporate for any lawful purpose." And I ask my friend why they should not be allowed so to do; why they should not be allowed to incorporate for the purpose of engaging in any lawful business as to incorporate for the purpose of building houses or railroads? The general law, the act of 1870, has in it all the safeguards desired by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. My objections to the bill have not been removed. I find that in the first section the existing law is so amended as to authorize the formation of companies, under the provisions of said act, for constructing locks, docks, and wharves in said District; and that, for these and all other purposes mentioned in said fourth section, subscriptions to the capital stock, or any part thereof, of such of said corporations as have a capital stock, may be made in lands and leases of lands, or easements, rights, and privileges relating to the object of such corporations. I do not see but under this, if I had a right of way across my neighbor's back yard, I might subscribe that as a part of the stock of a corporation for improving the wharves of the city.

Section 3 proposes to incorporate certain individuals, or to provide for their being incorporated under the general law, as the Cottage Hill Company. I wish to ask is this a general law providing for the incorporation generally of joint-stock companies or a special law for the Cottage Hill Company? The bill is partly in print and partly in manuscript, so that there is a difficulty in understanding what it does precisely provide for.

Section 4 provides—

> That hereafter it shall be lawful for associations of three or more persons desirous of engaging in any lawful business within the District of Columbia, to organize under the provisions of the aforesaid act, and they shall be entitled to all the privileges and subject to all the regulations, &c.

That is to say, that there shall be no longer any individual liability.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman mean to say that by this bill any three persons can get incorporated for any business?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Yes, for any business under the sun. Under the provisions of this bill any three persons may form a mutual or general stock life insurance company, and carry on its operations all over the Union. And I may subscribe part of my back lot as part of the stock of such a company.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COTTON. I have the floor and do not yield to the gentleman for that purpose. I think I know as much about corporations and the general corporation law as my friend does who has just spoken, and I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that at this very time, under the law passed in 1870, three persons can form a corporation in this District for insurance purposes or for any purpose authorized by this law. The gentleman from Connecticut objects to this bill because it authorizes generally an incorporation for all lawful purposes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] inquires whether or no it authorizes three persons to form a corporation. The gentleman seemed to indicate surprise that there should be a provision of that kind in this bill.

Now if you look at the act of 1870 you will find that Congress at that time authorized three persons to form a corporation for insurance business and for a great many other purposes. The fourth section of the act reads:

> That at any time hereafter any three or more persons who may desire to form a company for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing, agricultural, mining, mechanical, insurance, mercantile, transportation, or marketing business in the District of Columbia, may make, sign, and acknowledge, before some officer competent to take the acknowledgment of deeds, and file in the office of the register of deeds, a certificate in writing, in which shall be stated the corporate name of the said company and the objects for which said company shall be formed, &c.

But in this bill certain objects are specified. It was thought that the purposes for which this corporation is formed might not come under the head of "manufacturing business." Therefore to secure their organization they require this act, that their corporation may be legalized. Then a company has been organized to carry on mutual insurance business. They were afraid that the language of the act of 1870 might not cover them, and so we provide that they shall be included in the law. And then, to avoid the questions arising, that have several times required special legislation to cover the particular purpose for which a company sought to be incorporated, we put in this fourth section, which gives the same right of incorporation as is given in the several States of the Union.

As to the taking of land, the bill only provides that they shall take land where it is necessary for the particular purposes of the corporation, such as for maintaining a wharf. Such a case was brought to our attention where the party owned the land which he desired to put into the company, and this is to enable that to be done without the party being first required to pay the money and then after paying in the money going through the form of receiving it back for the land; but the committee were careful to so limit the bill that land is not to be taken for any purpose except simply for the actual use of the corporation in its business, and this with the consent of the stockholders and after approval by commissioners appointed by the courts of the district. We have given this bill, we think, ample care, and believe that there is nothing wrong or mischievous in it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, and that is in what manner the liabilities of this corporation are intended to be secured, and to what extent there is individual liability on the part of the corporators? It seems that any three persons may constitute a corporation for any purpose under this bill. Are they mere partners, with entire liability for the debts of the corporation, or is the corporation alone as such responsible for its debts?

Mr. COTTON. The liability against the parties who may be benefited by this act will be just the same as it is now under the general corporation act of the District to which I have referred, and I will call the gentleman's attention to a section of that act. It is as follows:

> No stockholder shall be personally liable for the payment of any debt contracted by any company formed under this act which is not paid within one year from the time the debt becomes due, unless a suit for the collection of such debt shall be brought against such company within one year after the debt became due; and no suit shall be brought against any stockholder who shall cease to be a stockholder in any such company, for any debt contracted by said company, unless the same shall be commenced within two years from the time he shall have ceased to be a stockholder, nor until an execution against the company shall have been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part.

That, of course, applies to this bill as well as to the old law, and it goes beyond the laws of most of the States in making these parties liable.

Mr. POTTER. To what extent are they liable?

Mr. COTTON. There is no limit except as to time.

Mr. HOLMAN. What the gentleman has read is an exception in favor of the stockholders. Where is the affirmative section or clause that creates the liability of stockholders?

Mr. COTTON. This says that they shall be personally liable for the debts.

Mr. HOLMAN. That says that no stockholder shall be personally liable for the payment of any debt.

Mr. POTTER. There must be a section which fixes the liability, of course.

Mr. COTTON. Here is the section:

> The stockholders of any company organized under the provisions of this act shall, jointly, severally, and individually, be liable for all debts that may be due and owing to all their laborers, servants, and apprentices, for services performed for such corporation, and shall be individually liable for all debts of said corporation to the amount of the stock of each stockholder.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. POTTER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. COTTON. Let the previous question be sustained and then I will yield to the gentleman for any question.

Mr. POTTER. I merely want to ask some questions; I do not care when I do it.

On seconding the previous question there were—ayes 34, noes 35; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. COTTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 19 noes not counted.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PELHAM, from the same committee, reported back with amendments, and with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

> That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct a lateral road, from any point on its Washington branch, into the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to intersect the Metropolitan branch thereof at any point in said county and District outside of the city of Washington: Provided, That such work shall be completed within five years after the passage of this act.
> SEC. 2. That all the provisions of the several acts of Congress relating to the lateral road authorized to be built into and within the District of Columbia by an act passed March 2, 1831, entitled "An act to authorize the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Ohio road into and within the District of Columbia" and the supplements thereto shall apply, and they are hereby declared to apply, as far as they are applicable and in conformity to the provisions of this act, to the location, construction, and use by said company.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In section 1, after the words "Washington branch," insert the words "one and a half miles north of Boundary street."

After the words "any point," in line 7, insert the words "one mile north of Boundary street."

Strike out in line 9, in section 1, the word "five" and insert the word "two."

Add to section 1 the following:

The said line shall avoid all Government property, and the point of intersection as well as said lateral branch to be approved by the engineer of public buildings and grounds.

Add to section 2 the following:

This act may be altered, amended, or repealed.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman tell us the object and purpose of this bill?

Mr. PELHAM. The only object is to enable the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to make a junction with the Metropolitan branch one and a half miles outside of the city of Washington; that is all there is in it. They are to build the road at their own expense, and the line is to be approved by the engineer in charge of the public buildings and grounds of the city of Washington. It does not interfere with anybody or with any property, and does not ask for any appropriation. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PELHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGULATING GAS-WORKS.

Mr. COTTON. I ask that Senate bill No. 733, regulating gas-works, in charge of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SESSIONS,] may be considered during our hour, it being a bill relating to this District.

No objection was made.

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back, with amendments, Senate bill No. 733, regulating gas-works.

The bill provides, in the first section, that from and after the 30th day of June, 1874, the illuminating power of the gas furnished by any gas-light company, person, or persons, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, shall be equal to sixteen candles by the Bunsen photometer, using the English parliamentary standard Argand burner, having fifteen holes and a seven-inch chimney, consuming five cubic feet of gas per hour; and such gas shall not contain more than twenty grains of sulphur in any form in one hundred cubic feet, nor more than five grains of ammonia in any form in one hundred cubic feet; that when the illuminating gas supplied by any company, person, or persons in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, shall at any one time be of less illuminating power or of less purity than according to the standard just heretofore given, it shall be so reported by the inspector of gas and meters to the company, person, or persons supplying the same, who shall be subject to a penalty of $100, to be recovered before the proper tribunal and paid into the treasury of the city of Washington aforesaid, for each and every day during which such violation shall continue; provided, however, that if it shall appear that such deviation from the above-named standards could not have been prevented by ordinary care and prudence, but was occasioned by some unavoidable cause, then the said penalty shall not be enforced.

The second section provides that a suitable and impartial person, competent as a chemist, who is not a stockholder or employé in any gas-works, shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be designated and known as inspector of gas and meters, whose compensation shall be a salary of $2,000 per annum, and whose duties shall be to test and determine the illuminating power and purity of the gas furnished by any company, person, or persons in the District of Columbia; and to test, prove, and seal all meters that may be hereafter used by them; and that a suitable person, who shall be a gas-fitter by trade, shall be appointed by the President, as aforesaid, on the recommendation of the inspector of gas and meters, as an assistant inspector, at a salary of $1,000 per annum, who shall assist in the duties specified under the direction of the inspector of gas and meters.

The third section provides that a laboratory shall be provided and fitted up by the Washington Gas-light Company, subject to the approval of the inspector, in the central part of the city of Washington, at a distance, as near as may be, of two thousand feet from any gas works, and furnished with suitable apparatus for the transaction of the business of the inspector and assistant inspector, for which it is intended, and the laboratory shall be kept open on all business days between the hours of eight o'clock in the forenoon and five o'clock in the afternoon; provided that the cost of fitting up said laboratory shall be paid for by each gas company in the District of Columbia in proportion to their sale of gas in 1873.

The third section provides that the company, person, or persons furnishing the gas may, if they see fit, on each occasion of the testing of the gas by the inspector or assistant inspector, be represented by some officer, but such officer shall not interfere in the testing.

The fifth section provides that daily inspections, Sundays excepted, shall be made in conformity to the intent of this act, between the hours of five and eleven o'clock in the afternoon, and a record shall be kept of each inspection, giving the illuminating power and purity, which shall be open to the public, and a copy of the daily inspection shall be furnished the following day to the company, person, or persons furnishing the gas, Saturday's inspection to be furnished on Monday, and a full report for the month to be furnished, upon request, to any daily paper printed in the city of Washington on the day of their publication next after the 24th day of each month, to include each day's test from the date of previous publication, and giving the average illuminating power for the month.

The sixth section provides that all bills for gas furnished by any company, person, or persons shall state the average illuminating power for the month; and if the same shall fall below sixteen candles, as in this act prescribed, then the amount of the bill shall be reduced pro rata.

The seventh section provides that in testing meters, the inspector or assistant inspector shall ascertain whether the meter is of proper construction, and requires only the pressure of a column of water indicated by the water-gauge, commonly used for such tests, of one-fourth of an inch high to work it, and whether it works regularly and correctly, and registers exactly the amount of gas passing through it, first, at the rate the meter is marked to supply; secondly, at one-third its rate; thirdly, at twice its rate; that the standard foot shall be one cubic foot, containing 62.32 pounds, avoirdupois weight, of distilled water at the temperature of 62° Fahrenheit, and with a barometrical pressure of thirty inches; and meters registering within 2 per cent. either way of the exact number of such feet passing through them at the first-named rate, and within 3 per cent. at the second and third rates, and no others shall be deemed accurate and be stamped by the inspector; and that the inspector shall keep at the laboratory a correct record of all meters inspected by him, with their proof at the time of inspection, which record shall be open at all times to the public for any reasonable examination by any company, person, or persons having any interest therein.

The eighth section provides that any gas-meters now in use shall be proved and tested on the written request of the consumer of gas on whose premises it may be, and in his presence, if he requires, upon the payment in advance to the inspector or assistant inspector of fifty cents for each and every meter inspected, proved, and sealed, and if any such meter, on being tested, shall be found to register inaccurately to the injury of the consumer to an extent exceeding 2 per cent., the fee of fifty cents shall be returned to the person applying for said inspection and be paid to the inspector by the company, person, or persons supplying the gas; and every such meter shall be considered correct, and sealed accordingly, which shall register quantities varying from the true standard measure of gas of not more than 2 per cent., and a record shall be kept of the same and of all fees so collected; that all meters hereafter used by any gas company, person, or persons shall be first inspected, proved, and sealed at the laboratory provided for by this act; and for such inspection, proving, and sealing the company, in the first instance, and thereafter the company, person, or persons applying to have the meter inspected, shall pay fifty cents for each meter, a record of which shall be kept and of the fees so collected; and all fees shall be applied to the payment of the expenses for maintaining and keeping in good order and repair the laboratory and apparatus.

The ninth section provides that each company, person, or persons manufacturing illuminating gas in the District of Columbia, shall, when required, in writing, by the inspector of gas and meters, bring to the laboratory any meter that may have been required to be inspected, proved, and sealed, and to return the same to its proper place after such inspection; and it shall not be lawful for any other party or person to remove and return meters.

The tenth section provides that the inspector and assistant inspector of gas and meters shall each give bonds to the extent of double his annual salary, and shall each take an oath or affirmation, before some officer legally qualified to administer the same, that he will faithfully, diligently, and impartially discharge the duties of his office.

The eleventh section provides that the Washington Gas-light Company shall be authorized, on and after the passage of the act, to charge and receive for coal-gas furnished to and paid for by the Government of the United States at the rate of $2.50 per one thousand cubic feet; and when furnished and paid for by other parties, or by the inhabitants of the city of Washington, at the rate of $2.75 per one thousand cubic feet; provided that if the party or inhabitants so furnished shall pay monthly any bill within seven days after the same shall have been presented, said party shall be entitled to a discount upon the amount of such bill at the rate of twenty-five cents per one thousand cubic feet. And all laws authorizing any higher rates are thereby repealed.

The twelfth section provides that the Washington Gas-light Company shall be authorized and required to furnish illuminating gas to the government of the District of Columbia within the distance of fifty yards from any of their mains, on the same terms as to the Government of the United States, and in case of the non-payment of any monthly bills by the said District beyond the period of ten days from the time of presentation, the company shall be entitled to demand and receive interest thereon from date until paid; that the said company shall light, extinguish, keep clean, and repair the Washington City street-lamps at the uniform price of forty dollars for each lamp per annum, to burn two thousand two hundred hours per annum, with a six-foot burner on each lamp, subject to any regulation that may be prescribed by the city authorities as to the time of lighting and extinguishing the same, and any extra number of hours to be charged and paid for at the same rate; provided that the city of Washington shall furnish, when necessary, new lanterns to replace old ones, and shall furnish and pay for the reasonable expense of erecting new lamp-posts to replace such as are old, damaged, and unfit for use.

The thirteenth section provides that if any person or persons, supplied with gas, neglect or refuse to pay the amount due for the same, such company may stop the gas from entering the premises of such person or persons; and that in no case shall the officers, servants, or workmen of the company remove a meter from premises supplied by the company, unless by consent of the consumer, without first giving forty-eight hours' notice in writing by leaving the same at the premises of the consumer; and said removal shall take place only between the hours of eight o'clock in the forenoon and two o'clock in the afternoon.

The fourteenth section provides that it shall be lawful for Congress at any time hereafter to alter, amend, or repeal the act, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith are thereby repealed.

The fifteenth section provides that any person who, with intent to injure or defraud any gas company of the District of Columbia, shall make or cause to be made any pipe, tube, or other instrument or contrivance, or connect the same or cause it to be connected with any main, surface pipe, or other pipe for conducting or supplying illuminating gas, in such manner as to connect with and be calculated to supply illuminating gas to any burner or orifice by which any illuminating gas is consumed, around or without passing through the meter provided for measuring and registering the amount of gas there consumed, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding six months or by fine not exceeding $250.

The sixteenth section provides that the price which may be charged for gas by the Washington Gas-light Company shall be uniform and the same to all consumers, and any reduction made in the price or cost of gas to any person or persons, except the officers of the company, shall furnish a legal right on the part of any other person or persons to demand gas at the same cost or price.

The first amendment reported from the committee was in section 11, to strike out "coal," before "gas," and insert "illuminating."

The second amendment was to add to section 11 the following:

Provided, That when the price of gas-coal delivered at the works of the Washington Gas-light Company shall advance to $8 per ton, the price of gas to consumers may be advanced 10 cents per thousand cubic feet, and an additional 10 cents per thousand feet for each additional dollar per ton that gas coal may advance in price; and in like manner a reduction of 10 cents per thousand feet shall be made for each and every dollar per ton that gas coal may fall below $7 per ton; and for that purpose the Washington Gas-light Company shall in the month of May in each year furnish the Secretary of the Interior with a statement of all their coal contracts or purchases for the ensuing year, sworn to before a justice of the peace by their engineer or secretary, and the advance or reduction of price shall take place on the 1st of July ensuing.

Mr. SESSIONS. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SESSIONS. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. LEACH. Has not the hour of the Committee on the District of Columbia expired?

The SPEAKER. It is about expiring.

Mr. LEACH. I hope this bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question can be fairly tested by the House on seconding the call for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. SESSIONS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 117, noes 31.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was then read a third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was not agreed to, there being ayes 11, noes not counted.

The question recurring on the passage of the bill, it was passed.

Mr. SESSIONS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 1979) reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, entitled "A bill to preserve the ballots cast at, and all papers connected with, elections held for Representatives or Delegates to Congress, and for other purposes." When the House comes to order the bill will be read. The Chair observes that some persons admitted to the floor, not by right but by favor, are abusing the courtesy granted to them.

SMOKING IN THE HALL.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to give notice that during the remainder of the session I shall insist upon a strict enforcement of the rule against smoking anywhere in the Hall. It is exceedingly offensive to me under all circumstances. The air in this Hall is at best very impure.

The SPEAKER. It is in gross violation of the rules of the House for any gentleman to smoke in the Hall.

Mr. NIBLACK. I shall, without regard to any feeling of personal delicacy, insist upon the enforcement of the rule under all circumstances both day and night.

REGULATION OF CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The Clerk read as follows the bill as amended by the Committee on the Judiciary:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the ballots, lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers connected with any election hereafter held for Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be preserved and safely kept by the lawful custodians thereof in the several States until the adjournment of the first session of the Congress next thereafter to be affected by said election.

SEC. 2. That either party to any contest in the House of Representatives may, when there is an allegation in either the notice of contest or the answer thereto, that a portion of the ballots cast at any precinct or precincts at an election held for Representative or Delegate in Congress have been fraudulently changed previous to the count thereof, or falsely counted, have a subpœna, in accordance with the law governing contested elections, directed to said custodian, who shall produce, as required therein, the ballots, lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers connected with said election in his custody or control, and the same may, after the usual notice to the contestant or contestee, be examined and compared before any person authorized to take depositions in contested elections; and said person shall certify, under his hand and seal, and forward in the manner provided by law, said examination and comparison, and the result thereof, to be used as evidence in the case.

SEC. 3. That said ballots, lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers produced in response to said subpœna shall immediately, after the examination and comparison thereof, be returned to the lawful custodian in the same condition as when produced.

SEC. 4. That any custodian of the ballots cast at any election for Representative or Delegate to Congress who shall willfully neglect or refuse to safely keep and preserve the same, and the lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers connected therewith, or who shall willfully neglect or refuse to produce the same as required in this act, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000, to be recovered, with costs of suit, by the party at whose instance the subpœna was issued, and for his use, by an action of debt, in any court of the United States, and shall also be liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That at all elections for Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States, the vote at each election precinct shall be counted at the close of the election by the managers and officers conducting such election, in the presence of such managers and of the supervisors (if any there be) appointed under the act of Congress in such cases made and provided, whose duty it shall be to attend for that purpose; and the result of the ballot at such precinct shall be thereupon announced and made public; and any such manager, officer, or supervisor willfully neglecting or refusing to perform the duties imposed by this section shall be guilty of a crime, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than three months and not more than two years, one or both, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 6. That any person using fire-arms, or proposing or threatening to use fire-arms, or other deadly weapons offensively against individuals, or assemblages of individuals, at or near the place and on the day or days of any election of a Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States, for the purpose of intimidating or injuring such person or persons, either before or after the election, or while the same is progressing, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years, one or both, at the discretion of the court trying the same: Provided, That the open or concealed carrying of fire-arms or other deadly weapons at such election shall be taken as presumptive evidence of the intent to intimidate under this act.

SEC. 7. That whenever, in any city, town, county, or parish there shall be fifty voters thereof, who, not less than fifteen days prior to any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States, or, if there be no registration, at least fifteen days prior to any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, shall petition, in writing, to the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the circuit wherein such city, town, county, or parish shall be, to have an election precinct and voting place established at some convenient place, to be designated in said petition, it shall be the duty of the said judge of the circuit court, within not less than ten days prior to said registration, if one there be, or, if no registration be required or had, within not less than ten days prior to said election, to hear and determine said petition; and if it appear to said judge that notice of the presentation of said petition has been posted up in said city, town, county, or parish, at the place where it is proposed to establish a voting place, not less than five days prior to the presentation of the petition, and stating at what time and place said petition would be presented, and that no legal voting place exists within six miles of the place where said petitioners pray to have a voting place established, said judge shall make an order establishing an election precinct and voting place as prayed for by said petitioners, and the same shall be a legal precinct and voting place for the election of Representatives or Delegates in Congress: And provided, That in any city having less than one voting place to each six thousand of its population, or fraction thereof over six thousand, according to the then last census of the United States, said judge may establish one additional voting place for such additional six thousand, or fraction thereof, at some convenient point within not less than one-half mile of any other legal voting place: And provided further, That said judge, in establishing precincts and voting places as herein provided, and in appointing supervisors for the same, shall possess the same power and authority conferred by the act entitled "An act to amend an act approved May 31, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes,'" approved February 28, 1871, and for that purpose may sit either as a court or at chambers.

SEC. 8. That in case the registration officers appointed under the authority of any State or Territory shall refuse or neglect to give the persons entitled to vote at any precinct or voting place established under the provisions of the last preceding section an opportunity to register in the manner required by law for legal election precincts, such refusal or neglect shall not disqualify the persons entitled to register and vote at said precincts from voting.

SEC. 9. That the district courts of the United States within their respective districts and the circuit courts of the United States within their circuits, respectively, shall have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses committed against the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. That at any election for Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person to vote more than once or to cast more than one ballot for such Representative or Delegate; and any person voting more than once or casting more than one ballot, or attempting to cast more than one ballot, at such election for Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 and not more than $1,000, and may be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year and not more than three years, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 11. That upon the application in writing of ten persons who are qualified voters and residents of any congressional district in which it is desired to have supervisors of election appointed, to the circuit judge of the United States whose circuit embraces such congressional district, said judge shall appoint and designate one United States commissioner residing at some convenient place in the congressional district who shall have power to appoint supervisors of election at each voting place in the congressional district as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the United States commissioner appointed and designated by the circuit judge, as provided in the foregoing section, upon the application in writing of at least ten qualified voters, residents of any county or parish of the congressional district, to appoint two supervisors of election, who shall be qualified voters in and residents of the congressional district, for each precinct in the county or parish named in the said application as a precinct where it is sought to have supervisors of election appointed; and such supervisors so appointed by the commissioner shall take the oath of office, and shall possess the powers, perform the duties, and be liable to the penalties now provided by law for supervisors of elections of Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 13. That whenever an election at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be chosen is held in any congressional district, the marshal for the judicial district in which said congressional district, or any part thereof, is situate, shall, upon the application of ten citizens residents of any county or parish in such congressional district, appoint special deputy marshals, whose duty it shall be to aid and assist the supervisors of election in the verification of any list of persons who may have voted; to attend in each election district or voting precinct at all times for holding elections at the polls in such district or precinct; and who shall possess all the powers and perform the duties as now provided by law of such special deputies in cities or towns of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward.

SEC. 14. All laws and parts of laws contravening the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. ELDREDGE said: I observe that the Clerk does not read the sixth section of the printed bill.

The SPEAKER. That section has been stricken out in the bill presented by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN.]

Mr. ELDREDGE. How could the gentleman do that?

Mr. TREMAIN. I was directed by the committee to report the bill striking out that section in regard to furnishing intoxicating liquors to voters.

The SPEAKER. At all events, no question can be raised upon the matter, because the motion is to suspend the rules. The bill is not presented in the shape of a regular report.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I did not understand that the gentleman was instructed by the committee to report the bill with the section omitted.

Mr. TREMAIN. It is true, however; otherwise I should not have so reported it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Well, that is one of the rotten planks of the bill; I am very glad to have it out.

Mr. TREMAIN. I supposed striking out the liquor clause might induce some of my friends on the other side to vote for the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. But it would induce as many on the gentleman's side to vote against it, and therefore nothing would be gained by the gentleman's proposition.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. COX. I appeal to my honorable colleague [Mr. TREMAIN] to allow some debate on this bill. When the bill was before the House the other day——

Mr. TREMAIN. I have no power to allow debate. The rules of the House regulate that.

Mr. COX. This bill requires debate; and I hope it will not be pressed through in this way.

Mr. TREMAIN. It is a very simple bill; it does not require any debate.

Mr. COX. It is a complicated, multifarious bill; and it is a very bad bill.

Mr. TREMAIN. It is a very simple bill. It merely provides for an honest and fair election. That is all.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It provides for no such thing as an honest and fair election. It provides for the destruction of the States, and placing them utterly in the control of Federal power. It takes away all State rights.

Mr. HAYS. I object to debate.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the titles so as to read——

The SPEAKER. No debate or amendment is in order.

Mr. COX. Will my colleague [Mr. TREMAIN] hear an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Debate is objected to.

The question being on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, tellers were ordered; and Mr. TREMAIN and Mr. COX were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 78.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurring on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. ELDREDGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 102, not voting 40; as follows:

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended, and the bill was not passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DONNAN stated that he was paired with Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, who if present would vote in the negative, while he himself would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, stated that his colleague, Mr HUNTER, was absent on the business of the House.

Mr. BECK stated that his colleague, Mr. DURHAM, was absent in New York on the business of the House with the sub-Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COOK stated that his colleague, Mr. YOUNG, was absent by appointment of the Speaker at West Point.

Mr. ALBRIGHT stated that his colleague, Mr. SHOEMAKER, was absent on account of sickness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

CELEBRATION OF THE BOSTON TEA PARTY.

The SPEAKER. There comes over from yesterday a motion to suspend the rules and pass the following concurrent resolution moved by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the woman's centennial executive committee of the city of Washington have leave to occupy the Rotunda of the Capitol, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, upon the afternoon and evening of the 16th of December next, for the purpose of celebrating the destruction of tea in the harbor of Boston on the night of the 16th of December, 1773.

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] who objected to the resolution yesterday, withdraws his objection, and asks me to insert in the resolution these words: "In aid of the national centennial exhibition." I agree to it, as that really is the object of the resolution.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the concurrent resolution was passed.

BOZEMAN LAND DISTRICT IN THE TERRITORY OF MONTANA.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 3740) to create the Bozeman land district in the Territory of Montana.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that all that portion of the Territory of Montana lying east of the range line between ranges two and three west of the principal meridian and south of the first standard parallel north of the base line of the public-land surveys of said Territory shall be constituted a separate land district, to be known as the Bozeman land district, the office of which shall be located at Bozeman, but may be changed from time to time, by the direction of the President of the United States, as the interests of the public service may require.

The second section provides that the President shall appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver of the public moneys of the United States for said district; and said officers shall reside in the place where the land office is located, and they shall have the same powers and perform the same duties and receive the same emoluments as are or may be prescribed by law in relation to land officers of the United States in other Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this bill come from any committee?

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes; it is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Public Lands.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded. The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. WOODFORD. I move to suspend the rules and pass the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to negotiate with all civilized powers who may be willing to enter into such negotiation for the establishment of an international system whereby matters in dispute between different governments agreeing thereto may be adjusted by arbitration, and if possible without recourse to war.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think we had better first decide the Geneva award matter.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the concurrent resolution was passed.

SHIP ALHAMBRA.

Mr. HOOPER. In behalf of the Committee on Commerce I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill (H. R. No. 3741) to authorize the issue of an American register to the ship Alhambra.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the British ship Alhambra, built in Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, in 1859.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE OVER WILLAMETTE RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. CONGER. In behalf of the Committee on Commerce I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. No. 482) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Salem, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that it shall be lawful for the county commissioners of the county of Marion, in the State of Oregon, or for the said commissioners jointly with the county commissioners of the county of Polk, in said State, to build a bridge across the Willamette River at the city of Salem, in said county of Marion, at a point to be selected and determined by the said board of commissioners of Marion County, or by said board jointly with the board of commissioners of Polk County aforesaid; provided that there shall be placed in said bridge a draw of not less than two hundred feet in width, with a center abutment not to exceed forty feet wide, and ten feet above the water-line, leaving a passage on each side of the abutment of not less than eighty feet in width, and so constructed as not to impede the navigation of said river and allow the easy passage of vessels through said bridge.

The second section provides that the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge is hereby expressly reserved, but any change needful to that end shall be made at the expense of the counties in which such bridge shall be located.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

TITLE TO LANDS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the Committee on the Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3584) to grant title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona, and that the same be passed.

The bill was read.

The preamble recites that certain lands in Santa Cruz Valley, county of Pima, and Territory of Arizona, have for many years been occupied and possessed by persons of Mexican birth, who became citizens of the United States under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty; and that said persons desire to secure patents for said lands in the small and irregular tracts in which they were originally taken up under Mexican authority, and have been held and cultivated to the present time, and they cannot do so under the existing land laws of the United States.

The bill therefore provides that all the right and title of the United States to the land embraced in sections 2, 11, and 14, and the east half of sections 3, 10, and 15, of township 14 south, range 13 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, in the county of Pima, Territory of Arizona, be, and the same are thereby, relinquished and granted to the person or persons who have been in the actual bona fide occupancy or possession of said land, by themselves or their ancestors, for twenty years next preceding the date of the passage of the act; and it shall be the duty of the register and the receiver of the United States land-office for the district in which said land lies, to hear and determine, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the rights of the parties claiming under the act; and for that purpose the said register and the said receiver shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and take testimony relative to such occupancy or possession, provided that no claim as aforesaid shall be of any validity under the act unless it shall have been duly filed with the said register and the said receiver within one year after the passage of the act; and provided further, that the grant shall not extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to said land, or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

The second section provides that whenever it shall have been determined by the said register and the said receiver, or on appeal by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or Secretary of the Interior, that any tract has been occupied as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general for said Territory to cause the said claims to be surveyed in accordance with the lines of such occupancy, and to furnish approved plats of the same, upon the receipt and approval of which said plats, and the field notes thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, patents shall issue as in other cases.

The third section provides that any part or parts of said designated lands that are not shown, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to have been so occupied for twenty years, shall be held by him as open to settlement under the provisions of the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and patents may be issued therefor for any number of acres not exceeding one hundred and sixty that parties complying with said legal provisions may desire to hold, provided that all existing occupants who have settled on said lands for a period of less than twenty years shall have the prior right to acquire the same under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask unanimous consent, before the vote is taken, to perfect the bill by adding after the word "ancestors," in line 10, section 1, the words "or grantors;" and in line 10, section 3, after the word "lands," by striking out "for" and inserting "within."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, those amendments will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit a motion to strike out in the last line of the bill the words "pre-emption or?" I hope there will be some explanation of the necessity for this bill.

Mr. CLYMER. If the House will bear with me for a moment I will explain the object of the bill. At the making of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty there was in this valley of Arizona a little settlement around the village of Tucson, composed of persons of Mexican and Spanish birth, who for nearly a hundred years had occupied small and irregular strips of land of from three to fifty acres in extent and marked off by no regular metes and bounds, and they and their descendants have lived there ever since. Their titles originally accrued to them under the orders of Mexican military officers, and since our occupation of the country these people have no evidence of title save that arising from occupancy. It is a subject of great disquietude to them that they cannot point to any authority under which they hold these lands. It was therefore thought proper by the Committee on the Public Lands, after careful examination, that this bill should be passed. The whole quantity of the lands embraced in this bill does not amount to more than three or four sections, and the claims do not cover the whole of the sections specified. The Committee on the Public Lands were unanimous in their approval of the bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, the orignal draught of this bill was prepared in Arizona and handed me at a mass meeting of the citizens at the capital. I was earnestly requested to urge its passage by Congress as an act of simple justice.

It is intended to give title to about four sections of land which for long years have been in possession of persons of Mexican birth. Under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty, these persons, or their descendants, became citizens of the United States, and they are good citizens, of the class described in the recent able speech of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ELKINS] as "loyal, law-abiding, peaceable, well-disposed, and wedded to our institutions."

The lands in question were originally taken up in small and irregular tracts under permits from the Mexican authorities, and have been steadily held and cultivated by these people, who are anxious to have Government title to them in the precise form in which they have been occupied, and in no other. In some instances the tracts embrace not more than five acres—no tract I think embraces over fifty acres—and as it was understood by the Mexican population of Arizona, then a part of New Mexico, that they should have a full and complete title to their lands, as held prior to the making of the treaties referred to, I trust the reasonable propositions of this bill will be agreed to by the House.

The bill as it is now has the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Public Lands and also the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as shown in the letter I send to the Clerk's desk.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1874.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive from you a copy of House bill No. 3584, entitled "A bill to grant title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona," and in reply I have to say that after a careful examination it appears to be such a bill as will, without injury to the United States, satisfactorily protect a class of claimants entitled to relief, and it is therefore approved by this office.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. R. C. McCORMICK,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] agree to the words "pre-emption or" being stricken out?

Mr. CLYMER. I agree to that.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to, and the rules were suspended (two-thirds voting therefor) and the bill passed.

NELSON GREEN.

Mr. DANFORD. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3611) for the relief of Nelson Green, and that the same be passed.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Postmaster-General to release Nelson Green, of Bay City, Michigan, a mail contractor on mail-routes numbered 24366, being from Granton to Au Sable, and 24357, from Alpena to Au Sable, in said State of Michigan, from the performance of said service.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

RESTORATION OF LANDS TO HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the Committee on the Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 420) to amend the act entitled "An act for the restoration to homestead entry and to market of certain lands in Michigan," approved June 10, 1872, and for other purposes, and that the same be passed with an amendment.

The bill, which was read, so amends the act approved June 10, 1872, entitled "An act for the restoration to market of certain lands in Michigan," as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause patents to be issued to three hundred and twenty members of the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan, for the selections found to have been made by them, but which were not, prior to the passage of said act, regularly reported and recognized by the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and the remainder of said lands not disposed of, and not valuable mainly for pine timber, shall be subject to entry under the homestead laws, for one year from the passage of the act; and the lands remaining thereafter undisposed of shall be restored to market.

The bill in its second section provides that all Indians who have settled upon and made improvements on section 10, in township 47 north, of range 2 east, and section 4, in township 47 north, of range 3 west, Michigan, shall be permitted to enter not exceeding eighty acres each, at the minimum price of land, upon making proof of such settlement and improvement before the register of the land office at Marquette, Michigan; and when said entries shall have been completed in accordance herewith, the remaining lands embraced within the limits of said sections shall be restored to market.

The bill in its third section provides that all actual, permanent, bona fide settlers on any of the lands reserved for Indian purposes under the treaty with the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan of July 31, 1855, shall be entitled to enter not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres of land, either under the homestead laws or to pay the minimum price of land, on making proof of his or her settlement and continued residence before the expiration of ninety days from the passage of the act; provided that such settlers do not claim any of the lands heretofore patented to Indians, or in conflict with the selections found to have been made by Indians referred to in the first section of the act, and shall have settled upon said lands prior to the 1st day of January, 1874.

Mr. BRADLEY. The amendment which is included in my motion is as follows:

At the end of section 1 strike out the words "restored to market" and insert the words "offered for sale at a price not less than $2.50 per acre."

Mr. CLYMER. I desire also to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] desires to submit an amendment. I have agreed to yield to him that the matter may be considered in the House, after an explanation on each side. I ask unanimous consent that a few minutes be granted to explain the nature of the bill and the amendment—five minutes on each side.

Mr. BECK. What is the motion now pending?

The SPEAKER. It is that the rules be suspended and that this Senate bill pass with an amendment.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman not consent to change his motion to a suspension of the rules, so as to bring the bill before the House for consideration? If that is done he can then explain it.

Mr. BRADLEY. I am willing to modify the motion in that way.

The SPEAKER. At two o'clock the House, in pursuance of notice given yesterday, will proceed to consider the report of the Joint Select Committee of Investigation into the Affairs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not think this bill will occupy the House for more than a few moments. The matter is a simple one, and can be easily understood.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Upon suspending the rules so as to bring the bill before the House for consideration tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRADLEY and Mr. CLYMER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 73; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order but a call of the House or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn, and I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 12 members voting therefor.

The question was put, and the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question was put, and on a division there were—ayes 35, noes 92; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain any business whatever until a quorum is present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for tellers on my motion for a call of the House.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCOFIELD and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 108.

So the motion for a call of the House was not agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I withdraw the demand for a further count on my motion to suspend the rules.

So (two thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

ARKANSAS VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the rules be suspended so as to put upon its passage the bill (H. R. No. 2884) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Arkansas Valley Railway Company.

I will state that this bill is recommended by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad and also by the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill was read. It grants the right of way through the public lands to the Arkansas Valley Railway Company, a corporation duly created under the laws of the Territory of Colorado, its successors and assigns, for a railroad and telegraph line, now partially completed and in operation from a point on the line of the Kansas Pacific Railway at Kit Carson; thence southward to West Las Animas; thence westward along or near the Arkansas River to Pueblo, a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles, and within said Territory of Colorado. Said right of way is granted to said railway company to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass through the public domain and military reservation at Fort Lyon, including grounds for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, cattle-yards, and water-stations, to the amount not exceeding ten acres, not mineral lands, for each station, and for not more than one station in every ten miles; together with the right to take from the public lands while belonging to the United States, adjacent to said right of way, stone, timber, earth, and other material necessary for the construction, maintenance, and repair of its railway and telegraph. It provides that within six months from the passage of this act the said Arkansas Valley Railway Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map, to be approved by him, exhibiting the line of the railroad of said company as the same has been located; that the right of way across the military reservation at Fort Lyon, and the depot grounds thereon, shall be located and set aside under the direction of the Secretary of War; and that this grant of the right of way shall not prevent any railroad company from crossing said Arkansas Valley Railway Company at grade.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the word "timber" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. WELLS. I have no objection to that, and will modify the bill in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that the words "other material necessary for the construction and maintenance and repair of its railway and telegraph" should be stricken out. There is no limit as to the time within which they may take the material. It would be a perpetual franchise granted to the corporation to use timber and other materials.

Mr. WELLS. There is no material used excepting the soil which they build the track over. I ask that a letter of the Secretary of War, which will explain this bill, may be read.

Mr. KASSON. I want my amendment in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Missouri has modified the bill by striking out the word "timber."

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust some explanation of the bill will be made.

Mr. WELLS. The letter of the Secretary of War will explain it.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, February 28, 1874.

The Secretary of War has the honor to report to the House of Representatives, for the information of the sub-Committee on the Pacific Railroad, in reply to letter of the chairman of said committee of the 26th instant, that, so far as this Department is informed, there is no objection to the passage of the second section of House bill No. 750, granting the right of way over the Fort Lyon military reservation, Colorado Territory, to the Arkansas Valley Railway Company, provided it is restricted to the width stated in the first section of said bill, and that the additional ground granted for depot and other railway purposes shall not exceed ten acres.

In this connection it is proper to add that it is understood that the Arkansas Valley Railway Company is identical with the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, which latter company has already received permission to lay its rails across the said reserve, with condition that the rails must be removed and track abandoned if right of way is not given at the present session of Congress.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WELLS. This bill has been before the Committee on the Public Lands, and they have unanimously recommended its passage and so have the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was then taken, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. LAMPORT. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Agriculture the bill (H. R. No. 2650) to amend the act entitled "An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad or other means of transportation within the United States," approved March 3, 1873.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

Mr. LAMPORT. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

On seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAMPORT and Mr. NEGLEY were appointed.

Mr. KASSON. I hope consent will be given to the gentleman from New York to explain the bill. Let him have five minutes.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. There is not time. It is nearly two o'clock now.

Mr. SYPHER. This is too important a bill to be passed without consideration.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 37, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio railroad to construct a branch and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 954) prohibiting the publication of the revised statutes of the United States in the newspapers at the expense of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 797) to amend an act in relation to the survey of certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company;

A bill (S. No. 382) for the relief of William L. Adams, late collector of customs at Astoria, Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 878) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys; and PUBLICATION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which has just come from the Senate prohibiting the publication of the revised statutes of the United States in the newspapers at the expense of the United States. I will say in explanation of my request, and in justification of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, that the bill which we sent to the Senate contained just this provision. But they turned the whole thing into a new bill, adopted an entire substitute, and left out the most important part. I ask that the bill be now taken up and passed.

No objection was made, and the bill (S. No. 954) was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the revised statutes of the United States and no part thereof shall be published in the newspapers at the expense of the United States.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. In pursuance of previous notice I now report back with amendments, from the Select Committee to Inquire into the Affairs of the District of Columbia, a bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all provisions of law providing for an executive, for a secretary for the District, for a Legislative Assembly, for a board of public works, and for a Delegate in Congress in the District of Columbia are hereby repealed: Provided, That this repeal shall not affect the term of office of the present Delegate in Congress.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three persons, who shall, until otherwise provided by law, exercise all the power and authority now lawfully vested in the governor or board of public works of said District, except as hereinafter limited; and shall be subject to all the restrictions and limitations now imposed by law on said governor or board; and shall have power to apply the taxes or other revenues of said District to the payment of the current expenses thereof, to the support of the public schools, the fire department and the police, and to the payment of the debts of said District secured by a pledge of the securities of said District or board of public works as collateral, and also to the payment of debts due to laborers and employés of the District and board of public works; and for that purpose shall take possession and supervision of all the offices, books, papers, records, moneys, credits, securities, assets, and accounts belonging or appertaining to the business or interests of the government of the District of Columbia and the board of public works, and exercise the power and authority aforesaid; but said commission, in the exercise of such power or authority, shall make no contract, nor incur any obligation other than such contracts and obligations as may be necessary to the faithful administration of the valid laws enacted for the government of said District, to the execution of existing legal obligations and contracts, and the protection or preservation of improvements existing, or commenced and not completed, at the time of the passage of this act. All taxes heretofore lawfully assessed and due or to become due shall be collected pursuant to law, except as herein otherwise provided; but said commissioners shall have no power to anticipate taxes by a sale or hypothecation of any such taxes, or evidence thereof: Provided, That nothing in this clause contained shall affect any provisions of law authorizing or requiring a deposit of certificates of assessment with the sinking-fund commissioners of said District; and said commissioners are hereby authorized to abolish any office, to consolidate two or more offices, reduce the number of employés, remove from office, and make appointments to any office authorized by law; and the compensation of all officers and employés, except teachers in the public schools and officers and employés in the fire department, shall be reduced 20 per cent. per annum. Said commissioners shall each, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law; and shall each give bond in the penal sum of $50,000, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office; and shall each receive for his services a compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to abate or in any wise interfere with any suit pending in favor of or against the District of Columbia: And provided further, That in suits hereafter commenced against the District of Columbia, process may be served on any one of said commissioners, until otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States shall detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, who shall, subject to the general supervision and direction of the said board of commissioners, have the control and charge of the work of repair and improvement of all streets, avenues, alleys, sewers, roads, and bridges of the District of Columbia; and he is hereby vested with all the power and authority of, and shall perform the duties heretofore devolved upon, the chief engineer of the board of public works. He shall take possession of, and preserve and keep, all the instruments pertaining to said office, and all the maps, charts, surveys, books, records, and papers relating to said District, or to any of the avenues, streets, alleys, public spaces, squares, lots and buildings thereon, sewers, or any of them, as are now in or belonging to the office of said engineer of the board of public works, and shall, in books provided for that purpose, keep and preserve the records now required to be kept, and such as may be required by regulations of said board. He may, with the advice and consent of said board of commissioners, appoint not more than two assistant engineers from civil life, who shall each receive a salary of $1,800 per annum, and shall be subject to his direction and control. He shall receive no additional compensation for such services. And he shall not be deemed by reason of anything in this act contained to hold a civil office under the laws of the United States. And no salary or compensation shall be paid to the surveyor of the District, or any of his subordinates, except such fees for special services as are allowed by law. And the offices of assistant surveyor and additional assistant surveyor of the District of Columbia are hereby abolished.

SEC. 4. That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and maintaining the credit thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, there shall be levied upon all real estate in said District, except that belonging to the United States and to the District of Columbia, and that used for educational and charitable purposes, the following taxes, namely: Upon all such real estate in the city of Washington, three dollars on each one hundred dollars of the present assessed value thereof; upon all such real estate in the city of Georgetown, two dollars and fifty cents on each one hundred dollars of the present assessed value thereof; and upon all such real estate in the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, two dollars on each one hundred dollars of the present assessed value thereof; which said taxes shall become due and payable on the 1st day of November, 1874, and, if not paid, shall be in arrears and delinquent from that date; and shall, except as herein modified, be assessed and collected as now provided by law for the assessment and collection of general taxes for the District of Columbia; and of the sums so collected, one-fourth thereof shall be applied, first, to reimburse the United States for its advances on account of interest, which shall have been paid by the United States on the funded debt of the District of Columbia and Washington and Georgetown, due and payable July 1, 1874; and the remainder shall be used to pay deficiencies in the various funds for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874. And all the remainder of said taxes not required for the aforesaid purposes shall be distributed for the purposes and in the proportions provided by the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved June 26, 1873, entitled "An act imposing taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874," so far as said apportionment is not inconsistent with this act: Provided, That no evidence of debt issued by the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, or by the board of public works, shall in any manner be received in payment for said taxes: And provided further, That no payment shall be made on account of the militia of said District, or for the purpose of erecting a District jail. Upon all payments of said taxes hereby imposed which shall be made in advance of the said 1st day of November, 1874, there shall be an abatement allowed of 1 per cent. per month for each and every month so paid in advance; and that upon all said taxes which shall be delinquent and unpaid on said 1st day of November, there shall be added a penalty of 1 per cent. to the amount thereof, to be collected with such taxes; and a like penalty of 1 per cent. upon the amount thereof shall be added on the first day of each succeeding month to all of said taxes as are then delinquent and unpaid, to be collected as aforesaid. It shall be the duty of the collector of taxes to prepare a complete list of all taxes and property upon which the same are assessed in arrears on the 1st day of March next, and shall, within ten days thereafter, publish the same, with the notice of sale, in a newspaper published in said District, to be designated by said board of commissioners, for the time and in the manner required by the provisions of the act of the Legislative Assembly entitled "An act prescribing the duties of certain officers for the District of Columbia, and fixing their compensation," approved August 23, 1871. And all the provisions of said act as to the sale of property and the collection of taxes in arrears are hereby made applicable to the taxes hereby imposed and in arrears as aforesaid, except that the deed conveying the property so sold shall be executed by the said board of commissioners instead of the governor and the secretary.

Sec. 5. That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of two Senators, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and two members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare a suitable frame of government for the District of Columbia and appropriate draughts of statutes to be enacted by Congress for carrying the same into effect, and report the same to the two Houses, respectively, on the first day of the next session thereof; and they shall also prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of said government, or any branch thereof, including interest on its funded debt, which should be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based; and in the discharge of the duty hereby imposed said committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may deem advisable, at an expense not to exceed the sum of $5,000; and said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the First Comptroller of the Treasury and the Second Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, who are hereby constituted a board of audit, to examine and audit for settlement all the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia and of the board of public works, hereinafter specified, namely: first, the debt evidenced by sewer certificates; secondly, the debt purporting to be evidenced and ascertained by certificates of the auditor of the board of public works; thirdly, the debt evidenced by the certificates of the auditor and the comptroller of the District of Columbia; fourthly, claims existing or hereafter created for which no evidence of indebtedness has been issued, arising out of contracts, written or oral, made by the board of public works; fifthly, claims, for which no evidence of indebtedness has been issued, arising out of contracts, written or oral, made by or on behalf of the District of Columbia; sixthly, all claims for private property taken by the board of public works from the avenues, streets, and alleys of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and, seventhly, all unadjusted claims for damages that may have been presented to the board of public works, pursuant to an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, entitled "An act providing for the payment of damages sustained by reason of public improvements or repairs," approved June 20, 1872, which last-named claims shall severally be examined and audited without regard to any examination heretofore made; and shall make a detailed and tabular statement of all claims presented, the persons or corporations owning the same, and the amount found to be due on account of each; together with a tabular statement of the funded debt of the District of Columbia and of the cities of Washington and Georgetown of every kind and character whatsoever, giving the date of issue, time of maturity, and the rate of interest. And it shall further be the duty of said board to ascertain the amount of sewer tax or assessment paid by any person, persons, or corporation, under the act of the Legislative Assembly of said District, entitled "An act creating drainage and sewerage sections in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and providing for the payment of the construction of sewers and drains therein by assessments and issuing certificates therefor," approved the 26th day of June, 1873, and to prepare a tabulated statement thereof. Said board of audit shall also issue to each claimant a certificate, signed by each of said board and countersigned by the comptroller of said District, stating the amount found to be due to each and on what account; and a register thereof shall be kept by said board, to be transmitted to Congress, and also by the comptroller of said District; and said board of audit shall also ascertain and report to Congress, at the next session thereof, the amount equitably chargeable to the street railroad companies on account of paving along and within the tracks of said companies, pursuant to the charters of said companies or the acts of Congress relating thereto, together with their reasons therefor. It shall further be the duty of said board of audit to examine into and audit all of the accounts of the auditor and of the treasurer of the board of public works, and of the auditor, the treasurer, the collector, and the comptroller of the District of Columbia, from the date of the organization of said board and of the present government of said District; and for the purposes hereinbefore specified shall have the power to subpœna witnesses, administer oaths, and examine witnesses under oath, and shall have full access to all of the records, books, papers, and vouchers of every kind whatsoever of the board of public works and of the District of Columbia; and to the end that said books and accounts may be thoroughly examined, and the indebtedness of said District, and of the board of public works, and the state of the books and accounts of each of the officers aforesaid, may be accurately ascertained, shall employ one or more skillful and impartial accountants non-resident of the District of Columbia, and such other assistants as they may deem necessary, to make examination of said books, vouchers, and papers, and discharge their other duties under this act, and shall procure inspection of such bank-books and papers as may be necessary; and they are hereby authorized to pay for the services of such accountant or accountants and assistants such sums as they may deem proper. And said accountant or accountants shall take an oath to faithfully discharge the duties imposed by this act. Said board of audit shall give notice for the presentation of the claims hereinbefore specified in such manner as may be deemed necessary; and no claim shall be audited or allowed unless presented within ninety days after the first publication of such notice. Each of the said officers constituting said board shall be paid the sum of $2,000 for his services under this act, out of the funds of said District, in addition to his present compensation.

SEC. 7. That the sinking-fund commissioners of said District are hereby continued; and it shall be the duty of said sinking-fund commissioners to cause bonds of the District of Columbia to be prepared, in sums of fifty and five hundred dollars, bearing date August 1, 1874, payable fifty years after date, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, to be signed by the secretary of said sinking-fund commissioners and countersigned by the comptroller of said District, and sealed as the board may direct; which bonds shall be exempt from taxation by Federal, State, or municipal authority, engraved and printed at the expense of the District of Columbia, and in form not inconsistent herewith. And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity. Said bonds shall be numbered consecutively, and registered in the office of the comptroller of said District, and shall also be registered in the office of the Register of the Treasury of the United States, for which last-named registration the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such provision as may be necessary. And said commissioners shall use all necessary means for the prevention of any unauthorized or fraudulent issue of any of such bonds. And the said sinking-fund commissioners are hereby authorized to exchange said bonds at par for like sums of any class of indebtedness in the preceding section of this act named, including sewer taxes or assessments paid, evidenced by certificates of the auditing board provided for in this act.

SEC. 8. That the authority conferred on the board of public works to issue additional certificates of indebtedness by section 4 of the act of the Legislative Assembly, approved on the 29th day of May, 1873, is hereby annulled. No property shall be advertised for sale or sold for the collection of any assessment authorized by the Legislative Assembly by the act entitled "An act creating drainage and sewerage sections in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and providing for the payment of the construction of sewers and drains therein by assessments and issuing certificates therefor," approved on the 26th day of June, 1873, until otherwise ordered by Congress; and it shall be unlawful to issue any further certificates of indebtedness authorized by said act.

SEC. 9. That no board or commission of which the governor is ex officio a member (the board of public works excepted) shall be abolished by this act, but the members of the same, other than the governor, shall constitute such board or commission.

SEC. 10. That the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, entitled "An act to fund unsettled liabilities of the city of Washington, and providing for the issuing of the bonds, and levying and collecting taxes to pay the same," approved June 20, 1872, is hereby ratified and approved; but none of the bonds authorized by said act remaining unsold shall be negotiated or sold at less than par.

The amendments reported from the committee were to section 6 of the bill, to make the latter portion of the section read as follows:

To make examination of said books, vouchers, and papers, and discharge their other duties under this act, and shall procure inspection of such bank books and papers as may be necessary; and they are hereby authorized to allow for the services of such accountant or accountants and assistants such sums as they may deem proper, which shall be paid by the board of commissioners out of the revenues of said District. And said accountant or accountants shall take an oath to faithfully discharge the duties imposed by this act. Said board of audit shall give notice for the presentation of the claims hereinbefore specified in such manner as may be deemed necessary; and no claim shall be audited or allowed unless presented within ninety days after the first publication of such notice. And said board shall make full report of all their acts and proceedings to the President, to be by him transmitted to Congress the first day of the next session thereof, &c.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I now move to recommit the bill.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will not the gentleman allow an amendment to be offered?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I regret to say that I do not feel at liberty, under the circumstances, to allow any amendment to be offered to the bill.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will you allow the amendment to be read?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would prefer not; at least not now.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. In section 4 of this bill it is provided that "there shall be levied upon all real estate in said District, except that belonging to the United States and to the District of Columbia, and that used for educational and charitable purposes, the following taxes." If the gentleman can give any good reason why personal property in this District should not be placed on the same basis as real estate, then I will not propose to offer an amendment. But unless that shall be done, I shall certainly insist upon my right to offer an amendment to put personal property on the same basis with real estate.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is the proposition I desired to offer.

Mr. SMALL. And so did I.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. A number of members have asked me in regard to that matter. The committee have had the subject under consideration, and my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BASS,] will explain to the House, in a few minutes, everything in connection with this question of taxation. Inasmuch as that is a branch of this bill which has been committed to his care, by the arrangement between us, I shall leave him to answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] rather than to proceed to answer it myself.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Allow my amendment to be proposed and the House to act upon it.

Mr. MYERS. I understand the report recommends an appropriation for the laborers of the District. I would like to hear from the gentleman what is done in that regard.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I hope I may be permitted to proceed without being plied with questions before I begin. I purpose, as briefly as I can, to call the attention of the House to the various provisions of this bill, with the exception of the one to which I have already alluded, relating to taxation.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I want to know if the motion to recommit is pending, and cuts off all amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I made the motion to recommit for the purpose of cutting off all amendments. I do not desire to disguise my intention at all. I do not feel that under the circumstances I am at liberty to allow any amendment to be offered.

Mr. FORT. I rise to a question of order. Must not this bill be first considered in Committee of the Whole? If so, then what right has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] to enter a motion to recommit to cut off all amendments?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. If that point of order is made and sustained by the Chair, then I must move a suspension of the rules to bring the bill before the House for consideration.

Mr. FORT. I insist upon the point of order. It is not a proper thing for a committee to bring in a bill and not allow any amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SAWYER.) The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair understands that this committee had the right to report this bill at any time for consideration in the House.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The gentleman from Indiana honestly and candidly says that he entered the motion to recommit to cut off all amendments. It may not be necessary to offer any, and after the bill has been discussed we may be entirely satisfied with it. But in what way, I will ask the Chair, can the bill be amended if it shall be deemed necessary?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. POTTER.) When the gentleman from Indiana shall have concluded his remarks or have yielded the floor, the question will come up on the motion to recommit, or, if that be withdrawn, upon such other motion as the gentleman may make. And it will be for the House to determine what action to take upon it.

Mr. FORT. I made my point of order before the discussion began upon this bill. My point was, that under the rules the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. I was answered by the Chair that there was some order relating to the bill giving it certain special privileges. Now I demand to hear that order read, so that we may know exactly what it provides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal clerk will proceed to find the order. In the mean time the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FORT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to yield the point I have made against this bill, that it should go to the Committee of the Whole, where there may be full opportunity for amendment and discussion.

The SPEAKER. The order will be found as soon as possible. In the mean time the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] will occupy the floor.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I do not quite understand from the Chair by what means any amendment to this bill could be brought before the House in case the motion to recommit should be sustained. The amendments I wish to offer I hope to sustain by sound reasons. They go to the very existence of our District.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to recommit should be sustained, of course the bill would not be before the House. The presumption is that in this case, as is usual in such cases, the gentleman from Indiana has interposed the motion to recommit in order to hold control of the bill against amendments. Should the previous question be called without withdrawing the motion to recommit, the question would first be upon that motion; and that being negatived, the previous question would not exhaust itself until the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he will allow, before the previous question is called, any discussion by gentlemen other than members of the committee?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have no desire at all to prevent discussion upon this bill. If it is desired that it shall be discussed I am certainly willing to allow the utmost latitude in that respect. I say very frankly to the gentleman that the course I had designed to pursue was, after I had made a statement as to the character of this bill and the reasons that have influenced the committee in its preparation, to withdraw the motion to recommit, and then move the previous question, leaving the matter within the control of the House.

Mr. BECK. I only desire that there shall be an amendment of section 4, so as to reduce the proposed rate of taxation from 3 per cent. to 2 in the city of Washington; from 2½ per cent. to 1½ in Georgetown; and to fix 1 per cent. as the rate for the District outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown. I would provide further that the United States should wait for its proportion of the money to be raised by taxation. It seems to me that the rate of taxation proposed in the bill would amount to a confiscation of the property of the residents here. I wish to get that amendment in if I can.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. If the gentleman from Kentucky knew exactly the financial condition of this District he would find the committee has not imposed any more taxation than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BECK. I wish only to take one-sixth instead of one-fourth.

Mr. FORT. My friend from Missouri wishes to amend the bill so as to make personal property taxable. There are railroad companies, banks, and other corporations in this District which are not taxed at all under this bill, while the personal property of my constituents is taxed in order to support this city. We want an opportunity to make amendment in that regard. If I have an opportunity I will move such an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I suppose the point of order is still pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is holding it up, as the gentleman from Illinois demands that the order of the House shall be read.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. My time is not running, I suppose.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. LAMISON. I find by section 4 of this bill there are three rates of taxation fixed by it; that is, three dollars for the city of Washington, two and a half dollars for the city of Georgetown, and two dollars for the county. I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to this fact, so he may explain to the House why this discrimination should be made, and why there should not be adopted some uniform system of taxation.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I think my friend from New York [Mr. BASS] will make that perfectly plain when he comes to discuss this bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will not the gentleman from Indiana allow my amendment to be read by the Clerk?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Not now.

Mr. CHIPMAN. This District government should not be destroyed and the people given over bound hand and foot without some chance of righting themselves. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow my amendment to be read? My amendment relates to allowing the people to elect one of the commissioners, to reducing the tax as it now is, and to fix the interest at a rate to secure us a par bond, and to make the laborers and employés preferred creditors in the payment of our liabilities.

Mr. SPEER. Does not this bill really release this District of Columbia from the bonds in which it now is?

Mr. CHIPMAN. No; I understand it rivets the bonds, and I will show that to be true if I have an opportunity.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CHIPMAN. No; gentlemen are mistaken, as I will show if I have an opportunity.

Mr. O'NEILL. Does this not change the rate of interest on some of the bonds?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Journal of May 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. JEREMIAH M. WILSON, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, ordered—

That the joint select committee ordered to investigate the condition of affairs in the District of Columbia be allowed to report at any time for consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER. This bill is properly before the House for consideration.

Mr. FORT. I only wish to say the gentleman from Indiana in good faith ought not to come in here under such an arrangement and insist upon this bill being considered without allowing any amendment to be offered to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. This is entirely within the control of the House.

Mr. FORT. It is not acting in good faith to the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. It is acting in perfect good faith.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Does not that resolution simply bring the bill before the House for consideration, and has the gentleman from Indiana any right to enter a motion to recommit to cut off amendments?

The SPEAKER. The rules leave the matter wholly and entirely within the control of a majority of the House. If the gentleman from Indiana should demand the previous question and the House should refuse to second it the bill will then be open to amendment, but amendments will be cut off, as a matter of course, if the House should second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. After having explained the provisions of this bill I propose to withdraw the motion to recommit and to demand the previous question. If the House thinks it is better the bill should be amended they can vote down the previous question. As a matter of course, the House has the entire control of the matter. I do not wish to take any advantage of any gentleman or do anything unfair in regard to this bill.

Mr. FORT. This looks like it.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have no interest in the matter except to get a bill passed through the House which will meet the necessities of the District of Columbia at this time.

Mr. FORT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order to move to suspend the rules in order to allow amendments to be in order to this bill?

The SPEAKER. That will require a two-thirds vote, whereas the gentleman can accomplish his purpose by a majority vote.

Mr. FORT. By voting down the previous question?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The gentleman from Indiana has put himself at a disadvantage by moving to suspend the rules, which requires a two-thirds vote, whereas he can accomplish his purpose by a majority vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. If gentlemen will put their amendments in writing I will consent to have them read after I get through.

Mr. FORT. Have them read now.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. No; wait awhile.

Mr. FORT. Let them be read now, so they may be considered by the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The committee which has had in charge the investigation of matters out of which this bill has arisen have given this whole subject their most careful attention. The whole matter is exceedingly complicated, and we have encountered great difficulties on every hand. We have considered, I think, all of the questions that have arisen, looking at them from every conceivable stand-point, or at any rate from every stand-point which occurred to us, and we have done on this subject the very best we could and have put it in the form of this bill. There is no member of this committee, I apprehend, who has any interest whatever in passing a bill here which shall not meet the immediate and future wants of this city and this District. And I may say that the committee are united in recommending the passage of this bill, and united also in regard to the matters which are discussed in the report submitted with the bill.

It is not surprising that in a matter of this kind, in an investigation which involved the taking of over twenty-five hundred pages of printed testimony, there should be found many questions of fact with reference to which differences of opinion would arise. There are such in this case, and as it was not possible to review the testimony and discuss disputed points, and as the assertion of a conviction without such a review would be of little avail other perhaps than to strengthen and intensify opinions already formed, the committee under the circumstances of this case regarded it as very important to pass this bill at this session, and to avoid as far as possible the presentation of points in the report upon which an agreement could not be had, and which would only provoke discussion and cause delay.

Now, as to the question whether in the expenditure of the millions of dollars of public money that have been expended in the last three years and the disposition of the millions of dollars of securities that have been disposed of in this District during the last three years in the loose, irregular, and unlawful manner in which the evidence and the report show that this has been done, whether or not under these circumstances any of those who participated in this business appropriated any of these moneys fraudulently to their own use, whoever looks at the evidence and the surrounding circumstances will form his own conclusions, and time probably will test the accuracy of those conclusions, for it is said that "time at last makes all things even."

But leaving all of these questions entirely out of view, I will say that there is no difference of opinion among the committee as to the necessity for a change in the management of the affairs of this District. The law prohibited the creation of a debt exceeding $10,000,000. It prohibited the making of contracts except in pursuance of appropriations and until the appropriotions were made. That provision will be found in the thirty-seventh section of the organic act of this District under which the present District government is now being carried on. The board of public works submitted to the District Legislature a plan of permanent improvements which was estimated to cost $6,538,397, including a system of sewers, and asked for an appropriation, which was granted to the extent of $4,000,000, and to raise the money bonds payable in twenty years were provided to be issued. But the District Legislative Assembly incorporated in the bill making that appropriation of $4,000,000 a proviso that the board of public works should not enter into any contract to exceed the amount of the estimate that was submitted by the board to the Legislative Assembly, less 20 per cent. of the estimated cost.

Now, here were three prohibitions upon this board of public works. In the first place it was provided that the debt of this District should not go beyond $10,000,000; in the second place, Congress had provided by this thirty-seventh section of the organic act that contracts should be made only in pursuance of appropriations and not until appropriations had been made; then, in the third place, the District Legislature had provided—

That in no case shall the said board enter into a contract for any work or improvement the cost of which shall exceed the amount estimated therefor in its aforesaid plan, less 20 per cent. of said estimates.

Now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all this, contracts were made $12,000,000 at least in excess of the estimates to which they were limited, less 20 per cent., and certainly three times the amount of the appropriations which had been made and which were available to the board as the basis upon which to make contracts.

Then, again, the House will remember, or at all events many gentlemen will remember, that on the 8th day of January, 1873, an appropriation was made by Congress of $1,240,000, (and that appropriation, drawn from the Treasury three days after the appropriation was made, was all paid on debts within a week after it was so drawn.) Congress by that act prohibited the making of any contract which should be obligatory upon Congress until after the appropriation had been made. And yet when this Congress is about to convene a claim is presented for over $500,000 for work that had been done during last summer around the Government property in defiance of that provision of the law. Then again in March, 1873, Congress appropriated $75,000 for the purpose of purchasing an interest in the City-hall building in this city, and incorporated in the law making the appropriation a provision that the money should only be used in the erection of District offices, and yet notwithstanding that prohibition placed upon them by Congress this money was also diverted from the uses to which it had been appropriated by Congress, and was used in the current business of paying the debts of the board of public works. There are other matters of this kind to which I might refer, but I think it is unnecessary to elaborate this part of the subject in this connection.

I have only referred to these matters for the purpose of showing to the House that the law has been no restraint upon these gentlemen who have been running the government of the District of Columbia for the last three years. The expenses have by the manner in which the government has been administered been most inordinate. I will give the House a single item. The matter of printing and engraving alone of the District of Columbia and of the board of public works since the 1st of June, 1871, has amounted to over $220,000, and the other expenses of the District have been on the same magnificent scale. The result of these operations has been to create enormous burdens, a statement of which is made on page 13 of the report, which I will ask the Clerk to read. I have it read now for the purpose of showing the burdens that have been imposed upon this District during the last three years.

The Clerk read as follows:

From the best information attainable, the committee find that the following is as nearly as can be stated the debt of the District which is in excess of the $10,000,000 limitation fixed by act of Congress:

Bills payable of the District of Columbia	$410,000 00
Certificates known as auditor's certificates, less amount of assessments authorized to be made	2,454,526 55
Contracts made for work and not completed, two-thirds of which must be paid by the District	883,332 00
Amounting in the aggregate to	3,747,858 55

This is an absolute debt against the District, after exhausting every available resource near or remote for its payment, unless a new tax for this purpose shall be levied. It is a debt due and payable at the present. But this is not the whole floating or unfunded liability resting upon the people of this District. The total of obligations for which the board of public works and the District are really liable, including such as is accurately ascertained and the remainder estimated, may be stated at $7,683,756.89, made up of the following items:

Certificates known as auditor's	$4,900,886 57
Contracts not yet completed, estimated	1,325,000 00
Damages to property, estimated	500,000 00
Property taken from streets	50,000 00
District of Columbia debt to February 1, 1874	497,870 32
Bills payable	410,000 00
Total	7,683,756 89

The total burden upon the people of the District outside of the present funded debt is, however, much larger. To ascertain that burden approximately there should be added to the foregoing:

Certificates of indebtedness outstanding	$1,450,000
Sewer certificates outstanding	1,030,000
Present obligations of District not included in the above	850,000

or a total in addition of $3,330,000; which must be met by taxation in some form; or a total burden of $11,013,756.89 beyond that represented by the funded debt, which is $9,902,251.18; making a total burden upon the property of the District of $20,916,008.07. This does not include the sums required to carry on the ordinary functions of government after July 1, 1874.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, the committee do not, as a matter of course, pretend to know that these results are entirely accurate nor can they tell whether or not all of this indebtedness is indebtedness that has been created in absolute good faith, and the reasons why that cannot be known are set forth or indicated on page 11 of the report. I will ask the Clerk to read the passage I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to this authority, for no other seems to have been relied upon, the vice-president ultimately came to be, practically, the board of public works, and exercised the powers of the board almost as absolutely as though no one else had been associated with him.

During a considerable portion of the succeeding time, notwithstanding the most extensive operations were being carried on, and expenditures were being made by the million, there were no stated times for board meetings, and but comparatively few board meetings were in fact held, but entries were made in the record purporting to contain the proceedings of the board, which were, in fact, made up by the secretary from letters and papers that came to the office, and from directions made by the vice-president. Some of these were entries made of business transacted by the vice-president at his private office, and afterward placed on the records as having been business transacted by the board.

These minutes were rarely, if ever, read and approved. As an illustration of the manner in which this business was transacted, reference is made to the testimony of Charles S. Johnson, assistant secretary, (pages 2319–2328, inclusive.)

THE TREASURER'S DEPARTMENT.

The treasurer was made the sole custodian of all the moneys received and securities issued and the sole disbursing officer of the same, without any check upon him whatsoever. He could draw his checks upon the public moneys in favor of whomsoever and for any amount he chose, and on any account he might think proper, without any other member of the board or officer thereof having any knowledge of it whatever. He has kept no cash account, and the checks he has issued do not correspond with the several amounts reported by him to have been paid; so that there is, as he himself concedes, no means of ascertaining whether his accounts are correct, other than by examining his books and papers in detail, which would have required more time than the committee could devote to it, besides requiring the services of a skillful accountant. From the organization of this board, June, 1871, to this time, the board has not examined these accounts.

AUDITOR'S OFFICE.

The mode of doing business in this office was as follows: Upon the presentation to the auditor of an account or estimate purporting to be approved by the board of public works, the auditor issued a certificate of indebtedness, and filed the approval, account, or estimate as his voucher for the issuance of the certificate. But no record or register of such auditing by the board was kept by the board, and it would seem to have been common for a single member to direct accounts to be audited in the name of the board; consequently there are no books that serve as a check upon the auditor, and by the comparison of which with his own books it can be seen whether he has improperly issued certificates. The only way in which his books can be verified is by comparing them with the many thousand vouchers on file in his office.

Notwithstanding the powers of the auditor and of the treasurer, the board, during the three years it has been in existence, has done nothing in the way of verifying the accounts of these two officers. This is a negligence not to be excused in those in whom such important trusts were confided.

Whether moneys have been paid out on false accounts, or diverted to improper purposes, can only be determined from a careful scrutiny of the accounts in detail. In the bill reported by the committee provision is made for having the books and accounts of these officers examined.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have called the attention of the House to these matters for the purpose of showing the necessity for making a change in the affairs of the government of the District of Columbia. The evidence shows, I think, beyond all question that this indebtedness is now more than $3,700,000 in excess of the $10,000,000 after exhausting every available resource. The District is in a sense utterly bankrupt. I regret to say it, but they have no means wherewith to carry on the government any longer. Their treasury is utterly exhausted. They have no money with which to meet current expenses much less to pay their debts. The employés of the District government have been unpaid now many of them for twelve months past, and since last November many of those who have been in the service of the District have been without any pay whatever. I need not take further time on this subject. It is proposed to change this government, and the committee therefore have recommended the first section of the bill, which it is not necessary that I should read as members have it before them and it has already been read at the Clerk's desk. And for the purpose of carrying on the government here ad interim it is proposed that there shall be three commissioners appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and that they shall take charge of the affairs of the District and perform the duties now vested in the governor and the board of public works, except as limited in this section. There are limitations, it will be seen, placed on these commissioners such as will, in the opinion of the committee, protect the people of the District from any further incurring of debts.

Mr. NIBLACK. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. NIBLACK. I understand from his statement that there have been many gross violations of law, as well as derelictions of duty, in regard to what has been done in this District during the last three years. The question I desire to ask is whether the committee have recommended or intend recommending any censure or punishment of those officers who have thus violated the law and bankrupted the District?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I presume that that is not within the province of the committee. It is not the business of the committee to recommend the censure or punishment of any person who has been connected with the affairs of the District government.

The second section of the bill provides for a temporary government. The bill then, in the third section, provides for the appointment of an engineer to take charge of the improvements in the city, so far as it may be necessary that they should be carried on, during the time when there is merely a government ad interim. The fourth section of the bill is the taxing provision; I pass that over, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BASS] will give it attention presently. The fifth section has reference to the creation of a permanent form of government. Now, I desire to say to the House that after the committee had closed the taking of testimony, we began to consider the question as to what kind of government we could devise, and after considering that matter with a good deal of care, we came to the conclusion that it would be utterly impossible, in the brief time that we had to devote to the subject before the close of the session, to devise such a framework of a government as ought to exist in the capital of the nation. There were many things that would have to be provided for; such, for instance, as a police for the District, a fire department, schools, and all the other minutiæ of the machinery necessary to a complete municipal government.

And inasmuch as it was perfectly apparent to the committee that there ought to be a cleaning up of these matters here, it was deemed best to make such provision if possible as would enable the Congress of the United States to furnish this District with a model municipal government. The whole thing is to be gone over; the committee had not the time to do it. Therefore we came to the conclusion that the best thing to be done was the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses. The reason for that was that when the joint committee, after having fully considered this whole subject, had prepared what they deemed a suitable frame-work of government, with the necessary laws for its execution, they could present that bill for the consideration of Congress. In addition to that, it was the desire of the committee that the government which was to be framed should not be regarded in any sense as political of partisan, that it should not be the creation of any party, so far as that could be avoided; therefore the committee provides in this section that this joint committee for the purpose of preparing a frame-work of government for this District shall consist of two members of the House and two members of the Senate.

There is another provision in this section to which I desire in this connection to call the attention of the House. It is provided that this joint committee "shall also prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of said government, or any branch thereof, including interest on its funded debt, which should be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based." There is a subsequent provision to which several gentlemen have called my attention. There is a very strong reason in my mind why this should be done.

I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will bear me out in saying that it is almost impossible to avoid making improper appropriations for this District, where the accounts are brought in from session to session for the purpose of getting appropriations from Congress for the support of the District. In January, 1873, an account was presented to the Committee on Appropriations for over $1,240,000. Your committee have had that account under consideration, and the evidence shows that to say the very least of it, to speak in the mildest possible way, the account was very inaccurately prepared. Then, again, on the 3d of March, 1873, by reason of claims that had been made by this District government, appropriations were made aggregating upwards of $2,400,000 for the purpose of supporting this District. Now I can say, without using any harsh words, that the testimony in this case has shown that the accounts were exceedingly loose and inaccurate. And at the beginning of this Congress another bill was presented in the report of the board of public works for 1873 which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The indebtedness of the General Government to the District of Columbia on account of improvements, as shown in the statement hereto appended, is as follows:

For work in and around Government reservations and public buildings..	$573,171 75
For work on avenues	1,056,574 36
For main sewerage	2,540,681 83
	4,170,427 94

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Now, without indulging in any criticisms with regard to the appropriations which have heretofore been made, further than what I have already said, we find here that with a view of getting an appropriation from this Congress accounts are presented aggregating over $4,370,000 for the avowed purpose of getting an appropriation from the Congress of the United States. By this it was expected to lift the burden of debt from the people of this District. It is claimed that the Government owes that amount of money. Now, as I said a while ago, $570,000 of that amount is for work done in violation of the act of Congress. Then there is another account, a tabulated statement of which will be found in the report, of $1,056,000. The testimony in this case shows that the account is wholly erroneous. Whether there is anything due, except it may be $250,000, is wholly problematic. Nobody can tell after looking at the testimony whether or not there is anything due.

The third item of this amount is for sewerage, $2,740,681.83. That is made up in this way; I wish to call the attention of the House to it, for the purpose of showing how these claims are made up and presented to Congress. There has been a sewerage act passed by this District; the main sewerage when completed will cost $2,435,855.23. This claim which is presented here is $304,000 more than the whole main sewerage of this city will cost when it is completed. By the sewerage law the city is divided into sewer districts, and a certain grade of assessments have been made per square foot of the property in the various sewerage districts. Then the board say that the Government has so many square feet of reservations in the District, that there are so many square feet of ground in the avenues and streets in the cities, and the Government being the owner in fee-simple of all the streets and avenues, if you aggregate the reservations and streets and avenues and tax them just as other property is taxed for sewer purposes, you will have $2,740,681.83; therefore they say the Government of the United States owes this District that amount of money on account of main sewers. That is the way that account is made up.

I state these things for the purpose of showing that for the protection of Congress against improper charges on account of this District, there is an absolute necessity for fixing some pro rata amount, some fixed proportional share which shall be paid by Congress for the support of this District; and hence we have embodied that recommendation in a section of this bill.

The sixth section is a provision for an auditing board for the purpose of ascertaining the actual state of the indebtedness of the District. This becomes necessary for several reasons.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the bill provide that the commissioners who are to be appointed shall fix the ratio of expense to be borne by the United States Government?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Not at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is certainly a most imperative necessity that we should know at an early period exactly what part of the expenses of the District the Government of the United States ought to bear.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question. This bill does not leave that matter to these commissioners or to the board who are to devise the new frame-work of government. It simply provides that they shall prepare and submit to Congress their views upon that subject, giving their reasons; and then it will be for Congress ultimately to say what shall be the proportion to be paid by the United States. We have guarded the bill in that respect; and I thank my friend for calling my attention to it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then the proportion of expense to be borne by Congress is not determined by the bill?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. No, sir; that is for Congress to determine hereafter.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is there anything in the bill which commits Congress to the indorsement or the payment of the District debt?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. No, sir; I will call attention to that point in a few moments. I think I can show that the committee has been careful about that.

The sixth section provides for an auditing board; and the purpose of that is to get a complete understanding and accurate information in regard to the indebtedness of this District. It makes provision that the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury shall be an auditing board, with power to employ the necessary assistants. Among other duties to be performed by this auditing board is the examination of the accounts of the auditor and treasurer of this board of public works. I have already had read from the desk that portion of the report relating to these two officers. Nobody can tell anything about their accounts. They may be all right; I do not say that they are not; but I do say that no living man can tell anything about them except by going through them in detail. Why, sir, the treasurer of this board of public works could any day draw his own check upon the funds of the board without anybody to molest him or make him afraid. And while these sewer certificates were worth not more than 40 cents on the dollar, if there was any money in the treasury he could, if he had seen fit to do so, have purchased those certificates at this rate of discount with the funds of the District. There was nothing in the system under which business was done which would have prevented him from doing that very thing.

Mr. CHIPMAN. In order that the House may not be impressed with the idea that the board of public works is responsible for what the gentleman is now stating, I wish to call his attention to section 37 of the organic act, by which Congress placed in the hands of the board of public works entire control over the funds appropriated for the city by the District of Columbia or by the United States. It was provided that "upon their warrant all money appropriated by the United States or the District of Columbia or collected from property-holders," &c., should be disbursed.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Ah! Mr. Speaker, I wish I had time to go into this question; I would answer the gentleman to his entire satisfaction. If he will go back and trace in the Globe the history of that provision he will find that Congress never intended that this board should have any such power; he will find that my colleague on the other side procured a change in the language of the law to the end that that thing should not be done. And I say here that this is one of the usurpations and unlawful acts of this board. I did not intend to say anything about it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I did not suppose the gentleman intended to make any false impression.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I do not.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I only desired the House should know what the law is.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I say the law never intended any such thing.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I do not think it ought to have so intended; but it has been so construed.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I did not intend to say one word about that point, because there has been a controversy in regard to the construction of that provision. But if any one will look through the Globe and trace the history of that measure he will find that it was not the intention that such power should be conferred upon this board. But suppose Congress had conferred such power, what was the duty of the board? It was to take the necessary precautions in regard to the disbursement of these millions of public money passing through the hands of this officer. Why, sir, there went through his hands within three or four or five months of last year over $3,500,000 that was appropriated by Congress; and there was no check upon him whatever in regard to the expenditure.

Because of what the committee have discovered in their investigation in this case, because the treasurer of the board of public works has admitted before the committee that there was no check upon him whatever, the committee has felt it to be its duty to provide a means whereby the accounts of the treasurer and auditor (those of the former footing up more than $15,000,000, and those of the latter more than $18,000,000) shall be thoroughly investigated.

Not only that, but I will say to the House further, you may take his reports and go through them from end to end, as my friend from New York [Mr. BASS] sitting on my right and myself have done, and you will find, in the first place, that he kept no cash account, and if you take the stubs of his checks you will find they hardly ever correspond with the amounts he has credited to himself in his reports. They scarcely ever correspond. So that there is no possible mode of knowing anything about it.

Mr. COBURN. What is the amount of variation?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. You cannot tell a thing about it. I do not say they are wrong, but I say finding this condition of accounts the committee have put in the sixth section a provision whereby the accounts of these two officers shall be carefully and thoroughly overhauled.

As I have already said, I do not say there is anything wrong, because I do not know, and there is no means by which I can ascertain. We have provided in this bill that this board of audit shall employ two skillful accountants, non-residents of this District. If there is any possible way by which the country can know the true state of this case we propose by this bill to make it out. Mr. Speaker, here is a great variety of debts. Here is a class of debts called sewer-certificates.

But let me ask the Chair how much time I have left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has about seventeen minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. My time is so near out I will have to abbreviate.

The bill provides also, as you will see for funding all the floating debt—getting it in shape. Then it is provided in another section of the bill that the sinking-fund commissioners shall, when this debt has been audited in the manner indicated by the bill, cause to be issued a bond bearing 3.65 per cent. interest, payable in fifty years, and that these various forms of indebtedness may be funded in that bond.

Now the reason of fixing that amount of interest is simply this. The committee ascertain from the testimony that in making some of these contracts, and especially some of these larger contracts, sewer contracts—in fixing the amount which should be paid for the construction of some of these works, an allowance had been made of 15 per cent. for the depreciated paper in which the payments had been made. Taking that into consideration, the committee came to the conclusion, making the best calculation they could, a bond bearing 3.65 per cent. running for fifty years would come as near getting at what is right in this as is possible. It is provided in the bill that these bonds shall not be taxable for State, county, or municipal purposes.

In reference to the question as to whether or not the Congress of the United States is pledged to the payment of these bonds, I will call the attention of the House to that provision of the bill. Here it is:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act—

You will remember what I said about ascertaining the proportion the United States should pay—

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

That is the only pledge given in this bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. What does the word "will" in line 16 refer to? There is no connection I can see. Will do what?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. "Will by proper proportional appropriations."

Mr. TOWNSEND. What will it do?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. They have two "wills." It is inaccurately printed in there. "As will provide the revenues necessary for the payment of the interest and principal thereof at maturity." There may be a verbal omission.

Mr. TOWNSEND. After the word "district," in line 19, some word should come in.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. There is an omission of a word.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the word?

Mr. FORT. Let me ask a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suppose the word is "levy"—will levy.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. It should be "as will do so." There is an omission of the two words "do so." The pledge given is simply this: that the Government of the United States having ascertained through an act of Congress hereafter to be passed what will be the proper proportion, then the Congress of the United States pledges itself to pay that proportion, whatever it may be, and by causing taxes to be levied on the property of the District will provide the necessary means to pay the interest and principal at maturity. In that connection let me call the attention of the House to one other fact.

Mr. FORT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. On page 2, line 14, there is a provision in reference to the payment of debts due the laborers and employés of the District and board of public works. Let me ask whether it would not be proper to make provision for the payment of these laborers?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. That is all provided for.

The point to which I was going to call the attention of the House before I yield the floor is this: I have been asked the question why it is that taxes are imposed simply on real estate. Gentlemen will see by looking at the bill that it does not provide that this principle of taxing only real estate in the District shall be continued. It says "that Congress will cause taxes to be levied on the property of the District," not confining it to real estate; and this method of levying taxes on real property is only a temporary expedient for a special reason, which my friend from New York [Mr. BASS] will now explain to the House. I yield the balance of my time to that gentleman, who will withdraw the motion to recommit, and submit a motion for the previous question.

Mr. BASS. At this late stage of the session it was deemed best by the committee that only such general remarks should be made in reference to this bill as would bring fully to the notice of the members of the House the provisions incorporated in it, and the particular evils proposed by it to be remedied. Those have been substantially explained by the chairman of the committee. And he stated at the outset of his remarks that he desired that such questions as might be put by the members of the House with reference to the taxation levied or proposed to be levied by the bill should be answered by myself. If the House will be patient I will endeavor in the briefest possible way to explain as well as I can why the committee recommend in the first place that a tax of 3 per cent. be levied upon the property of the city of Washington, a tax of 2½ per cent. on property in the city of Georgetown, and 2 per cent. on property in the county outside of Georgetown and Washington, for the purpose of maintaining the credit of the District during the ensuing fiscal year, and why it was in connection with that that the committee did not feel it was desirable to recommend in this bill that a tax should be levied upon personal property. The committee recommend the levying of a tax at the rate of 3 per cent. for this reason: Last year the Legislature of this District levied a tax of 2 per cent. on the property in the District, and 1.58 per cent. on the property outside the city in the county. The result of this was that the District Legislature did not provide adequate revenue to pay the current expenses of the year and meet their appropriations, and, as is shown in the report of the committee, there will be a deficiency on the 1st day of July of this year, estimated in round numbers at not less than $1,000,000. Some of that may be chargeable to the fact that the residents of the District have not paid their taxes which were levied in July, 1873, or rather which became collectible July 1, 1873. That general tax became by the terms of the law which passed the Legislative Assembly of this District collectible on that day. Certain abatements were allowed provided taxes were paid in anticipation of the 1st day of July of this year. But under the provisions of that law the taxes having been levied for the purpose of paying the current expenses of the fiscal year from July 1, 1873, to July 1, 1874, which included the compensation and wages of school-teachers, the payment of all the officers of the District government, the payment of the salaries of the members of the fire department, the payment of the salaries of the members of the police department, the payment of every employé of the government, from the lowest chimney-sweep to the heads of the District departments, we find that the taxes have been collected so slowly that there is now of the taxes then levied more than $1,000,000 uncollected, though due and collectible, and by reason of that, or to a certain extent by reason of that, this large deficiency is accruing against the District government.

By the estimate of expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, which has been prepared by the governor of the District to be sent in to the District Legislature, it appears that for the ensuing year, commencing on the 1st of July, 1874, and terminating on the 1st of July, 1875, the current expenses of this District, without some legislation to prevent, will be equal to the annual expenditure for the administration of each one of at least twenty of the States of this Union. In this little Territory, having within its limits only about the amount of territory which is included within an ordinary township in our States, it will cost to pay its current expenses, by this estimate, more than $2,600,000 for the ensuing fiscal year, including the amount necessary to pay the interest on the funded debt. It therefore becomes necessay to raise this money, or else Congress will imitate the example set by the District Legislature and by levying an inadequate tax let the District still run into bankruptcy. Therefore your committee have recommended to Congress that, facing this question boldly, they should levy on the District a tax necessary to enable it to pay its school-teachers and its firemen and its employés in every department, and thus relieve them from distress and the District from a breach of faith. For this purpose they have found it necessary to levy this tax of 3, 2½, and 2 per cent., and it will produce the amounts to which I will now call the attention of the House. Gentlemen will find, if they look on page 24 of the report, the table containing the estimates of the necessary expenses of the District government for the ensuing year.

Gentlemen will find also upon page 28 of the report the amount which 1 per cent. upon the property of the District will raise and which 2 per cent. will raise. The House will therefore see that a levy of 3 per cent. on the property of the city, 2½ per cent upon the property of Georgetown, and 2 per cent. upon the property of the county will produce in round numbers, if the taxes are all paid, the sum of $2,800,000. This tax the bill makes due and collectable on the 1st day of next November.

It is probably evident to the House why the rate is made to vary in the different localities. The chief expenditures and expenses are incurred in this city and the chiefest burden must fall here, and the rate recommended is believed to be fair and equitable in consideration of all the circumstances.

There has been some criticism as to some of these provisions of the bill, because, as it is stated, we are levying a double tax this year upon the property of the District. Will you pardon me if I state to you in brief terms what the facts are in that connection and show you that this allegation is unfounded? The last tax levied upon the people of the District of Columbia was levied by an act which passed the District Legislature June 26, 1873, which made the tax collectible on the 1st day of July, 1873, for the purpose of paying the current expenses of the then ensuing fiscal year. No tax has been levied since that time, and these gentlemen who complain that a double tax is levied this year must be the same persons who are in arrears and who did not pay their taxes last year when by the terms of the law they were collectable. The tax now levied ought to be made due on the 1st day of July of this year, but the committee recommend that the time be extended until the 1st of November, because of the fact that during this investigation when the various rumors were abroad in this District, inducing the people to believe that they would have to pay no more taxes and that Congress would assume and pay the expenses of the District, many persons declined to pay their taxes, and therefore this large sum is in arrears. But this tax levy is simply such a one as the committee believe will help to redeem the credit of the District and enable the employés of the government to be paid the sums justly due them.

Perhaps I should state that in addition to the current expenses included in the estimate of the governor, which will be found on page 24 of the report, the District government during the ensuing year will be compelled to pay other sums. There is no estimate stated there for the necessary amount required to keep these streets and avenues in repair, which will cost, as we all know, quite a large sum of money. Nor is there included in this estimate the amount necessary to complete the outstanding contracts which are legal and valid as against the District of Columbia. There is no estimate of the amount necessary during the ensuing year to pay the interest on the floating debt, which is to be funded in the three sixty-five bonds to which reference has been made. These aggregate expenditures at the lowest estimate will amount to $500,000; and my colleague on the committee from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] suggests that there must also be suitable provision for cleaning the streets and alleys, which in this city will amount to probably $100,000 per year; so that this tax has been put at the lowest estimate. The committee are desirous to reduce it if possible, and save the public credit of the District.

Mr. Speaker, I desire before speaking on the question of levying a tax upon personal property in this District to ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] who has made a suggestion on that subject, be read, for the purpose of indicating to the House that it is impracticable to incorporate any such provision in this bill.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman whether there is any objection to directing the committee which is to examine into the affairs of this District and report to the next Congress to include in their report a proper system of taxation for the District?

Mr. BASS. That is included in the general provision. The House will bear in mind that of the gentlemen who are to compose this committee half of them, or one branch of the committee, are to be gentlemen of this House and the two other members are to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and are to be members of the Senate. The committee did not feel that it was within their province to lay down rules which should govern their colleagues in preparing a frame of government for the District of Columbia. It was deemed best and wisest under all the circumstances to give those gentlemen the opportunity to frame, as my friend from Indiana has said, a model form of government for this District, giving them the widest latitude and the widest discretion as to their recommendations.

I am now willing to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri read, and then I will ask an opportunity to answer his proposition briefly.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, as follows:

After the word "estate," in section 4, line 4, insert the words "and all personal property."

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to admit that amendment?

Mr. BASS. No, sir; I simply let it be read in order that I may make some suggestions why the committee did not deem it best to incorporate such a provision in this bill. I desired to have it read for that purpose and no other.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to state that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMALL] has prepared an amendment which is perhaps more perfect than mine, and I would like to have it read.

Mr. FORT. I have also prepared an amendment, and I would be glad if the gentleman would allow it to be read.

Mr. BASS. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read the amendment, which was to add to section 4 the following:

Provided, Personal property to the amount of $100, consisting of necessary household and kitchen furniture, owned and used by any family, shall be exempt from taxation and no more.

Mr. SMALL. I desire to have an amendment read.

Mr. BASS. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out all after the word "District" in the fifth line, down to and including the word "purposes" in the seventh line, and insert "and all the personal property of the inhabitants of said District not exempted by law from taxation;" and insert after the word "real" in the eighth, tenth, and twelfth lines the words "and personal."

And insert after section 4 the following additional section:

SEC. —. All real estate in said District, and all personal property of the inhabitants of said District, not expressly exempted by law, shall be subject to taxation. Personal estate, for the purpose of taxation, shall include goods, chattels, and effects wherever they are; ships and vessels, money at interest, and other debts due to the persons to be taxed, more than they are indebted or pay interest for, and stocks and securities.

The following-named property shall be exempted from taxation, to wit: property of the United States and of the District of Columbia; property used for charitable and educational purposes; household furniture of every person, not exceeding in value $1,000; the wearing apparel of every person, and farming utensils and mechanic's tools, necessary for carrying on his business.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I suggest an amendment to the fifth section of the bill to insert after the words "the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based" the words "and they shall further prepare and submit a just scheme for the taxation of personal property with suitable exceptions."

Mr. BASS. I cannot admit or consent to any amendments for reasons which I stated a moment ago. It seems to me those reasons will commend themselves to the good judgment of members of this House. It does not seem to be exactly proper that a committee of this House, appointed to investigate the affairs of this District, should recommend to this House what some other committee to be appointed by the House, of men who are equal to, and I hope of better capacity than ourselves, shall do in regard to preparing a frame of government for this District. That committee will have the Constitution before them which gives to Congress the exclusive power of legislation over this District. Your committee therefore have not seen that it was right that they should say to this House that any other committee appointed by this honorable body should be constrained or restricted by provisions which were not thrown around ourselves. We think they should be given the widest range for the performance of their duties. The gentlemen who will be selected will prepare a frame-work of government which at least will commend itself to them, and when it comes before Congress for action, if they shall think proper, it can be amended.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill requires that the joint committee to be appointed shall prepare a frame-work of government. What I want is that that committee shall include in their frame-work of government a just scheme of taxation of personal property. It is a thing which cannot be prepared in a moment. That committee can prepare it as a part of their scheme and Congress may adopt it or not.

Mr. BASS. That is a part of the work, and the committee can do as they think proper about it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the section contained in the bill is perfectly right. It requires the gentlemen of the committee to bring in a draught for a frame of government, and that draught must include provisions for taxation. They ought to have the whole range to determine whether personalty or realty, church property or charitable property, or property of any other kind, shall be taxed or shall be exempt from taxation. We should not give them any instructions other than to bring in a general law.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] believe that under this temporary arrangement we should not tax personal property?

Mr. BECK. I desire to have an amendment read. The gentleman has allowed other amendments to be read.

Mr. BASS. Only for the purpose of bringing before this House the precise proposition as to which inquiries have been made.

Mr. BECK. I made an inquiry. I ask if the gentleman refuses to allow my amendment to be read?

Mr. BASS. It already appears that no two propositions which have been read, offered by distinguished gentlemen upon this floor, are at all in accord with reference to the method that shall be pursued. There are two hundred and eighty-eight other gentlemen on this floor, and they undoubtedly would all disagree upon that subject.

Mr. BECK. I desire to inquire how much time the gentleman has left?

The SPEAKER. It is about expiring.

Mr. BECK. I hope it will expire before long.

Mr. BASS. I desire to make two or three other suggestions. In the first place your committee during this interregnum do not propose to revolutionize all the laws of this District and to impose a tax on personal property. They do not propose that for the reason that there has been a District Legislature here for the last three years, representing as it was supposed the views of the people of the District, to some extent at least, and that Legislature each session has adopted and ratified this system of taxation. Their statutes, which are contained in a volume of some size, provide for this system of taxation upon real estate only. Your committee have recommended a modification of the District laws, only in so far as it was absolutely necessary to carry out the plan proposed by the committee in making these necessary changes. So far therefore as they could avoid any other modifications of the District laws they have permitted them to remain in force because they were the best expositions of what the people themselves here wanted.

Another difficulty arose with reference to the persons who should pay a personal tax in this District. This subject having been fully and at length discussed by the committee, they agreed, in general with the feeling which seems to be expressed here, that if it could be done it would be best that such a tax should be levied; and they have supposed that the new joint committee will recommend such a modification of existing laws. That, however, is within their discretion. Only a small percentage of the people in this District are what may be termed permanent residents here. There are many people residing here who vote in other localities, and therefore pay a tax upon personal property elsewhere. To provide machinery to ascertain just which of the people residing here should pay a personal tax was not within the power of the committee in the short time they had to devote to the preparation of this bill. There has been and is no assessment of personal property within this District under the present form of government.

The committee desired that this tax should commence to be paid on the 1st of July; it is necessary the payment should begin then. If you undertake to perfect a scheme for assessing personal property, it will take two or three months for the assessment, for the hearing of appeals before a board which must be constituted for that purpose, and for the issuing of warrants for enforcing the collection of the tax. Such a scheme, if we undertake to devise it, would cover half as many pages at least as the bill which has been reported by our committee.

Mr. MERRIAM. I have a scheme here on one sheet of paper.

Mr. BASS. For the reasons I have stated, and for others which I will not stop to detail, the committee have decided that in their judgment it would not be proper or practicable within the five months between the close of the present session of Congress and the commencement of the next session to revolutionize the laws of this District for the purpose of levying a personal tax. As a matter of necessity this whole subject will come back to Congress for final disposition at the next session.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I withdraw the motion to recommit and move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. BECK. I hope the House will vote down the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It is a matter which a majority of the House must settle.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

Mr. COTTON. We ought to be allowed some opportunity to discuss this bill and suggest amendments.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 70.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question then recurred on ordering the main question.

Mr. BECK. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHIPMAN. As I understand, if the main question is ordered it closes all discussion on this bill.

Mr. BECK. And shuts out all amendments. It gags the House.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being ayes 30, noes not counted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the main question be not ordered, will not the bill be still open for amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is in doubt on that question, he should refer to Barclay's Digest.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair generally answers such questions more respectfully.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not regard this as properly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not a parliamentary inquiry!

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no hesitation in saying that it is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it seems to me a proper parliamentary inquiry, and such a one as has usually been respectfully answered by the Chair heretofore.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 111, not voting 44; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. PERRY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD as part of the debates some remarks he had prepared on the alarm telegraph bill. (See Appendix.)

Mr. COTTON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the bill for the government of the District of Columbia. (See Appendix.)

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, notifying the House that that body had adopted the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas war is at all times destructive of the material interests of a people, demoralizing in its tendencies, and at variance with an enlightened public sentiment; and whereas, differences between nations should in the interests of humanity and fraternity be adjusted if possible by international arbitration: Therefore,

Resolved, That the people of the United States being devoted to the policy of peace with all mankind, enjoining its blessings and hoping for its permanence and its universal adoption, hereby through their representatives in Congress recommend such arbitration as a rational substitute for war, and they further recommend to the treaty-making power of the Government to provide if practicable that hereafter in treaties made between the United States and foreign powers war shall not be declared by either of the contracting parties against the other until efforts shall have been made to adjust all alleged cause of difference by impartial arbitration.

Mr. ORTH. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the preamble and resolution were adopted.

Mr. SHELDON moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolution were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print some remarks on the resolution just adopted. (See Appendix.)

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask unanimous consent that to-night, after the Committee on Naval Affairs finish their business, the Committee on War Claims shall have leave to submit their reports. I do not propose to interfere with the business of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Objection was made.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to submit a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 3421, making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

CHARLES O'NEILL,
ERASTUS WELLS,
J. M. RUSK.
Managers on the part of the House.

A. A. SARGENT,
D. D. PRATT,
JOHN P. STOCKTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPEER. How does that leave the bill in respect to pay for vouchers?

Mr. O'NEILL. It reduces the rate for vouchers from thirty to twenty-five cents.

Mr. SPEER. I supposed it was fifteen.

Mr. O'NEILL. No. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to submit a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. MOREY. The session this evening is for reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and as it is now very late, I hope the gentleman will withhold his report until to-morrow.

Mr. GARFIELD. The report will be printed in the proceedings of the Senate in the RECORD to-morrow, and I will withhold it for the present, as members desire to see it in print before acting on it.

G. J. PILLOW.

Mr. WHITTHORNE entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the claim of G. J. Pillow, reported adversely from the Committee on War Claims, was laid on the table.

JUDGE E. H. DURELL.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report concluding with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Edward H. Durell, judge of the district court of the United States for the District of Louisiana, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

2. Resolved, That a committee of two be appointed to go to the Senate, and at the bar thereof in the name of the House of Representatives, and of all the people of the United States, to impeach Edward H. Durell, judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, of high crimes and misdemeanors in office, and acquaint the Senate that the House of Representatives will in due time exhibit particular articles of impeachment and make good the same, and that the committee do demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of said Edward H. Durell to answer to said impeachment.

3. Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to prepare and report articles of impeachment against Edward H. Durell, judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, with power to send for persons, papers, and records, and to take testimony under oath.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I move that the report be printed and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TREMAIN presented the views of a minority, as follows:

The undersigned, members of the Judiciary Committee, dissent from the conclusions of the majority of said committee, that E. H. Durell, judge of the district of Louisiana, should be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, and recommend that all proceedings against him be discontinued and dismissed.

LYMAN TREMAIN.
WILLIAM P. FRYE.
JOHN CESSNA.
J. D. WARD.

Mr. POLAND also presented the following minority report:

The undersigned, member of the Judiciary Committee, for himself desires to say—

First. In relation to the midnight order, although he believes the judge had no proper legal jurisdiction to make it, still he is not able to find that the judge acted corruptly, or with any belief that he was going beyond his jurisdiction in making it. The law under which he acted was new, and no rules or precedents had been established under it. The whole people were excited, the times were violent and turbulent, and judicial calmness or correctness could hardly be expected.

Secondly. The evidence seems to establish that some of the officers of Judge Durell's court were guilty of very corrupt practices and that he was not watchful to scrutinize their conduct; but there is no claim that he ever shared in any of the proceeds of their gains, and no direct evidence that he knowingly sanctioned or approved their action.

Thirdly. Where the evidence obtained by substantially an ex parte examination, only secures a bare majority of the committee, it does not appear to me that the public interest will be furthered by presenting articles of impeachment to the Senate for trial.

LUKE P. POLAND.

The minority reports were also ordered to be printed and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 41) granting a pension to Margaret E. Alexander, widow of Edwin A. Alexander, deceased, late a private in Company K, Eighth Regiment of Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, known as the Thirty-ninth Indiana Regiment;

BUSINESS FOR THIS EVENING.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on War Claims may have leave to make reports this evening, not to interfere with the business of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SPEER. What is the order for this evening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has in his hand the order. It is that Wednesday evening, June 17, be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. And no other business to be transacted.

The SPEAKER. Not unless the House so orders.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Well, I ask that the Committee on War Claims may be called for reports to go upon the Calendar.

Mr. SENER. If any adverse reports are to be made, I object.

SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that Friday evening next be set apart for general debate, no business whatever to be transacted.

Several members objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot say at present whether that evening can be spared for debate.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the House do now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock, Mr. HOSKINS occupying the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House the session of this evening is exclusively for the consideration of business from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GOOCH. I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. CESSNA. I suggest that the gentleman say ten minutes.

Mr. GOOCH. I will move that the House take a recess until fifteen minutes to eight o'clock; that will be twelve and a half minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly took a recess until a quarter to eight o'clock.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at a quarter to eight o'clock.

PETITION OF CHOCTAW NATION.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of delegates representing the Choctaw Nation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have a bill referred to the Committee on Commerce, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I object.

GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY.

Mr. ARCHER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 716) for the better government of the Navy of the United States.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that on and after the passage of the act any officer of the Navy who may be promoted in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from the date he takes rank therein, if it be subsequent to the vacancy he is appointed to fill.

The second section prohibits the accounting officers of the Treasury from making any allowance to any officer of the Navy who has been, or may hereafter be, dismissed from the service and restored to the same under the provisions of the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1865, entitled "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out of the national forces, and for other purposes," to exceed more than pay as on leave for six months from the date of dismissal, unless it shall appear that the officer demanded in writing, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, and continued to demand as often as once in six months, a trial as provided for in said act.

The third section repeals so much of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1864, as provides that cadet engineers, not to exceed fifty in number, shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and provides that cadet engineers shall hereafter be appointed annually by the Secretary of the Navy, and that the number appointed each year shall not exceed twenty-five; and it further repeals all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of the act.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the gentleman state wherein this bill changes the existing law?

Mr. ARCHER. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Vermont and of the House that this bill has three objects. The first one is to correct an error which we think has sprung up in the Navy Department, where commissions are dated back and pay is drawn on those commissions when really no vacancy existed in the rank to which the officer was appointed. That is the first section of the bill. It restrains the payment to officers whose commissions are dated back in consequence of their absence at sea, or because from other causes there is delay in their receiving them until vacancies occur in that grade. The section is reported in the interest of economy.

The second section of the bill provides a remedy against one class of claims on the Treasury. Officers who were dismissed from the service during the war, and in the hurry and confusion there have been errors or some technical defects in their orders of dismissal, now come back in many instances and claim that they were illegally dismissed from the service and should be restored because some technicality had not been complied with. Although they have been following different pursuits for six or eight years, they come back and claim to be restored, and when restored they claim that as the dismissal was illegal they ought to be paid for all the years they have been out of the service. This second section provides that no officer shall be paid in such case unless he has every six months made application to be restored. That prevents their coming in on old, stale claims and receiving back pay after being reinstated. In some instances officers have made claims for as high as $8,000 or $9,000.

The last section of the bill provides for a reduction that has really taken place in the Navy. The act of Congress referred to in that section, and which allowed the appointment of only fifty cadet engineers, is not now required; the service does not now require so many young officers in the cadet corps as it did at the time of the passage of that act. The Secretary of the Navy thinks that twenty-five instead of fifty cadet engineers appointed annually will answer all the needs of the service. I believe the committee were unanimous in recommending the passage of this bill.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ARCHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendments, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3678) for the relief of saving institutions having no capital stock, and doing business solely for the benefit of depositors; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3741) to authorize the issue of an American register to the ship Alhambra.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 633) for the relief of A. H. Von Leuttwitz, late lieutenant Third United States Cavalry; and

A bill (S. No. 683) to authorize the use of gilt letters for the names of vessels.

PUBLIC MARINE SCHOOL.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have myself no bills to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs. Other members of the committee have all the bills to be reported, and I will thank the Chair to recognize members of the committee in the order of their appointment.

Mr. GOOCH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a substitute, Senate bill No. 176, to encourage the establishment of public marine schools.

The substitute authorizes and empowers the Secretary of the Navy, in order to promote nautical education, to furnish, upon the application of the governor of a State, a suitable vessel of the Government, with all her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation, provided the same can be spared without detriment to the naval service, to be used for the benefit of any nautical school, or school or college having a nautical branch, established at each or any of the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and San Francisco, upon the condition that there shall be maintained at such port a school or branch of a school for the instruction of youths in navigation, seamanship, marine enginery, and all matters pertaining to the proper construction, equipment, and sailing of vessels, or any particular branch thereof; and the President of the United States is authorized, when in his opinion the same can be done without detriment to the public service, to detail proper officers of the Navy as superintendents or instructors in such schools; provided that if any such school shall be discontinued, or the good of the service shall require it, such vessel shall be immediately restored to the Secretary of the Navy and the officers so detailed recalled; and provided further that no person shall be sentenced to or received at such schools as a punishment or condition of punishment for crime.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is the expense of this to be borne by the United States Treasury?

Mr. GOOCH. It is understood that this is to impose no responsibility whatever upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. What would these vessels be doing if not employed in this business?

Mr. GOOCH. It is known that we have now quite a number of vessels that can be employed in no particular service beneficial to the Government. Those vessels may just as well be detailed for the use of these schools, where they will be of some benefit to the people and where the Government will be relieved from the responsibility of keeping two or three ship-keepers on board of each of them. This bill is carefully guarded; these vessels are to be granted to these institutions only in case they can be taken without any detriment to the public service, and the Secretary of the Navy has the power to call for their return at any time when he sees fit to do so. So it will be seen that the bill cannot impose expense upon the General Government.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The officers and crew are to be detailed I suppose from the Navy.

Mr. GOOCH. No crew is to be detailed.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Only officers?

Mr. GOOCH. Only certain officers who are to be employed as instructors; and these are to be detailed only when they can be spared from the public service as well as not.

Mr. HURLBUT. Who is to receive and take charge of these vessels when they are detailed?

Mr. GOOCH. They are to be called for by the governor of the State; and then they pass into the custody of the institutions to which they are loaned. It is presumed that the governor will not ask for a vessel unless there be an institution of such a character that it will be safe to intrust a vessel to it.

Mr. HURLBUT. One other question: Will the gentleman tell us whether or not any such school for the education of seamen is now in active operation?

Mr. GOOCH. I do not know that there is in this country.

Mr. ARCHER. I beg leave to correct the gentleman; I understand there is one in New York and also one in Boston.

Mr. GOOCH. I misunderstood the gentleman's question. I understood him to inquire whether any vessels had already been detailed to any such school.

Mr. HURLBUT. No, sir; my inquiry was whether any such schools are now in operation.

Mr. GOOCH. The Institute of Technology, in Boston, is very anxious to have a vessel detailed for this purpose. So is also a school established in the city of New York. Those gentlemen who are acquainted with the character of the Boston institution to which I refer will at once understand that if that institution takes hold of this branch of instruction, the highest skill and the best talent in the country will be employed in connection with it.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there is here afforded an opportunity for educating our merchant marine with little or no expense to the Government, so that we shall have in that service men who will give character to our nation as they go over the world, men who will be true representatives of our people and our Government in every port. Here, sir, is offered an opportunity to educate this class of men so that they shall honorably represent the nation whose flag they float.

We all know that when the recent war broke out we were obliged to call men from the merchant marine to aid in officering our ships of war. Under the system of instruction proposed by this bill if the exigency should again arise we can call for a class of educated men to render a service to the Government which they will be just as competent to render as they would be if they had been educated at the expense of the Government.

In addition to that this bill is designed to encourage and promote the study of naval architecture, a branch of study which has been neglected in our country. I certainly hope the bill may receive the sanction of the House and become a law.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute, it was agreed to.

The question being then taken on ordering the bill, as amended, to be read a third time, there were—ayes 46, noes 6; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a new scheme of expenditure; and I must insist on a quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. GOOCH were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. GOOCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 22, nays 127, not voting 140; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barrere, Cain, Cessna, Freeman Clarke, Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crooke, Crossland, Danford, Giddings, Killinger, Leach, Magee, Martin, Merriam, Moore, Ellis H. Roberts, Sener, Storm, Jasper D. Ward, and Charles W. Willard—22.

Young—140.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. STONE stated that his colleague, Mr. WELLS, was detained at his room by sickness.

Mr. ALBRIGHT stated that his colleague, Mr. SHOEMAKER, was absent on account of a death in his family.

Mr. CONGER stated that his colleague, Mr. HUBBELL, was absent in attendance on the District investigating committee.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be again read, and then if the House chooses to pass it, a quorum being present, I will make no further objection.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a word in reference to this measure. We have been told by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOOCH] that this will not be any great expense to the Government. He also entertains the opinion that it will be very beneficial in promoting the interest of the Government. I do not believe it is by agencies like this the interest of the Government can be promoted, or the interest either of the mercantile marine or of the Navy proper which is engaged in public affairs. I do not think this is one of the influences by which our commerce is to be promoted or our Navy strengthened. I do not indulge in any such hope. I am confident, on the contrary, if we pass this measure we will open up another source of expenditure from the public Treasury.

It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, to detail vessels from the Navy with professors detailed from the ranks of the Navy at the various ports of the United States without being in its very inception a source of heavy expense to the Government. That is inevitable. It is absolutely certain it will ripen into a heavy expense. I do think, circumstanced as we are now, an agency like this, which will inevitably lead to an expenditure of the public money, should not be voted unless there is some pressing necessity for it and a certainty that the ultimate result will be beneficial to the country. We know what has been the result of similar attempts in the way of establishing educational institutions throughout the country. I think it is an unwise measure, and hope it will be rejected.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 40.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 40.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was passed.

Mr. GOOCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAHLGREN GUNS.

Mr. GOOCH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3742) to authorize the purchase of certain improvements in ordnance; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Navy to pay to the widow of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Dahlgren $50,000 for and on account of the past use and the right hereafter to use in the manufacture of ordnance and projectiles by the United States each of the improvements patented by said Dahlgren in the form, the mode of casting, the finish of naval ordnance, and in casting iron shells; and a sufficient sum for this purpose is thereby appropriated out of any moneys of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. This ought to be considered more carefully than it can be considered this evening, and I therefore suggest it go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I make the point of order for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and ordered to be printed.

CHELSEA STREET, BOSTON.

Mr. GOOCH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3743) to reimburse the city of Boston for certain expenses incurred in the improvement of Chelsea street, formerly Charlestown, in connection with the United States navy-yard; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, appropriates out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,638.53 to reimburse the city of Boston for expenses incurred in the improvement of Chelsea street, bordering on the United States navy-yard, in what was formerly known as Charlestown, Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not make the point of order, but I ask the report accompanying it be read.

Mr. GOOCH. Let the Clerk read the letter of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 9, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith copy of a communication dated the 12th ultimo, with its respective inclosures, addressed to me by Commodore C. R. P. Rodgers, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, relative to a claim made by the authorities of Charlestown, Massachusetts, to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in the improvement of that portion of Chelsea street bordering on the United States navy-yard, amounting to $1,638.53. As it seems but fair that the Government should pay its proportion of the expense incurred by the city authorities in making the improvements in question, I would respectfully recommend that Congress appropriate the necessary sum for the purpose.

Very respectfully,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. A. H. CRAGIN,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate

Mr. GOOCH. I will say that the city of Charlestown built a sidewalk around the navy-yard in that city. They charged to the United States Government exactly what they charged to each of the landowners on the street for the building of the sidewalk, and the Secretary of the Navy would have paid it but he had no fund from which he could take the money, and therefore recommends that Congress pay the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOOCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL S. MERSHON, JR.

Mr. HAYS. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move that the rules be suspended, and that the bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr., be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

Mr. STORM. I rise to a question of order. Under the order under which we meet to-night have we a right to go to the Speaker's table?

Mr. HAYS. This bill has been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I am instructed to ask its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the House has a perfect right to go to the Speaker's table for any bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs; but that can only be done by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. FORT. I would like to hear read the order under which the House met this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The bill was read. It directs that there be paid to Daniel S. Mershon, jr., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $46,715.08, in full payment and discharge of the claim of said Mershon for work done and material furnished in the construction of the side-wheel steamer Cimarron.

Mr. LAWRENCE. How does this bill come from the Speaker's table?

Mr. HAYS. I do not yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have a right to make a point of order.

Mr. HAYS. The point of order has been already made and overruled.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman does not know the point of order I desire to make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The order of the House was that the session this evening should be for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I submit that under that order we cannot go to the Speaker's table. I ask that the order be read.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I send to the desk the motion I made for the session this evening as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HAYS] stated in his place that this bill had been considered in the Committee on Naval Affairs. Upon that statement the Chair ruled that under the order of the House it was in order to move to suspend the rules and take the bill from the Speaker's table. The Chair is now informed that the bill has not been before the House committee, and he therefore rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GOOCH. Before the Chair makes his final ruling, I should like to have the order read.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Let it be read from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House this evening is acting.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The piece of paper which the Clerk holds in his hand is not my motion. It is correctly reported in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the motion as it appears in the RECORD, and also the order as it appears on the Journal. The Chair is informed that they are identical.

The Clerk read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that a session be ordered for Wednesday evening next, for business of the Committee on Naval Affairs, including bills already reported but not acted on.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That does not include bills on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the entry on the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Wednesday evening next, June 17, be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of opinion that under this order of the House it is only in order to take up such bills as shall be reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that the House cannot go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking therefrom any bill which has not been acted upon by the committee. The Chair was led into his first ruling under a misapprehension of the facts.

Mr. HAYS. This bill has already been considered in the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I have been instructed to report it favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that the motion to take the bill from the Speaker's table is not in order.

Mr. HAYS. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BECK. I object to any motion which will take the bill from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama is not in order. The bill remains on the Speaker's table.

MRS. SARAH B. FOREST.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3362) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah B. Forest, widow of Lieutenant Dulaney A. Forest, late of the United States Navy.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Sarah B. Forest, widow of Lieutenant Dulaney A. Forest, late of the United States Navy, the sum of $820, which shall be in full discharge of all claims of said Sarah B. Forest against the United States for balance due from an allotment of pay made by her late husband, being the amount due from April 1 to December 6, 1861, at the rate of $100 a month.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. There is a report accompanying this bill which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read, if any gentleman desires to hear it. I also send to the desk a letter from the Fourth Auditor, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FOURTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
June 8, 1874.

SIR: In answer to your verbal inquiry, I have the honor to inform you that prior to the death of Lieutenant Dulaney A. Forest, late of the United States Navy, he left an allotment of $100 per month, payable to his wife, Sarah B. Forest, at Norfolk, Virginia, upon which there was checked from his pay the sum of $1,500, while the sum of $700 only was paid to his wife, leaving a balance still unpaid of $800.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

STEPHEN J. W. TABOR,
Auditor.

Hon. J. H. PLATT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FORT. I would like to hear the report read.

The report was read. It states that some time in June, 1860, Lieutenant Dulaney A. Forest, before sailing to the East Indies on the United States steamer Dakota, on United States service, made an allotment of $100 per month in favor of his wife, Sarah B. Forest, to be deducted from his pay as lieutenant in the Navy, to be paid to her at the United States Navy agency at Norfolk, Virginia. Under said allotment while Lieutenant Forest was absent on board the United States steamer Dakota, in the service of the United States, there was deducted from his pay the sum of $1,500 for the benefit of his wife, Sarah B. Forest, in accordance with the terms of the allotment; but owing to the resignation of the Navy agent at Norfolk, Virginia, April 22, 1861, the going out of the State of Virginia, and other causes, only $700 of this amount has ever been paid to Mrs. Sarah B. Forest, leaving a balance due in her favor and unpaid of $820. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill for her relief in accordance with the foregoing facts for the sum of $820.

Mr. FORT. Who signs that report?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. It is the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FORT. Is that report signed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Illinois that it is very seldom that a report is signed by a committee.

Mr. FORT. I would like to know if it has been printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not a printed but a written report.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia one or two questions. I would like the gentleman who reports this bill to explain to the House why it is that this officer was not paid, and further to explain to the House where he was in service and what his service was.

Mr. PLATT, of Viginia. Is that all?

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. All that is pretty fully stated in the report; but as the gentleman would seem not to have given much attention to the reading of it, I will reply to the inquiries he has addressed to me. Lieutenant Forrest while serving in the Navy of the United States on board a United States vessel ordered to sea, as is the custom with naval officers, allotted to his wife, the lady in whose favor this bill is asked to be passed, a certain amount of his pay per month. She received it for I think five or seven months; but after that, owing to the resignation of the naval agent at Norfolk where she was living and who had paid her this allotment monthly, she never received any more. Lieutenant Forrest came home after fifteen months' service and resigned from the service of the United States. He got to his home at Norfolk and there died of consumption. He never served a day anywhere except in the service of the United States Government. The Fourth Auditor of the Treasury certifies that there is on the books of his Department to the credit of this lady the sum which we ask that she shall be paid. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the certificate from the Navy Department as to the time when this Navy agent at Norfolk resigned and ceased to pay this allottment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The resignation of George Loyall, Navy agent at Norfolk, Virginia, was accepted by the Navy Department on the 22d of April, 1861.

WILLIAM P. MORAN.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 8, 1874.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Gentlemen will observe that this was the resignation of the Navy agent, and not of the officer whose widow is now seeking relief.

Mr. FORT. I wish the gentleman would state to the House in what service this officer served; whether in the Union or in the confederate service.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. In the Union service. He was on board a United States vessel when this allotment was made and when this money became due.

Mr. FORT. In what service was he?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. He never served in any other service than that of the United States, and he died at Norfolk a few months after returning from this cruise.

Mr. FORT. I wish the gentleman to state to the House further why it is that the Auditor certifies that this money is due to the widow and yet she has not drawn it.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Simply because Congress in its wisdom saw fit to enact in 1862 or 1863, while the war was going on, a law which provided that no claim should be paid to any person residing in any State then in rebellion by any accounting officer of the Government, and the only possible hope of relief that this widow has, until that general law is repealed, is to come to the Congress of the United States and ask the passage of a special law for her relief. Had she lived anywhere else except in one of the States then in rebellion, her claim could have been and would have been paid by the Treasury Department. Lieutenant Forrest died, I believe, in 1861 or 1862.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia if he does not know that this man on his arrival on shore, in this country, resigned his position in the United States service for the purpose of entering into the rebel service?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I have said that he resigned on his return from his cruise. Whatever his purpose might have been, I am unable to say; I did not know him personally. But I do know that if he had intended to do any such thing, the hand of Providence intervened and prevented it, because he died before he could execute any such purpose. It is not for me to say what he might have intended.

Mr. FORT. I raise the point of order on this bill that it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If such a point was ever good on this bill it is now quite too late. The bill having been discussed in the House the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FORT. The report of this committee has never been printed; so far as I understand there is no report before the House. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I do not yield for any such motion. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD CAVENDY.

Mr. PLATT of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report favorably upon a bill (H. R. No. 2774) for the relief of Edward Cavendy.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Navy and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to compute the time of service of Edward Cavendy as a lieutenant in the volunteer service of the Navy of the United States in settling and computing the amount of his pay as an officer of the regular naval service of the United States.

Mr. FORT and Mr. HOLMAN raised the point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Allow me to make a brief explanation of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve my point of order until the report is read, if there is one, or until some explanation is made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] reserves his point of order until the bill is explained.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I desire to state briefly——

Mr. FORT. I wish it to be distinctly understood this time that the point of order is entertained by the Chair as being made in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Had the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] been attending to what the Chair said, he would have heard him say that the point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] until an explanation of the bill was made.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. This bill is in behalf of an old and meritorious officer of the United States Navy. At the breaking out of the rebellion he was in the merchant service of the United States, commanding an ocean steamer. At the commencement of the war he resigned that place and tendered his services to the Government of the United States. He served through the war gallantly and meritoriously as a lieutenant in the United States Navy. At the close of the war, under a law passed by Congress, he in common with other volunteer officers of the Navy was mustered out of service. He was then appointed a master in the regular naval service of the United States. In computing his pay the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department gave him credit for the length of time he had served in the Navy during his term of service as a volunteer officer, and he drew pay for four or five years under that construction. Afterward a construction was given to the effect that he was not entitled to have the time computed and the additional pay allowed for length of service as a volunteer officer, and he was called upon to refund some three or four hundred dollars. In the mean time he had been placed on the retired list with the pay of a master of the Navy, having reached the age when by the law his retirement was required. This bill provides that the length of time which he served as a volunteer officer of the Navy shall be allowed by the officers of the Treasury Department determining the amount of pay to which he is entitled as a master in the Navy.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I wish to say a word to those gentlemen who are thinking of making a point of order upon this bill, if they still think of doing so. This is a little bill. The old gentleman came before the Committee on Naval Affairs; there was service in every lineament of the face, all over his body. Honesty of character was apparent in every feature. He is an old Scotchman. He obtained the good will of the whole committee. He had all the papers to show how this stoppage of his pay had occurred, until there was some three or four hundred dollars which was to be deducted from his small annual pay, until the full amount had been refunded. The committee unanimously agreed that it was the most deserving small case they had ever seen. And I am very sure that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had seen this old man as we saw him, they would never raise the point of order here, but allow him to receive his pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is the most unfortunate feature in attempting to pass this kind of bills, that those who are able to come here and approach members of Congress and committees of this House are very apt to get their claims through. No practice could be more unjust. The Government should administer not only its justice but its gratuities with even hand and impartially.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether the point of order has been made in this case or whether, like Mohammed's coffin, it is hanging between heaven and earth?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CLEMENTS] the Chair will state that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] having discussed the proposition before the House, the point of order raised by him is waived. The point of order indicated by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] if he insists upon it, is yet reserved, he not having discussed the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course I am fully aware that I waived the point of order, and I am doing so intentionally. My friend from Illinois has put himself to unnecessary trouble so far as I am concerned. I do not propose to insist upon my point of order.

But I desire to say that this case presents an illustration of an evil for which there seems to be no remedy. There are piled up in your committee-rooms thousands and thousands of claims just as meritorious as this; but the papers of which will never be looked into, simply because the claimants are not here in person to press their cases upon the attention of members. Those claimants who can do this enjoy a decided advantage over all others. The whole system by which we attempt to adjust these private claims against the Government is wrong. One of two things should be done: either we should let the decisions of our accounting officers in these cases be final, which is undoubtedly the safer course, or we should adopt some general system by which all classes of claims should be adjusted.

I have no doubt that this is a meritorious claim. I have no doubt that the period for which this officer had served ought to have been taken into account in determining his pay. But the same difficulty is found in cases arising in the Army as in the Navy. There are before your committees thousands of bills involving exactly the same principle; and wherever the claimants can by personal presentation of their cases secure for them the advocacy of gentlemen like my friend from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] their cases secure favorable consideration, while a large mass of cases equally meritorious remain in the committees with the papers never even opened.

I do not press the point of order, but waive it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] desire to raise a point of order?

Mr. FORT. So far as I am concerned I withdraw the point of order, after having heard the statement of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair now rules that the bill is properly before the House.

Mr. FORT. I wish to add that I agree with my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this ought not to be made an exceptional case. There ought to be a report put on record here and printed. Every gentleman desiring to get a bill through the House ought to go through that formality. I see no reason why the gentleman from Virginia should come in here and rush his bills through the House without any report. That is what I object to. I withdraw my point of order in reference to this particular case.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE H. COOPER.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3743) authorizing the President to appoint George H. Cooper, now a captain on the active list of the Navy, to be a commodore; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE WYOMING, ETC.

Mr. MYERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 782) for the relief of the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming and the Ta Kiang.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose that motion requires a two-thirds vote. It is a bill that ought not to pass at any rate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS,] it is that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be brought before the House for consideration. The adoption of this motion requires a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. This session being set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs, I submit that the subject-matter contemplated was reports to be made during this evening's session by that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that as this bill has already been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and is now upon the Private Calendar, it can properly be taken up by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be read before the question is put.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that the Secretary of State be, and he is thereby, authorized and directed to sell so many of the registered bonds of the United States, now under his control, belonging to the Japanese indemnity fund, as shall realize $[illegible]5,000, and shall pay the proceeds of the same to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall cause the whole amount thereof to be distributed among the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming, and officers and crew who manned the Ta Kiang on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September, 1864, the same to be distributed as sea pay to the officers and crew attached to the Wyoming, according to the pay-roll of said ship on the 16th day of July, 1863; and to the officers and crew detached from the United States ship Jamestown, and who manned the Ta Kiang, according to the pay-roll of said ship on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September, 1864; provided that the provisions of the act shall be held and taken to be in full satisfaction for all bounty, ransom, or prize-money, or claim therefor, on the part of the officers and crews aforesaid under any and all existing laws of the United States or regulations of the Navy Department, for the destruction of piratical vessels at Simoniseki, on the 6th day of July, 1863, and bombarding the forts erected at the Straits of Simoniseki, in September, 1864. And if any of the officers or crews aforesaid shall have received any bounty, ransom, or prize-money for the service aforesaid, the same shall be deducted from the amount to be paid such officer or seaman under the provisions of this act; and provided further, that no money shall be paid to any assignee of the mariner, but only to the mariner or his duly authorized attorney in fact, or in case of his decease, to his legal representatives, excluding any assignee.

The second section provides that the remainder of the Japanese indemnity fund is thereby covered into the Treasury of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury is thereby directed to cancel the bonds belonging to the said fund.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This is a bill which ought to be discussed. I hope it will not go through in this way without discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Mr. STORM demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. MYERS. I now withdraw the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and move to go in Committee of the Whole and take the bill up for consideration. I ask the privilege to make a few remarks.

I am hoarse to-night and hope I will have the indulgence of the House.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object, unless the same privilege be granted to the other side.

Mr. MYERS. I have no objection to that. I desire simply to say that this bill puts into the Treasury of the United States——

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object to debate.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I think objection ought to be made, and if no one else will do it I object.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The gentleman proposes to move to go into Committee of the Whole, and he will have every opportunity to discuss the bill. He will have the floor, and I hope he will not insist upon discussing the bill now.

Mr. MYERS. Then I move to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 52.

Mr. E. R. HOAR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MYERS, and Mr. WILLARD of Vermont were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 64.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. E. R. HOAR moved that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 55.

Mr. MYERS demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 108.

So (one-fifth of those present not having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and then (at nine o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 18, 1874

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

QUARTERMASTER'S CORPS.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

First. That the House of Representatives concur in Senate amendment number one.

Second. That the Senate recede from its amendment number two.

GEORGE E. SPENCER,
J. R. WEST,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHARLES ALBRIGHT,
J. W. NESMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I regret that this matter went to a committee of conference in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, because there was an agreement between the chairman of the Military Committee acting in behalf of those who desired the passage of this bill and myself as to these amendments, and it was stated by the chairman of the Military Committee to this body that there had been an agreement by which the matter was to be settled by these amendments. I hope that the chairman of the committee will return before the adjournment, in which case the matter can probably be made right. I move that the report be laid on the table.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that will not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the report of the committee of conference be laid on the table.

The Chair put the question, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I ask for the yeas and nays. I will state that I will call up the report again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable. Those who sustain the call for the yeas and nays will rise.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table, and move that the further consideration of the report be postponed.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Does not a single objection carry it over, it being a report made this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a report from a conference committee, not from a standing committee.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to postpone the report until Saturday.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope it will not be postponed. I cannot conceive what there is in this bill to object to. It merely places a man correctly on the records of the Army as he ought to be. The law a few years ago was violated, and this bill puts him back where he belongs on the roll of the Army.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand, this is a conference committee's report. It is usual for the Senate to take up such reports when presented, and I see no reason why this one should be postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the report.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a short time to the questions involved in this bill. This bill provides that William Myers shall stand upon the Army Register for promotion No. 5 instead of No. 12 on the list of majors in the Quartermaster-General's Department, as he now stands. That is, he is advanced over James Belger, James M. Moore, M. J. Ludington, R. N. Batchelder, Joseph A. Potter, James J. Dana, and Charles G. Sawtelle, whose commissions bear date before his. He says that when he was placed in his present position that was a degradation of him. Now, if this bill passes it will be a degradation of those whom I have named. I desire to state to the Senate, as I proposed to do before the agreement between the chairman of the Military Committee and myself, the facts and the law bearing upon this matter.

Mr. President, in 1866, upon the re-establishment of the Army, an act was passed which made an increase in the Quartermaster's Department, as follows: Those holding the rank of colonel in the Quartermaster-General's Department were increased from three to six, making three vacancies to be filled; the lieutenant-colonels were increased from four to ten, making six vacancies to be filled; the majors were increased from eight to fifteen, making seven vacancies to be filled; and it was provided in the same act that there should be forty-four officers in that department holding the rank of captain, and that the vacancies created by that act, whether by promotion or otherwise, should be filled from the volunteer forces according to merit. That left the vacancies created by the act in those holding the rank of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major to be filled according to the Army Regulations. The Army Regulation in force at that time in regard to promotions was as follows:

All vacancies in established regiments and corps to the rank of colonel shall be filled by promotion according to seniority, except in case of disability or other incompetency.

The construction put upon that Army regulation by Secretary Stanton, by General Grant who was then the General of the Armies, and by the President of the United States, was that the vacancies created by the act in the rank of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major could be filled by the President by selection either from the regular Army or from the volunteers, and that those vacancies were not to be filled by promotion.

The view of the law which they took and the view of the law which I take is this: that by "established regiments and corps" is meant regiments and corps which have had their full quota of officers appointed, and that so long as a regiment or corps has not had its full quota of officers appointed, all the officers appointed to it which the law demands, so long it is unestablished and unorganized. For illustration, suppose that a new regiment was provided for by law, and suppose that all the offices in that regiment up to company A had been filled by appointment; the captain and the other officers in company A in that regiment of ten companies are yet to be appointed; those appointments are not to be made by promotion, because until the officers are all appointed the regiment is not established, it is not organized; it is only partially established and partially organized. But when those offices have once been filled, then the regiment has been established, and all vacancies created thereafter must be filled by promotion.

When the act of 1866 provided for the re-establishment of the Quartermaster's Corps and went into effect, the corps was not established and not organized until the number of officers which it had by law had been appointed. It was only partially established and partially organized until that time. It was an organized corps, it was an established corps, until this act went into effect providing that it should consist of a certain number of officers; but when the act went into effect and there were vacancies created by the act, then the corps as an established corps was a different corps. It was only partially organized and partially established; and until those offices had been filled which were created by the act it was not established and not organized in the sense of the Army regulation which I have read. That was the view taken of the law by Secretary Stanton; it was the view of the law taken by General Grant, then General of the Armies; it was the view of the law taken by the President of the United States. Taking that view of the law, they appointed to fill some of the vacancies in the office of colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major in the Quartermaster's Corps men from the volunteer forces of the United States who had distinguished themselves by meritorious services. Who were the men thus appointed? The object of this measure is to provide by this bill and others to follow it (because the amendment which is now rejected was simply providing that after this bill passed matters should remain as they were) that those who held office in the Quartermaster's Department in the regular Army before the war shall outrank all those who have been appointed from the volunteer service. I have in my hand a book——

Mr. WEST. I do not think that statement of the Senator ought to go unchallenged. This bill only refers to one officer.

Mr. WADLEIGH. But the amendment agreed upon by the chairman of the Military Committee and myself provided that this should go no further. That was agreed to solemnly, and it was agreed that this should be an end of the matter. But this conference committee have struck out that amendment which confined it to this officer, and left the matter open so that other officers may come in and ask the same thing.

As I was saying, I hold in my hand a book entitled "The School and the Army," by Brevet Major-General W. B. Hazen, United States Army. He goes on to speak of the staff officers of the regular Army at the time the war broke out, and of the necessity of keeping up a staff organization in the regular Army. He says:

> It cannot be said that it is necessary to keep up this organization for use in war, for it then at once fails, and each Army and corps commander is compelled to organize his own departments, as these officers have been found to be unfitted by their routine lives for service in the field. Any one who know the working staff of Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, remembers that they were made up of young, active civilians. The busy commercial life and experience of the nation is its strongest arm, and is what it must inevitably depend upon in time of war to supply the wants of its Armies.

Mr. President, what this bill proposes is simply that the men who came in, as that book says, and did the work of the war, the men in whose favor the law was construed in 1866, are now to be made by the action of Congress to stand back and give place to those men who were found upon the breaking out of the war unfit to perform the duties of their positions. They are to be degraded and set aside for the men who were found to be totally unfit to perform those duties, according to this military writer, and whose duties were performed by these men from the volunteer service who received appointments in 1866, which appointments it is now claimed were illegal and invalid.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether General Myers did not perform a good deal of service and very efficient service during the war?

Mr. WADLEIGH. As I said before, I do not undertake to say that Captain Myers did not perform efficient service.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. He was a general of volunteers, I believe.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I do not undertake to say and did not say that; but he performed no more efficient service than those men performed who it is now claimed shall be displaced for him. I say further that it was agreed between the chairman of the Military Committee, acting in behalf of Mr. Myers, and myself, that this bill should pass with a section that the Quartermaster-General's Corps, after this promotion, should remain as it is. That amendment has been struck out by the conference committee, and it is upon that that I am speaking.

Mr. WEST. The Senator says that under that statute volunteer officers were promoted. I ask him if he does not know that under that statute four regular officers were promoted and four volunteers, so that justice was done to each branch of the service? Does he know that fact or not?

Mr. WADLEIGH. Certainly I know it, and that strengthens my argument. Now, Mr. President, it is proposed not only to do that as against these volunteers, but it is proposed by this bill to make a discrimination against those men who entered the regular Army from civil life in favor of the men who came into the regular Army before the war from the Military Academy. I find as one of the men who are to be degraded, as this Mr. Myers calls it, by this bill is James Belger who went into the regular Army in 1838 and has served ever since.

Mr. WEST. No; the Senator is mistaken. He was suspended three years.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I find he was appointed from the Army and not from the Military Academy. The only ground on which it is claimed that this bill should pass is that under the Army regulation which I have read it was illegal to appoint Colonel Batchelder and the other officers to the places which they now hold. What I have to say in regard to that matter is simply this: that the Army Regulations of 1857 and 1863 were simply a revision of the Army Regulations which had been in use before that time from 1813 down to 1857. If any member of the Senate will turn to the Army Regulations of 1857 and 1863, he will find that they are entitled the "Revised Army Regulations," and to the lawyers in this body I need not say that the rule for the construction of a statute revised is, that it shall not be presumed that any change is made or intended unless the statute as revised clearly shows that such was the intention. This revised army regulation does not show that. It provides, as I said, that promotions in established regiments and corps are to be made by seniority; but the view I take, and the view taken by Secretary Stanton and by everybody else in 1866, was that the new Quartermaster's Corps provided for by the law of that year was not established when the act went into effect until its offices had been filed.

Again, another familiar rule of law for the construction of statutes is that the contemporaneous construction, the construction put upon them at the time they were passed and the construction which has long been given to them, shall be held to be the proper construction. Now what is the case in regard to this law of 1866? Very soon after the passage of the law, the President of the United States sent in by the advice of the Secretary of War, Hon. E. M. Stanton, these appointments. At that time this question of law was fully considered by them. It was under discussion. These gentlemen were there and presented their claim to Secretary Stanton, and all those who had part in those appointments and in the confirmation of them decided that it was legal to make the appointments in the way they were made, and gave a construction of the law of 1866 which has prevailed till now; and what I say is that this statute, having been so construed by the President of the United States and by the Secretary of War in 1866 in making these appointments and by the confirmation of the appointments by the very Senate that helped pass the act, that should now be held to be the true construction and we should not come in after this lapse of time, upon the petition of Major Myers or anybody else, to decide that the construction put upon the act at that time was wrong and that whatever was done at that time in the way it was done was illegal.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from New Hampshire is familiar with this subject. Let me ask him, does the Attorney-General of the United States hold to that construction of the law?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I was about coming to that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Did he not dissent from that conclusion?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I will say what I am going to say about that in one moment. I have stated the way this matter stood in 1866. The gentlemen, to whom that decision of the President, of the Secretary of War, and of the Senate at that time was distasteful, in 1872 proceeded to procure a reversal of that action; and—I state it upon authority—there was procured from a subordinate in the Attorney-General's office an opinion as to the illegality of the proceedings under the law of 1866. I am informed further that that opinion was not made up by the Attorney-General; and I am further informed, although I do not know how that is, that if this matter was brought to the Attorney-General and he himself gave an opinion, the opinion of his subordinate in 1872, which he signed without due consideration, would be reversed.

That was not all that was done, Mr. President. After this opinion was procured these gentlemen, Mr. Myers and the rest, went before a committee of the Senate; they represented that what they sought to obtain was perfectly satisfactory to Colonel Batchelder and the officers whom they sought to outrank and degrade, the men who had won their places by their services in the war. Upon that representation the committee of the Senate reported in favor of the bill and it went to the House committee. A full hearing was had before the House committee, notice being given to those who were to be affected by the action of Congress, and that committee unanimously reported against a bill similar to this or any bill of this kind.

Then they claimed that if Congress would only pass a bill giving them the rank of major and putting them precisely where they are now that should be a final settlement of this whole matter. I made this statement the other day in the Senate, when the chairman of the Military Committee was present, and no contradiction was made of it. I am authorized to state that these gentlemen agreed that that should be all they would ask, that that should be a compromise which should stand; and if any member of the Senate will turn to what was said at the time the bill which gave them the rank they now hold was passed, he will find confirmation of what I say in this respect.

Understanding that that was to be a compromise and was to be an end of this matter, those gentlemen whom it is now sought to degrade stepped aside and allowed that bill to pass. Two years have passed since then. Now comes up this Mr. Myers again, and again asks that the action of the President, of the Secretary of War, and of the Senate in 1866 shall be reversed as illegal. That was objected to by the parties who are to be affected and degraded by it. They are not here to object personally; they were not here as was Major Myers in Washington spending his winter and importuning Senators and members of the House to go for his bill; they were not here upon leave of absence working in the lobby of Congress to obtain the passage of laws favorable to them. A gentleman who is affected by this bill, who came from my State, is in Oregon attending to his arduous duties; others are far away; but Mr. Myers is here, where he can see members of Congress, where he can importune them, where he can bring to bear upon them the social influences which sometimes affect legislation in this body. Accordingly he has procured this bill to be brought in. Objection was made to it, as I have said; and objection was made to it not only that to promote him over the heads of those men whose appointments predated him would degrade them, as he says it was degrading to him to put them over him in 1866, but that this bill was only the precursor of many others of a similar character; and it was proposed by the chairman of the Military Committee himself that the second amendment which this conference committee strikes out should be put upon this bill, so that after the passage of this bill matters in the Quartermaster's Department should be settled. I agreed to that compromise; and members of the Senate will remember that when the chairman of the Military Committee presented the bill to the Senate he stated that there had been an agreement by which all matters in conflict had been adjusted. With that section put on by that agreement this bill passed the Senate, and now the committee of conference have struck out the section which was inserted by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, which prevents further action of this kind in regard to other cases, so that the whole status of the Quartermaster General's Department may be upset by future legislation, so that other men may come in here and claim that they should be put over the heads of the officers who were appointed from the volunteer service. I hope that this Senate is not prepared to take action of that kind and that the bill will not pass in this shape.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I understand this case to be simply this: General Myers, when the Quartermaster's Corps was increased, was a captain and entitled to be a major. President Johnson appointed his juniors over him. The Attorney-General has decided, and we have his written opinion, that that was an illegal proceeding, that the appointment should have been made according to seniority. Now, General Myers does not alter the grade of any one whom he passes over. If they are majors they remain majors, and if colonels they remain colonels. The bill only alters his file, as they call it, in the majority. This was an illegal proceeding, as the Attorney-General tells us, performed by President Johnson. General Myers was a most efficient man during the war; he had the charge of the quartermaster's department in the valley of the Mississippi, and no one rendered more efficient service. I hope the report will be concurred in.

Mr. SPENCER. I have nothing to say in addition to what the Senator from New Jersey has said. He has stated the case fully. I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

JOHN SCOTT,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ELLIS H. ROBERTS,
L. A. SHELDON,
FERNANDO WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to this report?

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask a question about the report. It is almost impossible to tell from the reading of the report at the desk what was done with the details of this bill. I should like to know what was done with reference to the amendment providing for imprisonment as the alternative punishment for a violation of the revenue laws, which was inserted in the bill by the Senate after consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. The report having been printed and upon the tables of the members for the last two days, I did not propose to say anything in explanation of it in detail, unless as called for. The provision to which the Senator refers is retained in the bill, and the imprisonment, which was inserted, if I recollect aright, upon his motion, still remains just as it was.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to make another inquiry of the Senator. The Senate fixed the compensation of the collectors of New York, Boston, and San Francisco at $8,000, considering that an equitable adjustment on account of the lost moieties, but did not attempt to fix the salaries of these officers in Philadelphia and other places. Now I find that San Francisco, which was so arranged by both Houses, is struck out and put in at a lower rate and Philadelphia is put in at a rate above San Francisco and even with New York. There seems to have been a fatherly care over the port of Philadelphia, which I think the Senator is entitled to full credit for; but I should like to have some intelligible reason why San Francisco was degraded in order that Philadelphia might be considered and raised.

Mr. SCOTT. Adopting the suggestion of the Senator from California, I have no blushes over the paternity of Philadelphia or fatherly care over it; and I give him credit for exercising the same over San Francisco.

Mr. SARGENT. I did not have the advantage of being on the committee of conference.

Mr. SCOTT. I have the floor now, and I hope the Senator will let me answer his question.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to make one remark, and then I shall not interrupt him again?

Mr. SCOTT. I want to answer the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to make one remark. Yesterday when the Senator was speaking and I asked him one or two questions I thought he was impatient, and so stated. Immediately afterward, when I had the floor, he interrupted me several times, but I listened to him with great patience.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator is either very reckless in the use of language which grates upon the feelings of other Senators, or he has intentions which are calculated to arouse feeling in the Senate. Yesterday when I was charged with an insidious design I did betray that kind of feeling which is in my nature upon being charged with anything that is underhanded or covert. If the Senator sees proper now to refer to what occurred upon an entirely different bill, I simply say to him that I extend to him as to every member of the Senate the utmost courtesy in interruption. I am always glad when it is done in such a spirit as shows that it springs from a desire to be courteous and fair or to elicit information; but I cannot help it, when questions are put to me in such a manner as to convey imputations, if I answer them as I think they deserve.

The Senator put an inquiry to me, and when I was in the midst of answering, he interrupted me for the purpose of putting another or for interjecting an argument. Now I will come to his inquiry, and I trust that hereafter there will be no occasion for this manifestation of feeling which somehow or other seems to be an inseparable incident to every interruption the Senator from California seeks to make.

Mr. SARGENT. Thank you.

Mr. SCOTT. It is not my fault, Mr. President. I disavow any intention of being discourteous or unkind or intemperate to any member of the body, and I do not think there is anything in my manner that is calculated to warrant such an imputation.

The Senator asks me why it is that the salary of the collector at San Francisco is placed at $7,000. This is the reason: when the bill was in the Senate certain amendments were made, fixing the salaries of these officers at New York, Boston, and perhaps San Francisco; I am not certain; three or four ports at all events. When the bill went back to the House, upon a motion made there, Philadelphia was inserted at $8,000.

When the question came into the conference committee I myself raised the question whether we had jurisdiction over other ports than those that had been named in the House and in the Senate. I had my view about that and of our powers as a conference committee; but a large majority of the conference committee, older parliamentarians than I am, were so decided about it that we had power over the whole subject of salary at all the ports named in the bill, that all these were taken up, and the object was to classify these ports so that the reduction might be made to extend in some degree with the effect of this bill on the moieties. The consequence is that Boston, which last year had about $48,000, is fixed at $8,000 for the collector. New York, which had not much more than Boston, is now fixed at $12,000. Philadelphia was classified with Boston, owing to the view that was taken of the business at that port. San Francisco was placed along with two others at $7,000. There is no reduction of the salary at San Francisco. The salary proper is now fixed at $6,000. This report puts it at $7,000. The moieties were $2,000, if I recollect rightly, at the port of San Francisco, while at New York and Boston they were in the one case $30,000 and in the other $40,000.

Mr. WEST. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania why he has put New Orleans at $7,000 and Philadelphia at $8,000? I ask him further what is the relative amount of duties collected at Philadelphia in proportion to the amount collected at New Orleans?

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot answer the Senator in figures; but I can say that subject was discussed and with a member of the conference committee from the district of New Orleans this result was acquiesced in as altogether right and proper.

Mr. WEST. I will ask one more question. Is not the amount of duty and revenue derived from the custom-house at New Orleans largely in excess of what it is in Philadelphia?

Mr. SCOTT. My impression is that it is not. My recollection of the figures is that the imports into the port of New Orleans for last year were stated, whether correctly or not, at twenty-three or twenty-four millions; those into the port of Philadelphia at twenty-nine millions. The exports may have been much larger from New Orleans, as doubtless they were, than from Philadelphia; but this arrangement of salaries was made after a very full conference among members of the committee, and I do not now remember that there was any disagreement on the subject.

Now, Mr. President, I have replied to the question put to me, and I wish to say, lest there may be any misapprehension on this subject, that I should be glad to have any question put to me with reference to any subject of this bill that I am able to answer. I do not wish by anything that has occurred to convey the idea to any Senator, not even to the Senator from California, that I have any disinclination to answer his questions.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to say one word with the permission of the Senator from California and the Senator from Pennsylvania. This amendment is not an amendment of the Senate. By looking at the bill as it passed the Senate, it will be found that Philadelphia was not among the enumerated ports at all, and the Senator from Pennsylvania is not in any way responsible for the first insertion of that amendment or the classification of the ports. The Senate will remember that the House struck out, on page 15 of the original bill, Senate amendment No. 44. The House therefore struck out all in regard to the salaries at the port of New York and some other places; but Philadelphia was not enumerated in that amendment at all. The proposition which we accepted was a proposition from the House, and I may say to the Senator from Louisiana—it is not improper to say it—that on that committee was a gentleman from the State of Louisiana, representing the city of New Orleans, I think, Mr. SHELDON. The proposition we now find before us came from the House, and came from a committee, a very active and prominent member of which was Mr. SHELDON, a Representative of Louisiana in the other House. It was not the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that placed Philadelphia in one category and New Orleans and San Francisco in another. Therefore when the Senator from California supposes that there was anything like a "paternal care" in respect to that, I beg leave to say to him, as I may, that the proposition classifying Philadelphia with San Francisco and Boston was a House proposition which the Senate conferees agreed to. We know that in all these cases of disagreement between the two Houses it is necessary for each House to yield something.

Mr. SARGENT. San Francisco is not classed with Philadelphia and Boston. There is just the mistake made here.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is only a matter of five hundred or one thousand dollars.

Mr. SARGENT. No matter whether the money involved is only five hundred or one thousand dollars, it is a very important matter. I was speaking of San Francisco. The Senate fixed the salary there at the same rate as New York and Boston, as it should be, considering the amount of revenue that passes through the hands of the collector there. I asked why San Francisco was degraded, not why Philadelphia was put in? If I had wanted to know why Philadelphia was put in I would not ask the Senator from Pennsylvania. I read in the Philadelphia North American within one week a most boisterous and insulting article against the delegation in both Houses of Congress from Pennsylvania, because they allowed Philadelphia to be left out, and a call was made on the citizens of the State to send somebody here who would attend to the interests of the State and of the port of Philadelphia, and not allow them to be overslaughed in this way. I think it was an insulting article. I supposed that of course it would call the attention of the Senators and members from that State to the proposition, and the natural relief would be furnished and Philadelphia would be put in the proper place. I do not object to where you put Philadelphia in, but I do object to degrading the third port in the collection of revenues down below the fourth, down to a point below where the Senate put it.

The Senator asks me why I did not attend to it. I did keep a supervision over it while the bill was before the Senate; I was attending to it all the time; but in the committee of conference, where there was no representative from the Pacific coast, it was stricken down. That is what I object to. I say it was unfair, unkind, unjust to those officers, unjust to the Pacific coast; and remember, sir, it was not a proposition made by either House. The House of Representatives had not acted on it except by a general non-concurrence in the Senate amendments; but Philadelphia, which the Senate had not covered, was put in by the conference committee, and put in over San Francisco, and San Francisco was pulled down. I think that is a matter of legitimate comment, even though the actual amount of money may be but five hundred or a thousand dollars a year.

One other remark and I have done. This is not a matter of feeling between the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself at all. I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that these cities have changed places; that was all. The Senator from Pennsylvania seems determined to consider, because my manner is somewhat earnest, that I am discourteous. I asked him a question and he replied, "Why did not the Senator attend to it." I rejoined that I was not on the committee of conference. He seemed to take offense at that, because I injected it into his explanation. I then reminded him that yesterday—and the RECORD bears me out—when he was proceeding to make a statement, I asked him a question or two; and it seemed to me he was impatient of questions; so much so that I said to him, "I am sorry the Senator is impatient of questions; I will not interrupt him again until he gets through with his speech;" and I did not interrupt him further. But, sir, I had hardly commenced my remarks in reply to him when the Senator rose and asked to be heard. I listened to him for three or four minutes until he got through and sat down. I then replied to what he said. Almost immediately he rose and interrupted me again, as the RECORD shows. I listened to him patiently and replied. You will find four or five interruptions of that kind in the midst of my speech, and there was no occasion for the Senator to show any impatience of interruption. I believe I have always been particularly careful and courteous to my brother Senators in this regard. Whenever any one has risen to ask a question or call my attention to anything, I have yielded immediately, or just as soon as I could finish my sentence. That courtesy I will extend to the Senator from Pennsylvania on all occasions, and I will always endeavor not to encroach on his rights or to be discourteous to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is House bill No. 2797, making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope this moiety bill will be disposed of now. There will be no further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move to postpone the present and all prior orders until this conference report is disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee on House bill No. 3171, known as the moiety bill.

Mr. HAGER. As I understand it the port of New York ranks first in point of dignity of revenues; Boston, I believe, is second; and San Francisco is third. Now, it seems to me the proper way to graduate the salaries would be in accordance with the amount of revenue that is obtained for the Government in the particular ports. I presume the duties are exalted just in proportion to the amount of revenue that is yielded to the Government; and why Philadelphia should be exalted over Baltimore and San Francisco I have heard no reason expressed here even by the Senator from Pennsylvania. He says it is in consequence of the abolition of the moiety system that has heretofore prevailed. Perhaps they are not as sharp on moieties in San Francisco and Baltimore as they are in Philadelphia; but I cannot see that that has any relation or bearing on the question. The abolition of moieties will apply to every port, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and all of them alike. I see no reason why Philadelphia should be selected and placed in the position that it occupies here with a salary above San Francisco and Baltimore, which rank higher in point of revenue than Philadelphia. There can be no reason for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from California. I know he is decidedly in favor of the passage of this bill. Here is a report of a committee of conference which there is no opportunity to amend. The only way in which this report can be amended is by disagreeing to it and asking for another conference. The matter now under discussion affects the salary of the collector of customs at San Francisco $500. We had better make up the amount in the Senate and send it to him rather than postpone the passage of this bill by such a discussion.

Mr. HAGER. That may be; but I think every Senator has a right to put his protest on record to show the injustice in the arrangement of the bill. It may stand on the record for future legislation at all events. If it has no effect on the present legislation it may at a future period show the injustice done by the arrangement that has been made here without any regard to actualities.

But, sir, I do not suppose I can change this matter; neither did I expect to speak on this subject; but when such discriminations are made as have been made here, I do not think it is anything more than right that they should be pointed out before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. They can be corrected at any time.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I was not able to agree to the report of the committee, and did not sign it, and shall not be able to vote for it in the Senate. I did not vote for this bill when it passed the Senate the other day. I was one of the three, I believe, in the Senate who voted against the passage of the bill. I shall vote against the adoption of this report. When I voted against the bill the other day in the Senate I really did not understand it very thoroughly. I had not then had an opportunity to examine it very closely. I had run over it; I had scrutinized some features of it; I had a very strong impression as to the effect of the bill; and it was because of that impression that I was induced to vote against it. Since then I have examined the bill more carefully, and those impressions are strengthened. The bill which passed the Senate the other day, in my judgment to-day, was a worse bill than I then thought, and I then thought it a very bad bill. The bill which you are asked to sanction to-day is a worse bill than that you did sanction the other day. The changes which have been brought about by the negotiations of your conference committee have lessened rather than strengthened the efficiency of the hill. That is my judgment.

I said the other day that I thought it was a profound mistake for you now to repeal the whole moiety system, and I thought it was a profound mistake for you to preclude the Government from all opportunity, all possibility of obtaining information as to misconduct from the books of the merchants themselves. I said I thought the effect of these two provisions would be to go very far to prevent honest importations of foreign merchandise. I believed that under the operation of those two provisions your duties must be diminished; I believed your importations must be increased; I believed that home productions and home industry must be crippled by being further exposed to the influence of foreign competition. If I shall find myself, after a year or two, mistaken in these anticipations, I shall be glad; but if the near future should verify these predictions of mine, I hope the Senator from Ohio and other Senators on this floor who have been so very active in the passage of this bill will take notice of the fact, and I hope they will then be ready to tender a remedy.

Mr. President, I have heard it said repeatedly that these changes were demanded by the importing merchants of our cities. While the bill was under debate here the other day the testimony of one of the largest of these importers, Mr. A. T. Stewart, was read. I understand that testimony to be flatly against the provisions of this bill. Since that time the Senator from Ohio has placed in my hands the testimony of another importer, the firm of Messrs. E. D. Morgan & Co., merchants well known to the people of New York, well known to the Senate. It is very evident to me that the Senate does not care much what E. D. Morgan & Co. may have to say. That is manifest from the whole attitude of the Senate. But I think it due to them and perhaps due to the country that what they have said should be made known, should be placed upon record, so that hereafter if Congress shall be compelled in the interest of the revenue to take this statute from the books, if hereafter Senators shall plead, "Why, we were simply answering a demand made by the importing merchants of the country," it shall be known that E. D. Morgan & Co. were not among those merchants who made that demand; and therefore I propose to read what Messrs. E. D. Morgan & Co. have to say on this subject. The letter is addressed to the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, dated New York, May 20, 1864:

DEAR SIR: We desire to call your attention to the danger which we apprehend from a change in the existing laws for the protection of the revenue. Any laws less effectual in restraining fraud in the importation of merchandise will surely work to the detriment not only of the revenue, but to that of honest importers. If there are errors in the existing laws, let them be corrected; but do not abate in any way their efficacy. If, for example, the laws now in existence should be altered so that reference to three merchants, to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, could be made before any action against any accused party is commenced, it could hardly fail to be satisfactory to all parties concerned.

We have in past years, in common with many others, been severe sufferers by fraud in the importation of sugars, and we were obliged almost entirely to withdraw from that business for a period of two or three years; and we therefore write with a full knowledge of the subject.

Very truly, yours,

E. D. MORGAN & CO.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to state that the difficulty of which they complained grew out of the classification of sugars and is not affected by this moiety question in any way. We changed the classification to meet that difficulty. The duty on sugar was specific, but the classification being upon the Dutch standard, a rather uncertain standard because of the change in the habits of sugar dealers, a difficulty grew up. That has been corrected, so that I believe there is no controversy in regard to the business these gentlemen are engaged in. The moiety question does not affect them at all, as I understand.

Mr. HOWE. They are under the impression that the moiety question does affect them. They know that the only protection an honest importer has is in efficient laws energetically enforced, and they tell you, "Amend your laws but do not make them less efficacious." That is what these merchants say; and yet in the face and eyes of that protest from men who do not want to cheat the Treasury and do not want to be cheated in their business, here is a long bill which in my judgment from beginning to end makes your laws less efficacious, makes the securities to the revenues less than they are now, makes the protection to honest importers less than it now is.

Mr. President, I have not had the opportunity yet of hearing it explained on this floor—perhaps it has been explained but not when I was present—why it is thought necessary at this day to withdraw from everybody all inducement to watch over the action of your customs officers and the action of your importers. I have not heard any one explain yet how the Government or how honesty in business suffers because you offer large inducements to men to detect and to expose fraudulent dealings with the revenue. I shall be glad to hear that explained. I have heard a great deal said in a declamatory way about the infamy of informers and about the general demoralization that comes from moieties. What the illustrations are I have not heard and I do not know. I have heard declamation here over and over again about honest merchants being pursued and hunted down, mistakes taken advantage of by informers in order to enforce penalties. What are the instances? Has that been done, or has it not? How many cases are found in your records in which honest importers have suffered from their mistakes or suffered through the malignity of your informers as you call them, your special agents? I have not heard of one. There may be many.

Mr. President, I have heard the special agents of the Treasury denounced. The other day one of them, a Mr. Jayne, was arraigned here. Later than that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] introduced another, a namesake of my own, Colonel Howe. I do not know but that both these men are great rascals; but I think it would be simply fair when their names are introduced here, when their official conduct is arraigned, to state what their misconduct is. They are not here to defend themselves and I think the least that could be done is to state what their offenses are, and I think this should be observed more especially because they were in service, when they were in service, under the direction of your Secretary of the Treasury, under his control. Did any complaint ever come from any quarter of the country to the Secretary of the Treasury of their misconduct? If so, did he listen to it, or was he deaf to it? If I had been Secretary of the Treasury and heard these men, subordinates of mine, denounced as they have been denounced on this floor, I should feel as if a great wrong were done me, the head of the service. It was unquestionably the business of the Secretary of the Treasury to have corrected these wrongs, to have righted these abuses if they were complained of. If they were not complained of to him, I should regard it as very strong evidence that they did not exist; that the abuses were fictions, not facts.

But, Mr. President, I did not mean to say as much as this upon the question of moieties, upon the question of the seizure of books and papers. There are other features of this bill which did not attract my attention the other day, and on which I wish to make a word of comment.

A good deal has been said upon the point that the penalties for frauds and wrongs against the revenue laws provided in this bill are less than the penalties in the existing law. I do not care so much about that myself. The penalties in this bill are enough if you will enforce them. The features in this bill that I complain of is not so much that the penalties are not severe enough, but that those penalties never will be enforced for two reasons. One is that you have made the law so loose that it cannot be enforced if your officers do not want to enforce them; and the other and the stronger reason, if possible, is that you have instructed the country by this bill that the officer who undertakes to enforce your revenue laws becomes infamous in doing so that he is an offender against public sentiment, that you do not mean to have your mercantile community interfered with; they must be respected, whatever becomes of the revenue. I should be entirely content with these penalties if you would give us some reason to hope that these penalties would be enforced.

Mr. President, while I have almost been touched to see the exhibition of sympathy here in the Senate for those poor importers who have been made to pay enormous fines, heavy penalties, simply for cheating the Government of the United States out of its revenue, I am glad to see that the Senate does not mean to take sides with all sorts of rascality. There are some offenses, it is evident to me from this bill, that the Senate is willing to see punished. It has given us an example. Here is one section of the bill—I read it by way of contrast—which declares:

That any owner, importer, consignee, agent, or other person who shall, with intent to defraud the revenue, make, or attempt to make, any entry of imported merchandise by means of any fraudulent or false invoice, affidavit, letter, or paper, or by means of any false statement, written or verbal, or who shall be guilty of any willful act or omission by means whereof the United States shall be deprived of the lawful duties, or any portion thereof, accruing upon the merchandise, or any portion thereof, embraced or referred to in such invoice, affidavit, letter, paper, or statement, or affected by such act or omission, shall for each offense be fined in any sum not exceeding five thousand dollars nor less than fifty dollars, or be imprisoned for any time not exceeding two years, or both.

And in addition to that the goods so brought in shall be forfeited or the package in which the item is shall be forfeited. You know, Mr. President, how severe the struggle was to provide any imprisonment whatever for any possible offense against the revenue laws. The Senate put it in; the House would not agree to it. The conference committee, as I understand, finally kept it in by putting equivalent provisions in the bill, which make it very certain in my judgment that nobody will ever be imprisoned, because nobody will ever be convicted under this law.

But here is another crime which this law points out. Here is a crime that the Senate means to set its foot upon; here is a crime that the Senate means to crush out. What is it?

It shall not be lawful—

Says the section—

It shall not be lawful for any officer of customs, special agent, or district attorney to compromise or settle any claim of the United States arising under the customs laws, or relieve from any fine, penalty, or forfeiture; and any officer or person who shall so compromise or settle any such claim, or attempt to make such compromise or settlement, or relieve or attempt to relieve from such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, shall be guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall suffer imprisonment not exceeding ten years and be fined not exceeding $10,000.

And after all that thundering the section concludes:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with general regulations, to be prescribed by him, not in conflict with existing laws nor with the provisions of this act, may remit any fines, penalties, or forfeitures upon sufficient proof that there was no intention of fraud or willful neglect upon the part of such person or persons against whom such fines, penalties, or forfeitures shall have accrued, or on the part of his or their agent or agents.

That is not precisely the way in which the provision stands in the bill agreed to by the conference committee. I see here a late Secretary of the Treasury. I should like to know whether the offense denounced in this section has ever been committed, or how many times it has been committed during his administration of the Treasury Department to his knowledge.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Never, to my knowledge, at all.

Mr. HOWE. I hear the Senator from Massachusetts, the late Secretary of the Treasury, say that that offense against which you are careful to pronounce ten years' imprisonment and $10,000 of fine was never committed to his knowledge; and yet you ask the Senate to get up bristling with indignation at a crime which never has been committed, while the whole power of Congress is invoked here to tone down, to smooth the way for these great overtowering rascalities which are committed daily and repeated daily in every port of the country where goods are received from abroad.

Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate to another feature of this bill. I said that the House of Representatives had manifested its evident hostility to allowing any penalties, even so mild as those mentioned in the twelfth section, to be retained in this bill. It seems the conference committee, however, has agreed to keep them there; but I find another amendment which went to the House, to which the House did not agree, from which the Senate committee seems to have receded. The Senate struck out the sixteenth section of the bill as it passed this body, that section which declared that the question of guilty intent or fraudulent intent should be submitted to the jury not merely as a question of fact necessarily included in the definition of the offense to be tried, but that it should be submitted to the jury as a separate and distinct issue. The Senate struck out that section. I find that the conference committee has concluded to retain the section. That becomes very significant, and I think very important when you look at it in connection with a previous section of the bill. The eighth section of this bill declares that a person entitled to compensation as an informer under the provisions of the bill shall not be disqualified as a witness on the trial of the cause because of that interest in the recovery; but it declares that if the Government does put the informer on the stand and examine him as a witness, the defendant himself shall have the right to testify.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will my colleague allow me to call his attention to that section as now remodeled? It first allows the informer shall testify; and then added to that is a substantial substantive provision:

And in every such case—

That is, "any action, suit, or proceeding for the recovery, mitigation, or remission" of the forfeitures provided for by this act—

And in every such case the defendant or defendants may appear and testify and be examined and cross-examined in like manner.

Mr. HOWE. I am much obliged to my colleague. I had not read the section as it is printed in the bill submitted to us from the conference committee. I think my colleague is clearly right that in every case under this law the defendant has a right to take the stand himself and be sworn as a witness in the cause, not merely a witness as to what he has done or not done, but a witness upon that separate distinct issue as to whether he did it fraudulently or not with the actual intent to defraud, about which he is the only being on earth who can speak with positive knowledge, and you have furnished no process here by which you can bring witnesses from any other place. He is the only witness who can speak with positive knowledge; and if he will take the stand and swear "Yes, I did this; I received this cargo on such a day, and I presented to the custom-house in which the goods were appraised so and so; I had another invoice sent me which is entered in my books and on which I sold the goods; but then this was all the result of a mistake; I was misled by my correspondent in Liverpool or Birmingham or elsewhere; it was a mistake;" and if he swears to that, what jury would venture to say not merely that that defendant is guilty and shall pay a fine, but that he is guilty of perjury as well?

Mr. President, that is all I care to say on that point. Now I wish to call the attention of the Senate for one moment to the question of salaries. I do not care much about them. I hear the Senators from California complain that the salary provided for the collector of the port of San Francisco is less than it ought to be in comparison with the salaries provided for the collectors of other ports. I cannot explain that unless the explanation is found in the fact that the representation from California could not do much to secure the passage of this bill, while the representatives from Eastern States were more numerous and could do more. I do not believe, however, that consideration affected the action of the members of this House. I do not say anything about members of the other House. I want to add my testimony right here to the testimony of the Senator from Delaware that if there is anything wrong in the discrimination made between the port of Philadelphia and the port of San Francisco, the Senator from Pennsylvania who sits on my left [Mr. SCOTT] is not responsible for that wrong. I have had the means of qualifying myself to speak on that point. It is simply due to that Senator that the fact should be known, and it gives me great pleasure to state it. But, Mr. President, I will not undertake to explain these things, I wish some Senator, some member of the Committee on Finance, some one somewhere would tell me why you put the salary of the collector of the port of New York at $12,000, while the Secretary of the Treasury works for $8,000. What claim has the collector of New York upon a salary 50 per cent. greater than is paid to the Secretary of the Treasury. Here is a list of officers, quite a number of them, who are paid as high as or higher than the Secretary of the Treasury? Does any one of them incur a responsibility or perform an amount of labor greater than is performed by the Secretary of the Treasury? My honorable friend from New York can doubtless explain how this is. I cannot.

Mr. CONKLING. Having the permission of my friend from Wisconsin, I venture to answer in part so much of his question as relates to the collector of New York. He inquires why does the collector of the port of New York receive $12,000, for example, and then suggests, in comparison, to point his question, that a very high officer of the Government receives but $8,000. I answer that the reason consists in part in the fact of the enormous pecuniary responsibility which the collector of the port of New York assumes and for which he gives very heavy bonds. A half million dollars in a day is not unusual, is less than the ordinary occurrence of his responsibility. He is liable not only for himself but for his subordinates; and I venture to say there is not a solvent insurance company in the country which for a premium amounting to the salary fixed by this bill for the collector of the port of New York would insure the pecuniary responsibility of the collector and his subordinates, for which he and his sureties are liable. Therefore, so long as men measure, as they always have measured, compensation in respect to pecuniary trusts by risks run, so long I humbly submit to the Senator it will be fallacious to compare mere duties, mere labor, mere official cares in the sense of exertion, with the same care when coupled with enormous pecuniary responsibility.

Mr. HOWE. The honorable Senator from New York has given an excellent reason why the collector of the port of New York should have a salary as high as $12,000; but after all he has not given a reason for that vast disparity of salary which is paid to other officers of the Treasury Department, and which is proposed to be paid to the collector of customs at the port of New York. If this means to measure out salaries proportioned to the weight of pecuniary responsibility devolved upon the officers, why do you make no greater difference between the salary of the collector of New York and the salary of the collectors of Boston, San Francisco, or Philadelphia? New York collects I suppose about three-fourths of the customs revenue of the whole country, and tried by that test the collector's salary should be three times as much as the salary of all other collectors.

But there is another officer in New York to-day whose pecuniary responsibilities I take it are even heavier than those of the collector of customs there, and that is the sub-treasurer, and I take it there is an officer in this city, to say nothing about the Secretary of the Treasury, to wit: the Treasurer of the United States, whose pecuniary responsibilities are greater than those of any other collector in the United States. I believe the sub-treasurer in New York works for a salary of $7,500; I believe the Treasurer of the United States works for a salary of $6,000. I am corrected on both sides of me; it is said he has the same salary as the sub-treasurer at New York. I am not finding fault with the salaries which you propose to pay to the collectors under this bill. They are as low as they ought to be. I simply want to know what consideration there is that moves us at this time to do justice in the way of salaries to these few officers, and to leave this great injustice upon those other officers who do more work, assume more responsibility, and are yet unpaid.

Mr. HAGER. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. HAGER. I desire to say in justification of what I stated that I see upon reference to the departmental report that the imports at the port of San Francisco are nearly double those at the port of Philadelphia. I mention this as a justification of the remarks I made before in regard to this arrangement of salaries.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, let me call attention to one other section of this bill, and I now have before me the bill printed in pursuance of the recommendations of the conference committee. Let me call attention to the twenty-fourth section and I shall be done with this subject for the present. The twenty-fourth section provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, make such regulations as he may deem necessary for the conduct and management of the bonded warehouses, general-order stores, and other depositories of the imported merchandise throughout the United States; all regulations or orders issued by collectors of customs in regard thereto shall be subject to revision, alteration, or revocation by him—

So far I understand, it recites substantially the law as it exists—and no warehouse shall be bonded and no general-order store established without his authority and approval. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, in granting permits to establish general-order warehouses, to require such warehouse or warehouses to be located contiguous, or as near as may be, to the landing places of steamers and vessels from foreign ports; and that no officer of the customs shall have any personal ownership of, or interest in, any bonded warehouse or general-order store.

Now, according to my understanding, the only effective words in that long section are those requiring that general warehouses shall be "located contiguous, or as near as may be, to the landing place of steamers and vessels from foreign ports." Those, I think, are the only words in this section which will alter the law. Those words will have, as I understand them, just this effect and no other: to secure to three great steamship companies, not one dollar of the capital in any one of which is owned by an American citizen, and to secure to them absolutely, the storage of all the goods they bring into the country, not merely of the general-order goods, but of all the goods they bring in. The Cunard line, the North German Lloyds, and the Hamburg line have at last obtained or will when this law is put upon your statute-book, have obtained from an American Congress a national decree that they shall have the exclusive storage of all the goods which they bring into the country and which go into bonded warehouses or into general-order stores. That may be a wise thing to do; it does not seem to me to be so; and it is one of the reasons why I will not consent to the passage of this bill. If I am mistaken as to the practical effect of this section I shall be glad to have my mistake pointed out. That is just what I understand it to be; and yet it passed the Senate, I believe, the other day, without any criticism or attracting any attention whatever. I do not know whether it was the design of the framers of this bill or whether it is an accident which has crept into the bill. That is the way I regard it, and that is one of the reasons why I shall not vote for it.

Mr. President, I will occupy no more of the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CARPENTER. When this bill was before the Senate the other day I voted against it. I did so because in my belief it would defraud the revenues twenty-five millions annually. But that is not all. We might be willing to pay twenty-five millions a year for a great reform. We are paying pretty dearly for all our great modern reforms, and twenty-five millions a year might be cheerfully paid for this. But the evil does not stop with the twenty-five millions. Such is the nature of the importing business that a very slight discrepancy in the duties paid would enable those who pay lesser duties to control the market and ruin all the men who pay the higher duties.

This bill, as it seems to me, from beginning to end is a bill to favor smugglers. It is the most tenderly drawn bill to punish smugglers that ever was devised. Our fathers, in the infancy of the Republic, devised a system for collecting the revenue with a keen knowledge of the nature of the subject to be regulated, taking into account the temptation which existed to violate the law, and the evil consequences that would follow from its violation, and they framed and matured a complete system which has been in existence for nearly eighty years, and under which our duties have in the main been impartially and honestly collected. Now it is proposed to change that system in many important particulars, and we have this bill for the purpose. The two sections to which my colleague has already referred clearly indicate the spirit of this bill. We are told that the merchants, the importers, demand a reform in the law. What kind of a reform? A reform, we are told, that shall impose less severe penalties for a violation of the law. That is, the reform, as far as it goes in that direction, is to encourage the violation of the law, make it easier to violate the law, make it more difficult to convict a man for violating the law, make the penalty for violation after conviction less severe, and to remove the instrumentalities by which the law has been enforced. As illustrating this, the eighth and fourteenth sections seem to me to be conclusive. The eighth section reads:

That no officer, or other person entitled to or claiming compensation under any provision of this act, shall be thereby disqualified from becoming a witness in any action, suit, or proceeding for the recovery, mitigation, or remission thereof—

"Thereof" means nothing, and I believe is a misprint. The "fines, forfeitures, and penalties prescribed by this act" are referred to by the word "thereof." I proceed with the section—but shall be subject to examination and cross-examination in like manner with other witnesses, without being thereby deprived of any right, title, share, or interest in any fine, penalty, or forfeiture to which such examination may relate; and in every such case—

That is, referring back to the previous language, "in any action, suit, or proceeding for the recovery, mitigation, or remission, &c., of the fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by this act." That is what is meant by the phrase "every such case."

And in every such case the defendant or defendants may appear and testify and be examined and cross-examined in like manner.

Then section 14 requires the judge not only to have the jury find that the defendant has volated the law, has smuggled articles, and entered them falsely by perjured affidavits; but after all these facts are established and after the jury are satisfied that the man has committed the offense within every legal definition which ever applied to such a subject, then the jury are to be brought to another question that is separate and distinct from the question of the man's guilt arising from the facts proved, what he has done and the legal presumption arising therefrom; and the jury are to be told in substance, "Although you may find that this defendant knew that there were diamonds in that chest of tea, and that he made a false affidavit when he entered the package, you must, notwithstanding, answer this further question, you must say upon your oaths, upon all the testimony in the case, that the defendant did this thing with 'an actual intent'" to do what? Defraud the revenue law? O, no; that is not it, but "to defraud the United States."

My honorable friend from Pennsylvania would say that defrauding the United States in this connection means defrauding the revenue laws of the United States. Very well. My honorable friend would not smuggle; he would not commit perjury to cover smuggling; he would not swear, if he had done such a thing, that he had not done it. I am not speaking of him; but let us take the case of a man who believes that free trade is for the true interest of this country. Suppose a man thinks every article ought to be imported free of duty, and he simply swears that he had no actual intent to defraud the United States. Then the jury when they come to that part of the case have heard the only witness who, as my colleague has said, can really know what his intentions were. Any one may judge of his intentions from his conduct. We hang murderers, we convict men of every crime in the catalogue by testimony of this kind, by the legal presumption from the acts performed by the party; but that is too severe for smugglers. Our hearts relent when we come to a smuggler. We would hang a man charged with murder upon the presumption of the law arising from his act; but we are not to convict a smuggler by the same rule. We must go beyond the fact and the presumption arising from it and prove that he actually intended to defraud the United States, and we make him the witness; and in the nature of things he is the only witness.

Now, I want to know if any lawyer who has been in the habit of defending these cases and other criminal cases for years believes that a conviction can be had under these two sections, that a jury will find a man guilty of the actual intent when he swears positively that he had no such actual intent and when the judge must tell the jury "no matter what you conclude from the fact that he did certain things, the law requires not only that but it requires in addition to the legal presumption from the act done that you should find as an independent, yes, and as a separate, distinct fact by a special finding, that this man did actually intend to defraud the United States?" Suppose the jury should happen to be free-traders, and suppose they should find that the man did intend to defraud the revenue laws; but they being free-traders think the revenue laws are against the interests of the United States, and consequently smuggling does not defraud the United States taken as a whole, but is in the interest of the people, and if such a jury would acquit every man of smuggling because they are opposed to paying duties? This is a penal act, and is to be construed strictly.

Does anybody believe, Mr. President, that the honest merchants of this country want such a law passed? Will such a law help anybody in the importing business except thieves? Certainly not. And yet for voting against such a bill and opposing it I have been handled rather severely by the New York press; and while I do not expect to take any notice of what any newspaper may say about me as an individual, when I am charged as having acted corruptly as President of the Senate, I think the case is different. After having criticised my opposition to the bill the New York World says:

The President of the Senate pro tempore need not imagine that the commercial community does not see through his maneuvers. He appointed Senator HOWE on the conference committee.

Then it goes on and abuses my colleague, which I rejoice at, [laughter,] for I have been abused individually so much that to be yoked to another man and have the lash come over both of us at once gave me infinite delight.

Nor will it be overlooked that Senator HOWE is not even a member of the Finance Committee, and that it is customary for a bill perfected and considered in the Finance Committee to be referred to a conference of members of that committee.

I need say nothing about that criticism in this body where parliamentary usages are known and where everybody knows that a conference committee should be so made up as to represent both sides of a question; and in this case the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Delaware [Messrs. SCOTT and BAYARD] were both members of the Finance Committee. I may state the further fact that after the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. SHERMAN] had declined to serve on the committee of conference in consequence of his other engagements, I called him to the chair and consulted with him about the committee, and the committee that was appointed was entirely satisfactory to him.

But this criticism is followed by a statement which leaves the inference, and was undoubtedly intended to create the impression, that I had acted corruptly in the chair in consequence of what is added in the next paragraph, namely:

The merchants of New York know very well that when the Phelps-Dodge case was in its inception the lawyers of the spy Harvey telegraphed for Senator CARPENTER, and that Senator CARPENTER came here and gave his legal advice to aid the prosecution in realizing their $271,000.

Now, merchants of New York, do you not see why this man has acted so corruptly in the chair? Do you not see why he did not appoint the conference committee all on one side? Because he had been retained for the spy Harvey and was his legal adviser. Three things are affirmed here; first, that Harvey's lawyers telegraphed me; second, that I went to New York; and third, that I gave legal advice in aid of that prosecution.

There never was a greater falsehood. Neither Harvey nor his lawyers nor his friends ever telegraphed to me to my knowledge about any subject whatever. I never went to New York in consequence of such telegram. I never aided by advice or otherwise the prosecution in realizing $271,000 or any sum whatever. I never aided them at all, nor gave them any advice whatever.

I voted against this bill because I thought the bill was an exceedingly bad one, because I thought it would defraud our revenue and ruin all honest importers, that smuggling would become the rule and must become the rule, and honest importers must abandon the market; but when I resumed the chair I acted as I have tried to act in all cases, appointing the committee of conference according to the rules of parliamentary law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say, if the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin really needs any corroboration, that the editor of the paper was entirely mistaken in regard to the organization of this conference committee. It was made in exact accordance with the rules requiring a majority of the committee to conform to the vote of the Senate. That was done in this case by appointing two members of the Committee on Finance who reported this bill on the committee of conference and appointing also a gentleman who had voted against the bill. That is the uniform custom of the body, and the appointment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] I think I suggested myself, because the Senator from Wisconsin had voted against the bill and had shown himself very much opposed to it, and thereupon, when he was appointed as being opposed to the bill, I handed over to him a number of papers against this bill. Although I was strongly in favor of the bill, I felt it due that the conferees should have all the information to be had on either side of the subject, and I am perfectly satisfied with the result of their labors.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not rise to enter into this controversy about the New York World, for I have come in for my share of editorial abuse; but as my friend from Wisconsin has commented on a portion of the eighth section, which enacts that the party sued for a penalty may become a witness, I simply want to ask him whether he thinks that is introducing any new principle into our Federal legislation in view of the act of 1864, which provided "that in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color nor in civil actions because he is a party to or interested in the issue to be tried?" I am not aware whether the question has ever been met as to whether this section covered a civil action for a penalty, although the language I think is broad enough to do so, unless there has been a decision to the contrary. My friend from Delaware, to whom I suggested this question, hands me this ruling: Under the act of 1864 the claimant of property seized for a violation of the internal-revenue law is a witness in his own behalf." (United States vs. Ten Thousand Cigars, 1 Woolworth, 123.)

Mr. CARPENTER. There is no doubt about that. The new principle introduced here is that while you leave him to be a witness and he is authorized to swear, he is the only man who can swear as to his actual intention as distinguished from that intention as presumed by his conduct, and you then require the judge to put that as a separate and distinct question to the jury, whether they find him guilty of an actual intention. There is the new principle.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the comment which my friend made on the two sections taken together to animadvert principally on permitting the defendant to become a witness.

Mr. CARPENTER. No.

Mr. SCOTT. I simply wished to call his attention to the fact that it was only a re-enactment of what had already been the law.

Mr. CARPENTER. That I understand; but that taken in connection with the other provision makes a new principle.

Mr. STEWART. The title of this bill suggests to my mind some very grave considerations. The number of cases of fraud exposed by this detective system demonstrates the amount of smuggling to some extent, and demonstrates the necessity of a very rigorous administration of the law. It shows that the amount of robbery in the collection of our revenue is perfectly enormous. But the public sentiment will not tolerate moieties, which appear to be the only inducement you can offer in order to get at these frauds, and when these spies are taken off we may reasonably suppose that the amount of frauds must increase immeasurably. I have no doubt of it. Good judges estimate that there will be twenty or thirty millions stolen annually in consequence of this measure; that is, our revenues will be reduced that much; and into whose pockets will this money go? Into the pockets of honest men? No; into the pockets of smugglers.

If this business of collecting the revenues by tariffs is liable to these enormous abuses, a very grave question arises. We have been told that in a single year, of the number of cases detected and unearthed forty-eight judgments were obtained and enormous amounts of money made by the officers as moieties. These moieties always come out of the fraudulent importations. They are the divisions of the spoils of those that are overtaken. I say there is enough developed in the course of this controversy to cast a very grave suspicion, a very grave doubt, upon the possibility in the United States of collecting revenues by imposts, by duties. If the system is such that no honest man can be engaged in importing—and I believe it is admitted that in certain branches of trade American merchants have been driven out entirely—if the system is such that enormous wealth can be accumulated by people who are willing to be dishonest, it seems to me it creates a necessity for remodeling your tariff so that these revenues can be collected and collected honestly. It is a most conclusive argument against your general ad valorem tariff. The developments in the course of this discussion furnish a strong argument against your present tariff system.

It appears that spies will not be tolerated in this country; they are odious; but when we reflect upon what has occurred during the last year, what may we expect to happen when they are taken off? It shows that we must remodel our tariff law, and impose duties upon only a few articles, and those of such a character that there can be no fraud in them.

I have voted consistently since I have been here for tariffs. A tariff is a tax directly upon my people. They manufacture nothing; they produce gold and silver, and buy everything. The people of the Pacific coast have stood up for tariffs, and they have believed that in the prosperity of the whole country, in the employment of laborers, and in keeping up the price of labor throughout the country, their prosperity would be enhanced, because they are a part of the same common country; but I tell you, if you cannot unearth these frauds of smuggling without creating such scandal as calls for legislation to repeal the laws by which they are unearthed, then you must change your tariff laws; you must do it as a necessity; you must have nothing but specific duties, and those on but a few articles that can be understood.

It may be that the passage of this bill is necessary to stop moieties, because they are odious, but the system of moieties has been in existence long enough to develop a state of things which, without the moieties, will sap the foundation of all government. If you have laws whereby men can by evading them accumulate millions, you saddle all the burdens of government upon the laboring classes. After all, they all come upon labor. If you have such laws, you must obtain your revenue in some other way. If you repeal these laws, you cannot prevent this system of corruption. I have examined this subject enough to be thoroughly satisfied that if you take away your spies and your moieties, the smugglers will rob the country. You say you will not have these spies and informers; and I think there is great deal of reason why you should not have them. Then it is the first duty of Congress to take hold of this question and remodel the tariff, have nothing but specific duties, and put those on so few articles that the world may know where you get your revenue.

Although this bill will not relieve the burdens of the people, although the prices of all articles will remain the same, and the tariff the same, we are told by men who pretend to understand the subject that it will considerably reduce your revenues. Suppose it does not reduce your revenues more than $10,000,000; those $10,000,000 are taken from the people and put into the hands of those who are willing to evade the laws. The estimate is that the reduction will amount to $30,000,000. Can we stand by a system of revenue whereby thirty or forty million dollars may be filched in a year, which must eventually be supplied by the people? The price of everything will be raised in consequence of it. I do not believe, with your present complicated system of ad valorem duties and tariff laws, that it is possible to administer them without spies and without agents and without offering inducements for the detection of fraud. You must give inducements to men to watch the smugglers; you must employ detectives if you spread out before the whole country opportunities such as are spread out by means of the present tariff law. You talk about getting honest men and getting men who will do their duty! You cannot hire men to act as detectives without giving them a bounty. I have not the highest faith in detectives; I do not believe much in them; but if you continue this system, if you give so many opportunities for rascality, you have got to pay a pretty high price to detect it. It is a commentary upon your loose tariff system that you cannot avoid. It must be reorganized and remodeled. It is the duty of Congress to pass such laws as will not drive honest men out of trade. Then you can dispense with your moieties. With this system and without moieties the people are to be robbed almost ad libitum. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. THURMAN. I only rise to say that I hope the vote will be taken on this report. The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 40 to 3, I think. The subject has been amply discussed; and if we are to do any more business at this session, we shall have to agree to abbreviate our speeches. I hope the vote will be taken.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. President, I suppose discussion has closed on this bill, and I rise merely to congratulate the Senate and the country upon its passage. I assume that there will be none or very few votes against it. The bill as agreed upon by the conference committeee is not all that I could have desired. But upon the whole it is in the direction of reform, and ought to be pretty satisfactory as a beginning. If I had been here last week during the discussion I should have tried hard to maintain some other points which I deem important alike to the importers and the Government, and to have defended the bill against the opposition which was made to it. But I am pretty well satisfied with what we have, and after stating my regret that business of a private character, which I could not disregard, compelled my absence, my object in rising is simply to express the earnest hope that the Senate will now without further discussion adopt the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. SCOTT. If we can have a vote I do not desire to say a word.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to resume the consideration of House bill No. 2097, which was the unfinished business of yesterday but was laid aside this morning by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Committee on the Judiciary imposed the duty on me of bringing before the Senate a bill for the enforcement of law in Utah. The bill has passed the House of Representatives. In its form it is a mild measure, only calculated to promote the enforcement of law. That bill has been further amended in the Judiciary Committee, so that I think there can be no objection to it. I have received this morning a communication from the Attorney-General stating that it is of the first importance that that bill should pass. I read a part of what he says:

I think it is indispensable to the administration of justice in that Territory that there should be some legislation upon the subject. The people there have been practically without courts for two or three years. It will be a very great disappointment, and I think calamity, if nothing is done in that direction at this session of Congress.

Now, it is very clear that with the amendments reported by the committee the bill has got to go back to the House. I think that bill can be passed in half an hour; and therefore I move that all other orders be laid aside and that we proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Is that motion in order pending the other?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that motion not to be in order at present. The question now is on the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTT,] which must be voted upon. If that should be voted down the Senator from New Jersey can then make his motion.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then I would simply ask the Senate, in view of the statement which I have made, and of the fact that our friend from Pennsylvania while he had one measure before the Senate has introduced another which has occupied two or three hours, that we be permitted to dispose of this bill. I am the more earnest about it inasmuch as I am expected to take care of the bill, and to-morrow I must be engaged probably all day in an important conference committee.

Mr. SCOTT. If the measure to which the Senator has referred was one in which the Senator from Pennsylvania might be supposed to have any personal interest, the appeal might have some force. I have simply been acting as the organ of the Senate, as chairman of a committee of conference, and now as chairman of another committee, in bringing before the Senate bills of large public importance. This one has already been discussed at such length that I hope to be able to get a vote upon it in a few minutes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I did not think the Senator from Pennsylvania had any personal interest in either of the measures except that personal interest which a Senator always has to dispatch the business which is specially committed to him as soon as possible.

Mr. DAVIES. I hope the Senate will continue in the line it was upon yesterday. We had up a bill, and it is the regular order to-day, in which a thousand persons are interested. It is the work of the claims commission for a whole year. Therefore I hope we shall continue its consideration without laying it aside.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill providing for the government of the District of Columbia, and I would move to set aside the pending order but for the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania says it will occupy only a few moments. This District bill if passed at all must pass the Senate to-day, and I trust Senators will give it that consideration which its importance requires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed with the consideration of the claims bill.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH MONTANARI.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I beg leave to make a statement preparatory to submitting a motion. Some days ago the Senate passed a bill for the relief of Joseph Montanari, and for other purposes, to allow the Secretary of State to audit a claim which he had for services as vice-consul at Port Mahon. In connection with that section, the first section of the bill, it was also voted and the bill which passed here repealed the old law which prohibited the payment of consuls and vice-consuls for services who were not citizens of the United States. That bill went to the House of Representatives, and the House struck out the section which relates to the payment of consuls and vice-consuls who were not citizens. It was put in at the suggestion of the Secretary of State. When that bill was returned, a motion was made that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask for a committee of conference. That committee was appointed; but about that time, perhaps on the very day, the House put into the appropriation bill for consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, a provision like this which they rejected in this bill. Now I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which that committee of conference was appointed, and request the House of Representatives to return the bill to the Senate, and then I shall make another motion to concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to reconsider the vote by which the committee of conference was appointed on the bill indicated by him? The Chair hears no objection, and the House of Representatives will be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Now I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of Joseph Montanari, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FENTON. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to make a brief statement.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask what is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a newspaper paragraph which relates to my colleague and myself, about which I wish to make a remark. I will send it to the Clerk's desk that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read it if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Alluding to a streak of unusual courtesy, which it has observed in Senator CONKLING's behavior toward his colleague lately, the Utica Observer says:

"The explanation of it, as it comes from the lips of Senator FENTON himself, is, to say the least, curious. He says: 'I have CONKLING by the throat. If he dares to open his mouth against me he is a ruined man.' This, of course, may be mere idle boast, although it comes from a man not given to idle boasting."

It is assumed to come from a man who, moreover, is not "given to boasting" at all, least of all when he has the power to do what he will. Any one who knows Senator FENTON will understand what ineffable bosh this talk of the Observer is. We would lay the extravagant odds of the Express against the Observer that the latter invented the whole paragraph.

Mr. FENTON. I think it is due to my colleague that I should say that I did not use the language attributed to me.

Mr. CONKLING. If I may be allowed, I wish to say one word. I, too, had observed this statement. It originated in an obscure print of limited and local circulation; but after a fashion so prevalent in these times, many newspapers thought it worth while to repeat it again and again. It is due to my colleague to say that I never believed he had said any such thing as the statement imputes to him, and I accept as an act of courtesy and fairness his disavowal and denial. It is bad enough that we should be rudely and falsely aspersed as in a greater or less degree we are by those not of this body. Silence however is the best answer to the general storm of abuse. When, however, libelers pretend to quote one Senator against another, and especially a Senator against another from the same State, I think it worth while, as my colleague has thought it, to record a disavowal and denial of injurious untruth.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRATT. Is morning business in order? I have some reports to make and I wish to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that by a vote of the Senate House bill No. 2797 has been taken up and is before the Senate for consideration. If there is no objection the Chair will receive morning business.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me inquire is there anything the Senator from Indiana wishes to have considered at present?

Mr. PRATT. No, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. If it is simply to make a report, I shall not object.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 2456) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2541) giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BOREMAN, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3679) defining the qualifications of territorial Delegates in the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 957) chartering a double-track freight-railway company from tide-water on the Atlantic to the Missouri River and to limit the rates of freight thereon; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PRATT. I introduce this bill by request. So far as I have examined the bill I approve it. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF GAS-WORKS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to get a committee of conference ordered on a bill which is on the table in relation to gas-works. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania consent that I may have it taken up and the amendment of the House to that bill non-concurred in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania consent?

Mr. SCOTT. To the appointment of a conference committee I consent; but for no other purpose.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 733) regulating gas-works; which were in section 11 to strike out "coal," before "gas," and insert "illuminating;" and to add to section 11 the following proviso:

Provided, That when the price of gas coal delivered at the works of the Washington Gas-light Company shall advance to $8 per ton, the price of gas to consumers may be advanced 10 cents per thousand cubic feet, and an additional 10 cents per thousand feet for each additional dollar per ton that gas coal may advance in price; and in like manner a reduction of 10 cents per thousand feet shall be made for each and every dollar per ton that gas coal may fall below $7 per ton; and for that purpose the Washington Gas-light Company shall in the month of May in each year furnish the Secretary of the Interior with a statement of all their coal contracts or purchases for the ensuing year, sworn to before a justice of the peace by their engineer or secretary, and the advance or reduction of price shall take place on the 1st of July ensuing.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. MORRILL of Vermont, COOPER, and ALLISON were appointed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of June 13, 1874, accompanying the report and maps of the survey to ascertain a practicable route for an interoceanic ship-canal via the Lake of Nicaragua; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FENTON presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying for a revision of the pension laws; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of Messrs. Hards & Co., Kutter, Luckermeyer & Co., Herman Baker & Co., and other merchants and importers of the city of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the law imposing a tax on sales of stocks, bonds, coin, and other securities; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following concurrent resolution, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed for the use of the Department of the Interior eleven thousand copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Education for 1873.

I wish to say in reference to this resolution that the Committee on Printing have received numerous communications from the Departments and from the Bureaus thereof asking for the publication of reports and documents for the use of the Departments. It has been customary for the Committee on Printing to recommend from time to time some of these publications as supplemental to the edition ordered for the use of Congress; but after the evident indisposition of the Senate to sanction any printing of this kind the committee have declined to introduce any further resolutions. If it is proper that these reports should be printed they should be estimated for in the appropriations for the Departments, should go before the Committee on Appropriations, and should be itemized in the appropriations like any other items of expenditure. Therefore I hope that the heads of Bureaus and Departments who desire publications of this kind will make their communications to the Committee on Appropriations, where I think they belong.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Rhode Island is through, I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator requests me to do so, I will introduce a resolution that I have attempted several times to have acted upon, and to which I believe there is now no objection, for publishing the report of the committee on cheap transportation to the seaboard. I will do that at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, who I believe is very much interested in it.

Mr. SCOTT. No doubt I am very much interested in it; but many Senators complain that unless this bill is put through, and unless I adhere to it, it is interfering with their business, and if that resolution will give rise to the least discussion I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think it will give rise to any discussion. I believe the only Senators who objected heretofore have withdrawn their objections. If it gives rise to a word of debate I will withdraw it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That one thousand additional copies of the report of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes, with the appendix and evidence taken, be printed, of which three hundred copies shall be for the use of the Senate, six hundred copies for the use of the House, and one hundred for the use of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes; and that there shall also be printed five thousand copies of said report and appendix, without the evidence, of which fifteen hundred shall be for the use of the Senate, three thousand for the use of the House, and five hundred for the use of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That Henry C. Smith have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS.

The bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that bill may be taken from the table and proceeded with as soon as the bill now under consideration is disposed of.

Mr. SCOTT. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The bill will lie on the table.

The bill (H. R. No. 3740) to create the Bozman land district in the Territory of Montana was read twice by its title.

Mr. KELLY. I should like to have action on that bill now. The Senate has already passed a similar bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot consent that any bill shall be taken up for action now.

Mr. KELLY. It will not take one minute.

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot consent that any bill shall be taken up for action now, and I hope the Senator will not make the appeal.

Mr. KELLY. Then let the bill lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie on the table for the present.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 2774) for the relief of Edward Cavendy;

A bill (H. R. No. 3743) to reimburse the city of Boston for certain expenses incurred in the improvement of Chelsea street, formerly Charlestown, in connection with the United States navy-yard; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3362) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah B. Forest, widow of Lieutenant Dulaney A. Forest, late of the United States Navy.

CELEBRATION OF BOSTON TEA PARTY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the woman's centennial executive committee of the city of Washington have leave to occupy the Rotunda of the Capitol, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, upon the afternoon and evening of the 16th of December next, for the purpose of celebrating the destruction of the tea in the harbor of Boston on the night of the 16th of December, 1773.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope that resolution will pass. There is no objection to it.

Mr. SCOTT. If there will be no debate upon it, very well.

Mr. WEST. There will be none.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

The resolution was adopted.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 533) granting a pension to Uriah W. Briggs;

An act (S. No. 624) to authorize the issuance of patents for lands granted to the State of Oregon in certain cases;

An act (S. No. 876) to amend the law relating to patents, trademarks, and copyrights.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. FLANAGAN, Mr. MERRIMON, and Mr. SPENCER submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DENNIS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3600) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to appeal to the Senate and ask unanimous consent to permit me at five o'clock to-day to call their attention to bills reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I gave notice yesterday that I would ask the Senate to give the Committee on Indian Affairs a short time to-day, and I thought five o'clock would be the proper hour for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair will inform the Senator that there is no motion pending.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senators are through offering amendments to appropriation bills, I now insist on the regular order. If there are any more of these amendments to be offered, to facilitate business let them be offered, and then I shall insist that the Chair recognize the demand for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill No. 2797 having been taken up by a vote is now before the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to appeal to the Senate that the bill amendatory of the act of February 14, 1871, giving pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812, which was sent from the House to the Senate on the 17th of March last, and in which so many hundreds, I may say thousands of the widows of those soldiers are interested, may be taken up to-morrow morning after the morning business. I wish to say that I am overwhelmed with applications from all parts of the country, from members of the House of Representatives, from members of this body, to have this bill taken up for consideration. I want to escape the necessity of going to the mad-house. [Laughter.] I want that the responsibility of disposing of this bill shall rest with the Senate, not with me. There is intimation pretty frequent that I am not doing my duty in this matter. I have importuned and begged the Senate from time to time to give this bill a hearing, and I beg, if they have any respect for me, if they desire that I should continue a few years later upon this earth a sane man, that they will give me to-morrow morning after the conclusion of the morning business for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill No. 2797 is the regular order.

Mr. PRATT. Have I lost my position on the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor if he claims it.

Mr. PRATT. I wish the question fairly put to the Senate. I want to press the question whether this bill to which I have referred shall be taken up to-morrow morning after the morning business is through, or if that does not suit the Senate, then to-night at seven o'clock, at nine o'clock, at midnight, at almost any hour the Senate please, we agree to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and I entreat that the Senate will give me some time.

Mr. CONKLING. O, make it daybreak. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana appeals to the Senate for unanimous consent to consider the bill indicated by him, at the close of the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. PRATT. Then I ask a vote of the Senate on that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a question of order, that pending the present amendment to the bill before the Senate the Senator from Indiana cannot make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has already so held.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Chair indicate when I can make that motion and be within the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not feel called upon to indicate to the Senator from Indiana when he can make his motion.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask for the reading of the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Is it not in order for me to make a motion that at five o'clock to-day the Senate consider bills reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the motion is not in order.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I gave notice of this motion yesterday, as I was then told it was out of order but would be in order to-day.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a question of order. I have called for the reading of the amendment, the Senator from Connecticut being informed that his motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has taken his seat, and the order is that the pending amendment be reported.

Mr. SCOTT. I have called for that, and that is certainly in order.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Chair recognized the Senator from Rhode Island about five minutes since, and before he had stated his case fully, the Chair gave the floor to some other Senator. The request that I made, and I wish the Chair would put it to the Senate, was that after five o'clock this evening the Senate shall give attention to bills emanating from the Committee on Public Lands. They are of no concern to me personally; I do not care anything about them; but they are reported at the request of Senators and members of Congress from the West, in which they are more interested than in any other class of measures I suppose before the Senate. I make the request at this time that after five o'clock the Committee on Public Lands may have the unanimous consent of the Senate for one hour.

Mr. SCOTT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One objection is sufficient. The Senate has already voted upon the question and ordered this bill which was under consideration yesterday to be taken up. No other motion can be entertained except upon a vote to lay aside this bill and proceed to the consideration of other business. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that he can get unanimous consent after six o'clock this evening, and if he will make the time six o'clock instead of five o'clock no doubt he will get consent.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE CLAIMS COMMISSIONERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2 of the bill the Committee on Claims propose to strike out:

To William Bailey, $45,161.72.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Claims to strike out these words.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I should not detain the Senate by any remarks on this question were it not for the fact that the course of the committee in recommending this amendment has been called in question, and I wish in a few words to give the reasons for its action.

The Senate will bear in mind that before the act passed creating the commission which reported upon these several claims none of these claimants could present his claim before Congress or before the Court of Claims. The other branch had passed an act forbidding the presentation of the claims of persons residing in disloyal States. The act creating this commission was passed after due consultation with the representatives of those States concerned in the operations of the commission. After the act was prepared it was submitted to, and the wording of it was in accordance with the desires of, the representatives of those sections. It was provided that it should apply only to the claims of those persons whose loyalty during the entire term of the rebellion was unquestioned. So far as that act is concerned, no matter how loyal a man may have been during nine-tenths of the rebellion, if there was any act of his during the other tenth or during an hour which showed that he was aiding in the least degree the rebellion, he has no claim to be recognized.

Now, the question is has the individual whose claim is proposed to be stricken from the bill any reason to be considered as one of those who were guilty of any disloyal act. Far be it from me to desire to have any claimant here robbed of any just right or title he may have. The Committee on Claims have been criticised for desiring to send this claim back to the commission. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the condition of this bill. Here are nearly eleven hundred claims in the bill, and of those eleven hundred claims only a little over sixty have been established by the investigations of any committee of this branch. In that examination of about sixty cases three cases have been found which the committee were not satisfied should pass; and from the fact that we are in the last week of the session and that it is impossible for the committee to have an opportunity to examine into these cases fully and determine them, we recommend that the commission, who have all the papers and who have given examination to those several cases before, shall take them up again and examine them with the new evidence which has come to light, and report to Congress what action should be taken.

Now, sir, what do we do if the Senate pass the bill as it has been reported by the committee? You will bear in mind that in 5 per cent. of the cases which have been examined the committee have come to the conclusion that they cannot report favorably. If it is a fair presumption that that is true in regard to the other cases contained in this bill, then if you pass the bill according to the report of the committee you pass some fifty-odd cases which the committee would not agree to if it had time to give them a thorough examination.

But it is said there is not time to examine eleven hundred cases. The Senate must bear in mind that this commission was not established as a court; it was simply a body to examine claims presented on ex parte evidence. The Government is not represented there by counsel as it would be before an ordinary judicial tribunal. Accordingly each one of these cases is presented upon and has had simply an ex parte hearing, and the only representation on the part of the Government is the same representation that a committee of this body or a committee of the House of Representatives would give in its examination.

So far as I am concerned as one member of this body, I do not believe that any of these claims ought to pass without a thorough examination by the proper committee of each branch of Congress. When this commission was established it was established with the distinct understanding that it was merely to be a preliminary examination, and that its finding was to be reported to Congress, that committees might be appointed in each branch whose business it should be to examine the commission's reports when they should be presented. The case we have under discussion now is one in which the committee on examination thought there was evidence on which they could not report favorably. They had not time to go into a full examination. They had either to let the matter lie over until the next session of Congress and then take it up when they could, or they had to report in favor of sending it back to the commission, who had examined it once and had all the papers and could consider the case in the light of all the evidence.

But the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] says that this commission sent additional evidence to the committee of the House which they had no business to do in reference to this case. Here is a commission established; they heard the evidence ex parte, and they reported the claim to the House of Representatives, and it was passed there and came to this branch. Here it was dropped out because the Senate were not satisfied; they had not seen the testimony; it was not sent to them; it went into the files of the House. This was the case at the last session. Then this year the papers being on the files of the House the House acted upon it again. But before it was acted upon again our Government came into possession of the archives of the rebel government in regard to the transactions in cotton in this particular section of the country, and upon an examination of those archives it is found that there was a transaction in which this individual claimant was concerned. Now, I ask the Senate if this commission is faithful to its trust, if it has secured any additional evidence upon any one of these cases which it has reported, is it not its duty to present that evidence to Congress? Suppose one of our committees report a case to this body, and after the case is reported additional evidence comes to their attention either in favor of the claimant or against him, is it not the duty of that committee on that additional evidence, no matter on which side it bears, to bring it to the attention of this body if it be of such a nature as to cause an alteration in their judgment? Most certainly. Our committee in this instance, as we have no time to examine it, propose to let the claim go back to the commission with all the papers and let them examine and decide on the additional testimony which has come to light and report what the conclusion should be.

Mr. President, it has been asked time and again, what evidence is there in this case which the commission did not have when they examined it originally and when they reported upon it? And it has been said that as they had no additional evidence, therefore this claim ought not to be stricken out of the bill and referred back. If that statement be true, most undoubtedly it ought not to be sent back; but there is additional evidence, and that additional evidence is so strong that the Senator from California, if you look to his language yesterday, said that the commission who originally examined the case decided against the claim on the additional evidence. The committee did not understand that to be so, but they understood that the commission reported the additional evidence to Congress for its consideration. But if the Senator from California is correct, then what he asks the Senate to do is to pass this claim with the committee of the Senate opposed to it and with the commission opposed to it also, for the Senator from California says that the commission with this additional evidence stated that the case ought not to pass. Does the Senator from California under that state of circumstances, with the commission against it and with the committee against it, without there having been an examination, wish it to pass?

But, said the Senator, is there not additional evidence? I answer yes. The only evidence in the original testimony on the point now involved was the question put to Mr. Bailey, "Have you committed any act during the rebellion to aid and assist it?" and his answer, "I sold five hundred bales of cotton, but I sold it under duress. I needed money to pay my taxes, and there was an armed force there that threatened to burn my cotton, and if I did not sell it I could not pay my taxes, and if I did not sell it it would be burned." That was the evidence before the commission. If he was forced to do it, if he did it contrary to his will, if he did it under duress, there was nothing disloyal in it, and the commission had his testimony to that effect, and that was all they had. But what are the facts? Five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton he says he sold in order to obtain money to pay his taxes. I believe an examination will show that the facts are that this transaction took place in the fall of 1862, and that there was no duress in that section of country to compel men to sell cotton during the year 1862. It was subsequent to that time, before any force was brought to bear there, and no evidence can be produced to show that either this man or any other person was forced to sell his cotton to the rebel government at that early date.

But take the other dilemma, if you please, and say that he was forced. Was this a loyal man? Was he throughout that country understood to be a loyal man? I appeal to members who have been in the South and who know the circumstances, if there was an armed force that compels a truly loyal citizen to sell them his cotton, would they have paid him for it? If that state of things existed, they would have taken his cotton, and not have gone to him and made a bargain and paid cash for it. If he was a man who had stood up there as a loyal citizen, a wealthy man, well known throughout that region, and they had come to impress cotton, we know what the history was of that state of things. They went to such a man when they could find him, and he was a rare specimen throughout that broad country; it was rare to find a rich planter with his broad acres who was a truly loyal man from beginning to end. Where you find such a man, I want to pay him every dollar of his losses, for he is a monument worthy of being recognized in those dark hours of our country's history.

"Ah," asks one member in his remarks, "was selling cotton aiding the rebellion?" Does not every member of this body know that it was not men which the southern cause lacked simply, but if they had had the means to pay their men and to clothe them and to furnish them with the supplies which the North had they would not have surrendered at the early day that they did surrender? The man who went into the service and buckled on his armor and carried his musket and fought for the cause of the rebellion did not help it and lengthen it out as did the man who furnished $100,000 or more to sustain their cause in that trying hour, for they needed the means more than they needed the man. Yet members get up in the Senate and ask whether, if a person furnished cotton, that was a disloyal act. Sir, the Senator from California wants to know what difference it makes whether he sold his cotton and took money, or whether he sold his cotton and took confederate bonds. The evidence shows that in the first sale he took $20,000 in confederate bonds and $18,731.46 in cash. I will tell the gentleman the difference it makes. Here is this man; we will suppose he is an honest, true man; he goes before the commission and under his oath he says, "I sold my cotton to get money to pay my taxes under duress; it was a necessity that was brought upon me." And the evidence shows when you come to look over the record that he took $20,000 of confederate bonds. Was that a necessity to pay taxes with?

What else? He says he did it under duress to get money to pay his taxes and to pay his hands. He made a sale of $38,731 worth of cotton on January 1, 1863, two months after. Did he want that money to pay his taxes again? How much? Six hundred and eighty-six bales he sells at that time, and he gets for them $54,101.64, of which he takes $24,000 in bonds. What immense taxes this claimant had to pay that he must in two months after the first sale do this!

But the Senator asks, did not all this come out before the commission? Not any of it. These six hundred and eighty-six bales he had forgotten all about. He did recollect that under duress he had sold five hundred, but his memory was so poor that the six hundred and eighty-six bales he had forgotten all about, and he did not refer to them at all.

But the Senator from California says that so difficult was it for a planter to maintain the cause of the Union in that section of country that he was looked upon in such a light that his life was in danger, and he was pointed out as a conspicuous mark of hostility all through that region. That was the language of the Senator from California. I accept it; but when you come to examine the evidence of Mr. Bailey, the question was put to him, "Did you have any trouble with the confederacy?" that is, was he disturbed; and he replied that he did not have any.

My view in reference to this case is that Mr. Bailey previous to the rebellion was undoubtedly a loyal man, as thousands of others throughout the confederacy were, and that he, like many others, when the rebellion was at an end so far as his particular section was concerned and our forces went and took possession, was ready to welcome them back there, and was loyal from that time on; but I cannot believe that he remained always loyal, and maintained all that property and that plantation and suffered no disturbance and had no difficulty. There is not an individual who lives in that section of the country, it seems to me, who can believe that that could be possible.

Gentlemen say this claim must be passed now. If he has been really a true, loyal man, is there any objection to the facts coming to light and all the proof coming out? As I said before, if Mr. Bailey can explain away these circumstances so that he can show that he was a true, loyal man, I would not wish to have him defrauded of one penny. But I feel in regard to this matter that as the claim has not been examined since this additional evidence has come to light, either by a committee of this branch, they not having had time, or by the commission, it is due to justice that it should be sent to some committee or some body for examination.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask my friend a question for information? He remarked some time ago that in this bill are nearly eleven hundred cases and that but about sixty of them had been examined or could be examined by the Senate Claims Committee. Am I right in that?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Then as to the residue of all these cases the committee relies upon the investigation made by the commissioners of claims, and as to these three cases they have information from the commissioners of claims that they themselves are not satisfied in regard to them and that they want further investigation and further opportunity before recommending them. Am I right in that?

Mr. WASHBURN. Not precisely. So far as the commission is concerned, I wish here to state that, so far as my knowledge goes, the commissioners have not interfered with any claim after they have reported it to Congress. They did, after these records were discovered and this additional evidence came to light in regard to Mr. Bailey, send the additional evidence to the House committee without, as I understand, any solicitation; but I do not know that they have said anything in regard to any other claim except as the committee in the examination of a claim, if they found any difficulties, sent to the commission and asked their opinion in reference to it.

But, sir, it was said yesterday by the Senator from California that this commission had decided against the case and therefore it should not be sent back. They decided in favor of the claimant, and the committee thought that they having decided in favor of the claimant it was fair that they should have the case again and decide whether on the additional evidence they would change their former decision. It seemed to me that they were committed on the side of the claimant. They had so decided; they had so reported. But, if in view of the additional evidence which they have communicated they think that that additional evidence decides against the claimant, as the Senator from California said, then you have got to go against the report of the commission and against the report of your committee in deciding to retain this claim in the bill. I do not so understand it, however. I do not understand that they decided it at all, but they did what was their duty—just submitted the additional evidence.

But the Senator says the commission cut down the claim from $100,000 to $45,000, and therefore they are not to be trusted. Sir, if that is to be a test, what will you say in regard to this body or in regard to the committees of this body? We had a report from the Committee on Claims a few days ago where the claimant asked for $140,000 and the committee reported to give him $5,000, and this body discussed it for some time and said $5,000 was too much. Why not condemn the Committee on Claims for cutting that down? If the Senator thinks that this claimant has been cut down unjustly and that he is really entitled to more than the $45,000, why not agree to let his claim go back before the commission where you have your lawyers and your claim-agents and your ex parte evidence to get the commission to allow all that is possible and nobody to represent the Government to cut it down? The Senator himself or any person could then go before the commission and say to them, "This case is reopened, you have allowed the claimant but $45,000; you ought to allow him more." Is there any objection to that if they have cut it down too much? I do not see any objection if this is a fair claim, if it will bear investigation, if the charges can be met, to sending it back for a rehearing.

There is another fact that is somewhat singular in this case which I will call to the attention of the Senate. When you look over the evidence and the papers in this case this fact appears, that a gentleman who was a witness before the commission for Mr. Bailey, who testified for him, and whom he relies more than upon any other witness to prove his case, and who testified not only to the loyalty of Mr. Bailey but to the fact of his property being taken, claimed in his testimony that he had been loyal himself to the cause of the Government of the United States, but when these records came to be discovered and brought forth, this witness, W. W. Withenbury, turns out to have been an agent of the confederate government, acting under McKee, taking the cotton which McKee was purchasing, and transporting it to market and receiving his pay from the confederate government. He testified before this commission that he not only had been loyal and true to the Union cause himself, but he was one of the main witnesses relied upon by Mr. Bailey to prove his loyalty and establish his claim. Will any member of this body assert that this person who was employed by the confederate government in this matter was a Union man? When it came out that this rebel was one of the main witnesses, it seemed to the committee that it threw a shadow over this whole case. If you were a loyal man during the war, and the neighborhood in which you dwelt knew that you were true to the Union in her dark hour, would you take an agent of the rebel government who had done what he could to support it and to overthrow the Union, to prove your loyalty by? Would he be the man that you would bring forward to swear that he not only had been true to the Union himself but that he could vouch for your loyalty?

But, sir, I do not assert, and in joining in this report as a member of the committee I have not asserted, that all this evidence should be taken to condemn Mr. Bailey; I simply ask that Mr. Bailey and the Government shall have a fair chance under this new evidence and all these new documents which have been brought to light. If this commission is not a fair board to send it to, send it to any committee you choose in this branch. If the Committee on Claims has reported against it and you do not wish it to go there, send it to the Judiciary Committee and let Mr. Bailey establish his loyalty during the entire war before that committee or any other committee that may be selected, and if he can do it there is no member who would more freely or more readily vote to pay him than I would.

But when I take into account that the very first cotton which was purchased in this region was purchased by the rebel agent appointed for that specific purpose of this very claimant, and that there were planters all through that region who had cotton; that the agent went to this man's house and made it his domicile; that he was a married man, and married the daughter of the claimant, and was in his family in 1863 as a married man—the day that he was married I know not; but the sale of the great part of this cotton was on January 1, 1863, and as early as the summer of 1863 he was in this claimant's family with his wife; when I take into account that it was not a single transaction as he testified to, but a transaction repeated over and over again to the amount of $100,000, I do not believe that there is any way in which you can explain his conduct except that during that trying hour and under all the circumstances and surroundings this claimant felt that he must make his peace with the confederacy for a period of time at least.

I do not propose to occupy any more time upon this question. I have no feeling in reference to it excepting this: I know when the bill was drawn up under which this commission was organized it was drawn up with the understanding that there were some people in the South—it was said the number was very few—who had given their lives to the Union cause and who had suffered and been persecuted and stripped of their property on that account, and that this Government could afford to make exceptions of that class of citizens. No allusion was made to the great and wealthy planter, but I recollect very well that instances were brought forward where a man's sons in certain portions of the South had enlisted in the Union Army, and it was said that after those sons had left their homes and joined the Union forces the Union Army even had taken what little had been left to support their families, and it was said that those cases ought to be recognized. Accordingly the bill was drawn very carefully that whoever received aid or recompense from this Government through this commission should prove clearly that at no period during the entire rebellion he had given any aid or encouragement or strength to that cause. Now, sir, I cannot feel that this is one of those cases. I believe I owe it to the Government, I owe it to those who will be taxed to pay these bills, to see that any man around whose history there is so much doubt as this record throws around this man's history, shall not be paid until there has been a full examination. When this commission was established it was said "we do not expect these claims will be paid at once." The very claimants that pressed your committees to pass upon these claims day by day said, "We do not ask that they be paid to-day, but give us a commission in order that the evidence may be filed and that we may know there is a time when we are to present our cases and prove them." This commission composed of three members pass ex parte upon eleven hundred claims in a year and then they go through here without their being, with the exception of about sixty, pass upon by any committee of the Senate. I say it is a most generous act if you do that. But if in addition to that you override the report of your Committee on Claims and override the report of the commission also in regard to a claim, it is taking a long stride in regard to a matter of this kind as it seems to me, and I hope the Senate will not do it. I hope this claim will be investigated; and if this is a truly loyal man give him his pay. If the amount the commission has allowed him is not what is his due, give him more. If he is really and honestly entitled to more let him have it; but if he was a support to the rebel cause do not bring him in under this bill.

If the time ever is to come—and I hope it never will—when those who did give aid to the rebellion are to receive assistance from this Government and their claims are to come in, let it not be done until you repeal the act which cuts them off; let it not be done under this act which forbids any such claimant to receive any aid or assistance from the Government. You cannot say that this case has been examined, because there is new evidence and there are new documents which neither our committee nor the commission have had an opportunity to investigate. "Ah!" but it is said, "it is necessary that it should be passed at once." Never has there been a bad claim but it has been necessary that it be rushed through in the speediest possible manner. I recollect perfectly well when the celebrated Sue Murphey case was up, that it passed through this branch twice and was rejected twice in the other branch, and the third time the application was made and it was said that it was important it should pass at once, that it could not be delayed any longer. A bad case cannot afford to be delayed. A true and honest case which will bear investigation may be delayed and investigated, and the party owes it to himself, if he has been true, to have a full investigation and let the country understand that he has been misrepresented and that he has been a true and loyal citizen from the beginning to the end of the contest.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House, on the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3745) to remove the disabilities of James Howard, of Baltimore, Maryland;

A bill (H. R. No. 3747) to amend the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States in Covington, Kentucky;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 3748) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity for a public building at Brooklyn, New York, and the cost of the same.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT BROOKLYN.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture, notwithstanding the objection of my friend from Pennsylvania, as I shall be compelled to leave the Senate before the day is over, to ask permission to do a mere formal thing, which is to concur in a House bill just received simply directing the Secretary of the Treasury to make and answer an inquiry, and I hope my friend will not object. It will take but a single moment.

Mr. SCOTT. Unless I can be assured that it leads to no other request——

Mr. CONKLING. If it leads to anything else I shall withdraw my request.

Mr. SCOTT. Has it been to a committee here?

Mr. CONKLING. It is a House bill, and if the Senator will hear it read he will see that it does not need to go to any committee; it is a mere inquiry.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3748) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, and the cost of the same, was read three times, and passed.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE CLAIMS COMMISSIONERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I voted in favor of establishing this commission. I believed that it was a very desirable thing to do. We should have had claims amounting to an enormous sum of money pressed upon Congress in a very irregular manner which could not have been investigated if this commission had not been organized. I believe in the main they have discharged their duties faithfully, and they should be commended. When we passed the act creating the commission it was provided, and it was done after discussion, that these claims should again be brought before Congress for their approval. What was the object in view? It was to see whether new facts might not be developed, that improper claims should not go through. This investigation relieved your Committee on Claims from a vast amount of duty they could not have performed. After the committee have looked over this work and suggested that there are claims here which should go back for further examination it seems to me that the rule should be followed. We should follow our committee in this regard. It may be necessary to extend the time for the commission; but whatever we do, it seems to me a very regular and safe course to follow the committee and let such claims as they say ought to be reinvestigated be reinvestigated, because to think of discussing the merits of particular claims in the Senate is impossible. We cannot determine these cases. We might do great injustice for or against particular claimants. I think it is best to follow the committee and the commission, and then we shall not do any great outrage to our constituents. I hope the recommendation of the committee will be followed without forcing us into the investigation of particular cases, which they say should be further investigated by the commission.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My attention had been called to this general proposition, so that I had examined the leading features of it, and having some impressions on the subject I am impelled to state them.

I agree with my honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] that the utmost diligence of inquiry should be made into the examination of all this class of claims. I agree with him that the rule of evidence is inflexible, that the party must be loyal in order to be entitled to remedy in this forum. But, glancing at the principal facts in this case, it occurs to me that the real question here is not so much the merits of this claim as the status of the individual. In fact it all turns on that. As I have listened—as I always do with great pleasure—to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTT,] who reported the bill, it is a question of the status of this individual: was he loyal or was he not? There are certain conceded facts, as I understand, in the case. I am not going to argue the proposition at all. I rise simply to state, as I have only glanced at the case, the impressions upon my own mind from the conceded and incontrovertible facts before us.

In the first place it is incontrovertible, as I gather from all the papers in the case, that this man was reputed throughout the confederacy to be a Union man, was treated as a Union man, and put into prison on that account during the war. That is so stated.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a mistake.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That may be or may not. I am only looking at the case as it comes to me in the papers.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator means the papers in evidence, that is a mistake.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; I mean that statement was made in the House of Representatives by the chairman or a member of the Committee on Claims, and as it was not contradicted I supposed it might be assumed.

Mr. SCOTT. I will state to the honorable Senator that that is a mistake of fact. I have read every word of the testimony of General Bailey himself, taken before the commissioners of claims, and he stated in answer to their questions that he never was molested by the rebels.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will look at the proceedings in the House he will find that Mr. HAZELTON, the chairman or a member of the Committee on Claims, in summing up, stated that as a fact, and it was not controverted. That this man therefore had a reputation throughout that country as a Union man I think it reasonable to conclude from the papers in the case.

How did he stand on our side? That was his reputation on our side as yet, from the statement of General Sherman, General Banks, General Howard, and sundry other generals whom I do not stop to name. They went so far as to trust this man within our lines with a permit to travel within our lines. That seems to have been the general reputation of this man. Now you come down to the examination of the question before the commission to see how it stood there. One of the first questions, of course, which the commission were to satisfy themselves about was his loyalty. I am not going into the merits of the case, for so far as we are concerned at the present time that does not seem to be the burden. It is the status, I repeat, of the individual himself with which we are concerned. Was that examined by the court? Was that an issue before the court and was it examined? Certainly it was. Let me read now what the commission say upon that subject:

> William Bailey is a native of Virginia; is seventy-one years of age; was the owner of a large plantation near Alexandria, on the Red River, embracing over fifteen hundred acres; the chief product was cotton; when the war broke out he was residing on this plantation. After a careful examination of the testimony and all the papers in the case, and after the most thorough and searching inquiry, we find Mr. Bailey to have been a constant and consistent Union man during the whole war.

That is the finding of this court. That is the finding of a court of our own selection. After the most thorough and searching examination they find that this man was a consistent and constant Union man during the entire war. It is said by my honorable friend that there has been a fact discovered since which throws great light on this subject, which was not then in issue before this court, and which he thinks is a very significant fact and which I agree with him unexplained would be a significant fact. What is that fact? It is that this man had sold cotton to the rebel government. If you look at the papers, Mr. President, you will see that that precise issue was before the court. The court knew that. The court knew that this man was dealing in cotton with the confederate authorities. They took cognizance of that fact, and they investigated that fact thoroughly. They sent, as the case finds, an agent or agents into that country to investigate that fact; and notwithstanding that fact, notwithstanding they knew that he had been dealing in cotton, that he had sold five hundred bales of cotton, yet they did not hold that that was absolutely inconsistent with the idea that after all, at heart and really, he was and might consistently be a Union man. I do not go into the reasoning on the subject at all; I only allude to these principal facts as affecting the single question which my honorable friend alleges here should be conclusive.

Mr. WASHBURN. Did the Senator hear me? I stated very plainly that so far as that evidence was concerned it was understood that he had sold the cotton under duress; and if it was done under duress their decision was correct; but they then knew nothing about the subsequent transaction, they knew nothing about the circumstance that the principal witness relied upon to establish his loyalty at the time, and who swore that he had been loyal, himself was a rebel and a supporter of the rebel cause. What I stated was that where a man sold his cotton under duress, as they supposed in the first examination this man had done, it was not evidence of disloyalty; but it is the subsequent acts and the newly discovered testimony, none of which was before the commission originally, that throw doubt upon the case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Undoubtedly; and I was about to explain, if my honorable friend had not anticipated me, that the reason the court deemed it consistent to find loyalty with knowledge of the fact that he had been dealing in cotton, was that they found that it was not a voluntary act on his part. They could not have found it in any other way. Now the question arises, if that did not make him disloyal in the estimation of this court, would another act, which would be liable to the same explanation as my honorable friend will agree and as the chairman of the committee undoubtedly will agree, make him so?

Then, Mr. President, looking at all these facts, the case comes simply to this, as I conclude, and it leaves this impression on my mind: having established a court of our own creation and having limited its jurisdiction and having prescribed the rules of evidence upon which it shall admit parties to contest or to prove their cases, the court having settled that this man had a claim and that he was in a condition to present it, on the evidence here it is simply a question of probable cause. Is there probable cause now to suspect that this man was disloyal contrary to the finding of the court, who investigated precisely the point upon which it is suggested that the case ought to go back for further examination? I submit that if this were a proceeding in a court of law it would be precisely a case of newly discovered evidence tending to raise a probable presumption that the verdict or the judgment was wrong, and that it would have been otherwise if this evidence had been in the case. That my honorable friend thinks it would be so is undoubtedly clear, or at least he has a suspicion that it would be so; whether his judgment is clear that it would be so or not I do not know, but he has a belief that certainly it ought to be examined into.

But, Mr. President, it should be remembered that this case has been before the House of Representatives since, and it should be remembered also that at a former session this same question was before the Senate and the claim was stricken out of the bill on a suspicion, and the only result of it is what is produced here. There has been no examination into the case, as I understand, on the part of the Government to elicit the fact of this man's disloyalty. The same question being before the House of Representatives again this winter, the suggestion has come to the House of Representatives which has come to us from this court, that there has been cumulative testimony upon a point which was examined by that court. The House of Representatives have considered it, and it will be seen that from the fact that the House of Representatives have sent it here for our examination they at least have not attached the same importance to this cumulative evidence which my honorable friend from Massachusetts and the chairman of the Committee on Claims seem to have done.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am disposed to regard it simply as a question of probable cause. Do these additional facts show to our satisfaction or render it probable in view of all the facts that this man was a disloyal man? If he was, then I agree that this case ought to be recommitted to the commission. Otherwise I hardly see the necessity for it, because of course there should be an end of this litigation.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the Senator takes his seat, I know his sense of justice so well that I wish to call his attention to what the facts were upon which loyalty was found. Loyalty was found by the commissioners upon the testimony of General Bailey himself; of T. S. Walker, who was an assistant adjutant-general upon General Emory's staff, and knew nothing of General Bailey until he went there in 1864 with the Army; and of Mr. Withenbury, who was his agent on the plantation, and he swore to his loyalty, and yet he was in the employment of the confederate agent for the purchase of cotton! These were the only three witnesses examined before the commisioners of claims, and it was on that testimony that the loyalty was found. The other facts, the number of bales that were sold, the time of sale, the correspondence between Mr. McKee and Rhorer about the bonds, and all these other facts, came out after that finding upon the testimony of these three witnesses. I simply wish to get these facts before the Senator's mind when he comes to view the question whether they bear upon that finding of the commissioners.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I take occasion to say in the beginning that I had not looked at the evidence, but I had glanced at certain principal facts which seemed to be taken for granted; and the main fact upon which I relied, or which made the deepest impression on my mind, was a fact which is certified to in the judgment of the court. Let me read it and see whether such a judgment as that, such emphasis of language, such conspicuousness and force of language, could be applied upon evidence such as is cited here:

> After a careful examination of the testimony and all the papers in the case, and after the most thorough and searching inquiry, we find Mr. Bailey to have been a constant and consistent Union man during the whole war.

As I was corrected on another point about the imprisonment, I will read from the remarks of Mr. HAZELTON in the other House:

> I will say further, before taking my seat, not only did he exhibit the ordinary tokens and evidences of loyalty to the Government, but he was absolutely arrested and cast into prison by the confederate authorities on account of his loyalty. He was treated as a loyal man all the way through the war by the confederates, and recognized as a loyal man by every general of the Federal armies having control in that region of country, and after a thorough investigation was adjudged to be loyal by the commissioners of the southern claims commission. It seems to me that there is no room for a doubt, or the possibility of the shadow of a doubt, of his acknowledged and genuine loyalty and devotion to the Government.

I knew I had seen the statement somewhere, although I said in the beginning that I had not analyzed the evidence in this case; I simply glanced at what I understood to be the leading and principal facts which I understood to be uncontroverted.

Mr. SCOTT. As this alleged and asserted fact has evidently made a deep impression on the mind of the Senator from Maine, I will ask leave to read a portion of General Bailey's testimony, on page 4 of the written testimony:

> Question. Were you ever arrested by the confederates?
> Answer. I was not; but I was threatened with arrest.

He never was arrested, never was imprisoned.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it has recently pleased some author to entitle his book "Drifting." That is not extraordinary; and yet considering that that book was written and the title bestowed upon it before hearing the speech of the honorable Senator from Maine, I think more genius was evidenced in the selection of the title than could be proved by anybody that should select it after hearing the somewhat remarkable speech which has fallen from my honorable friend. He concludes it by violating the rules of the Senate in reading from the debate which took place in the other House; and the Senator from Pennsylvania, as wholesome comment upon it, shows how useful the rule is. Some gentleman in the other House made an assertion, it seems, unfounded in evidence, and expressly disproved by the claimant himself. My honorable friend from Maine reads that, and then the Senator from Pennsylvania, turning to what is before us, takes up the testimony of the claimant himself and shows that he under oath declares that he never was cast into prison. That is wholesome comment upon the fact, it is wholesome illustration of the wisdom of that rule which says that the sayings in one House shall not be brought into another and especially to influence the doings of that House into which they are brought. This, however, is a trivial circumstance; and it was not to comment on it that I rose.

The Senator from Maine several times refers to the claims commission as a court, and actually proposes to say that we shall vote to pay a large sum of money from the Treasury and establish a precedent, in so far as it may be a precedent, because the claims commission has once expressed an opinion on this subject. Notwithstanding the fact of newly discovered evidence, notwithstanding the recall and reversal of that judgment as the Senator from Maine would make it, he proposes that, proceeding upon the original saying of the claims commission, we shall treat that saying as the finding of a court—such were his expressions—and shall proceed to pay the money unless, as he says, we can find probable cause to suppose that the court has fallen into error.

Mr. President, it must be within the fresh recollection of the Senator from Maine, for hardly three years have rolled between then and now, that there came into the Senate a proposition, explained carefully at the time, to create the so-called claims commission. That proposed legislation encountered active opposition. The most thorough opposition it received was drawn by way of forecast and prediction that the time would come when some such claim would be set up as to the function and authority of the commission as the honorable Senator from Maine has to-day propounded. It was insisted that, passing beyond its original intention, it would in a short time come to be regarded as a court or a quasi court, a tribunal to decide, and that we should be in some sense bound, or estopped, or concluded—all these words I think will be found in the debate—by the doings of this proposed commission. That argument, that apprehended danger was scouted by the advocates of the claims commission. It was vehemently disclaimed by many Senators, some of whom remain, some of whom are gone. The debate, I think, will show that in support of the proposed commission it was, as far as parliamentary rule and courtesy would permit, charged as unfair, as unreasonable, as disingenuous to pretend that there was danger that it would ever afterward be insisted, as my honorable friend from Maine has to-day insisted in respect of the power, the function, the nature, and the authority of the claims commission and its acts.

What was the ground on which the commission was planted? It was said that the tooth of time would eat away fresh and unmistakable evidence and proof; that when the dust of years should cover them, when the actors in the drama which had just passed by had gone, when their heirs and assignees and representatives, when adventurers, and claim agents should occupy the ground, many claims would be exhumed and presented to us fabricated or exaggerated; and therefore as a stitch in time, which might save nine, as an anchor cast in season, as a bond taken of fate in advance, it was wise and provident for the ministers and trustees of the public and of the Treasury to make record of the truth while yet the truth was fresh, in lawyers' phrase to perpetuate the testimony, to take view and inquisition in season and in advance in order to close the door against the exaggerations, the frauds, the fictitious claims with which otherwise we might hereafter be inundated and which in the chances and changes of political fortune might by some congressional majority and some administration be favorably entertained. Such were the arguments of safety, of provident security against a possible future, which carried the legislation establishing the commission of claims.

It was said in every form that the opinions they expressed were to have none of the attributes of the judgment of a court; that they were to bind no one; that no right was to ensue in consequence of what they might say or do; but that as an instrumentality of the Government they were to occupy themselves in ascertaining and making record of facts to be used on all future occasions and in all proceedings when these facts might be of use. I think every Senator who hears me and who participated in the discussion and the proceeding to which I refer, will confirm my recollection and I feel confident the record also will bear me out.

That was three short years ago; but now what do we see? Yesterday was taken up in the Senate a bill covering sixty-six quarto pages, containing nearly eleven hundred southern claims, and appropriating money to pay them, only sixty of which the Senator from Massachusetts tells us have been or could be investigated by any committee of this body; and without even reading the bill, without its undergoing the formal process of stereotyped parliamentary proceeding, the Senate turned to three amendments and confined its attention to those. As to the rest of this bill, appropriating I know not how much money—the total has been stated I believe and if it has been I will borrow it from my friend from Pennsylvania——

Mr. SCOTT. A little over $600,000.

Mr. CONKLING. A little over $600,000. That fraction of a million dollars which before we had become used to vast sums told largely in any national account, $600,000, was accepted virtually by the Senate as a matter of course, it not being deemed worth while to read the bill or the items, and that because the claims to be satisfied by the money had received the expression of a favorable opinion from this same commission of claims—a commission, I repeat, established under the assurances that nothing it could say was to operate as a judgment, nothing it could do was to bind Government or people, and specifically that no money was to be taken from the Treasury in consequence of any opinion or any views the commission might express.

I said, Mr. President, something when I commenced about "drifting," and I submit that considering that the span of time is so narrow the Senate has drifted rather rapidly in three years. To prove that, however, I have more abundant evidence than that to which thus far I have adverted.

In this bill is found a claim of General Bailey. It is not my fortune to know General Bailey. It would be superfluous to disclaim any feeling of hostility or ill-will. I see his name as a mere sign, and I comment upon his case as if it were, as it is I think in respect of us, a matter wholly impersonal to every Senator. He claims a large sum of money. Upon that claim the commission express an opinion which has been read with iterated emphasis. The Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] read it; the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] read it yesterday; the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] read it. It is an indispensable part of every argument in favor of the claimant. Having expressed that opinion, which I deem it unnecessary to repeat, the same commission, which the Senator from Maine now styles a court, proceeding upon that ground which can never be answered in any court where justice is administered so far as I know, the ground of newly discovered evidence; not cumulative; not evidence in degree merely and therefore of the kind in the presence of which courts have refused a new trial; but upon newly discovered evidence in that sense which summons every tribunal to allow a rehearing—the commission, not officiously, not blamably, not as volunteers, but in the performance of a conscientious and of a sworn duty, address to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims in the House of Representatives a communication, which communication recalls, retracts, and unsays that expression, here treated by some Senators as a judgment upon which it is proposed we shall go forward as trustees and pay away this sum of trust money.

Is not that very extraordinary, Mr. President, regardless of the merits of this particular case? Suppose the claims commission to be a court, as is insisted; suppose it to be a quasi court; suppose it to be a mere committee; suppose it to perform any of the functions and to possess any of the attributes which may be attributed to it; is it not remarkable that a parliamentary body, or any other body, should proceed to pay out a large sum of trust funds belonging to others upon the judgment or statement of a court, committee, or tribunal, after that statement has been retracted upon the ground that since it was made newly discovered evidence has been brought to light, in the face of which those who rendered the judgment or made the statement feel bound to bring it to attention and withdraw what has been said? Would not that, I submit to my honorable friend from Maine, be remarkable, regardless of the merits and without looking into the merits? If the honorable Senator from Maine will treat this as res nova, if he will go back and examine it from the beginning without reference to the commission of claims, he will avoid in whole or in part my present suggestion. But is it not, I submit to him, remarkable to plant himself upon the saying of the commissioners of claims when we have a notice served on us that they withdraw that statement and have discovered evidence since in the presence of which they never would have made it? Let me read the last statement from the commissioners of claims, signed by every one of them, and dated so lately as the 26th of March, 1874:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The records of the trans-Mississippi cotton bureau, purchased by the Government since the report was made in the case of William Bailey, No. 980, show facts which we deem it our duty to report to your committee. The case having been reported by us to Congress, we do not feel at liberty to make any further investigaton of it unless specially directed by that body to do so.

It clearly appears that General Bailey sold to the confederate government on the 14th of November, 1862, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton. His son-in-law, Andrew W. McKee, had been appointed by the confederate government, namely, in October, 1862, general agent for the purchase of cotton in Western Louisiana and Texas. The first sale made was by General Bailey, November 14, 1862. This five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton was no part of the eight hundred and thirty-four bales litigated in the United States district court for the eastern district of Louisiana in 1864. It may be, perhaps, the cotton referred to by General Bailey, (see his testimony before the commissioners of claims of November 14, 1871, page 5,) in his answers, as follows:

"Question. Did you contribute anything to aid the confederate cause?

"Answer. Never, one farthing, neither directly nor indirectly.

"Q. Did not you have to pay tithes?

"A. I had; and I was compelled to sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or have it burned and destroyed, in order to pay my taxes. I sold it to a young man, an agent of the confederate government there."

He subsequently tells of an armed force coming out to burn his cotton; of his telling them he would sell it, &c. The statement is confused and inconsistent, the date uncertain, but might be November, 1862; and if the young man, the agent, was his son-in-law, it may identify the transaction, but will make the story of duress or an armed force very improbable.

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained that General Bailey, on the 14th of November, 1862, sold voluntarily—

Not under duress—and if I can have the attention of the honorable Senator from Maine I beg his attention to this point—not under duress, but in the language of these commissioners, "sold voluntarily."

My honorable friend from Maine said that the only way the commission in the first place satisfied the law and their conscience in saying what they did favorable to this claim was that his acts had taken place under duress. Here comes an after-statement from the same commission saying:

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained that General Bailey on the 14th of November, 1862, sold voluntarily five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton to the confederate government; that he was the first leading planter to sell his cotton; and that his son-in-law was the confederate agent who bought it.

Mr. President, although I do not mean to discuss this matter long or to discuss the merits at all, I call attention to the fact not only that the tribunal has reversed its first expression, by whatever name it should be called, but states as matter of fact that the very thing upon which it relied in its first expression turns out to be an error, and that the contrary is true.

Yesterday when the Senator from California was on the floor, he or some other Senator told us that Mr. McKee, who appears to be a son-in-law of the claimant, was not his son-in-law at this time; that he was upon very bad terms with him; that he was hostile to him. Since yesterday I have seen a letter—and I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to correct me if I am wrong—a letter written by Mr. McKee himself in August, 1863, saying that he will be at a particular place at a time named, and saying that his wife will accompany him. That was in August, 1863, was it not?

Mr. SCOTT. August, 1863.

Mr. CONKLING. I think there can be little mistake about the fact, then, that in August, 1863, Mr. McKee was the son-in-law of this claimant.

Mr. WEST. But he might have been on very bad terms with him in 1862.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Louisiana, who is deeply read in the book of human nature, says to me that he might have been on very bad terms with him in 1862. Yes, Mr. President, he might have been; but considering that the first sale of cotton that we hear of took place in the middle of November, 1862, within six weeks of the end of that year, and considering that in August, 1863, this gentleman had been married for some time—it does not appear how long, but anybody who reads the letter will see that he was not on his wedding tour, and was then a settled, married man, according to that letter, as far as you can infer anything about it—and considering also that some intimacy of acquaintance usually precedes marriage, I think it will be a little difficult for the Senator to find any period of time during this little interval which will uphold a notion that Mr. McKee and General Bailey were enemies during all these transactions which commenced in the middle of November, 1862, and extended from that time on. That would be so remarkable if it were true that I should want this case referred back for a rehearing on that question alone.

Let me go a little further.

It further appears from the "day-book" of the cotton agency in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, (to which our attention has recently been called,) that A. W. McKee, as confederate agent, bought of William Bailey, November 14, 1862, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton, and paid him therefor, in confederate bonds, $20,000, and in notes, $18,731.44, making a total of $38,731.44; also that on the 1st of January, 1863, McKee bought of Bailey six hundred and eighty bales of cotton, and paid him in bonds $24,100, and in notes $30,001.64; making $54,101.64.

This, the Senate will see, brings it a good deal nearer. There was a transaction in January, 1863, and we find that in August, 1863, at all events, Mr. McKee had then for some time been married to the daughter of General Bailey.

Now, Mr. President, if this case has no better foundation to rest upon than the allegation pertaining to that narrow neck of time, that isthmus between January and August, when this confederate agent was the son-in-law of the claimant and had been for some time, that during that narrow isthmus of time a war was raging between the claimant and his son-in-law, I suggest the foundation is very narrow considering the dimensions of the claim.

But it was not my purpose to prove, I am not familiar enough with the case to attempt to prove, that the merits are one way or the other. My purpose is to expostulate against such an act as the Senate will commit if at the end of three years after establishing this commission, with every declaration that its statement was not to be a judgment, that it could make no decision, that it could bind nobody, we are first to accept blindly any expression made by the commission; that then when they send us notice tantamount to saying that in this particular case they have made a mistake owing to the want of evidence, and that they deem it their duty to call attention to the fact that newly discovered evidence disproves the very supposition on which they rested their opinion, namely, that these sales had taken place under duress, whereas it turns out that they were voluntary; and as the Senator from Massachusetts well said, the acceptance of bonds for cotton explodes utterly the idea that this was a sale with the wolf at the door, because necessity knew no law, to obtain the wherewithal to render up immediate taxes that were instantly due—I say my purpose is to expostulate against going back to a judgment, if judgment it is to be called, virtually retracted, withdrawn, and set aside by the tribunal which rendered it, and that upon evidence not merely newly discovered, but newly discovered in the technical sense in which a new trial would be awarded in any court in which justice is meted out, and particularly in an instance where the facts themselves are so provocative of suspicion as they are here, and thus substantially reversing and obliterating the whole design and idea with which the commission was created, and saying not only that we will pay blindly upon an expression of favorable opinion by the commission, but that we will pay without any examination by a committee of our own; and finally, to cap the climax, when the committee is able to examine sixty cases, passes fifty-seven of them, and comes in saying "as to these three a mistake has been made, that is our opinion, and not only our opinion, but here is the claims commission itself saying so," that we shall go on and override all that in the hot haste we make to render out of moneys not our own an equivalent for southern war claims.

Mr. President, I have at all times not only confidence, but great and unfeigned confidence, in any judgment expressed by the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] and I may say, without dealing in parliamentary compliment, that I am very careful and reluctant ever to differ with him; but I know well in my own case the immense effort which for some reason has been made in respect of this particular claim. I know that most plausible and convincing statements have been brought to me orally and sent to me in writing; I received a fresh one this morning; and indeed candor compels me to say that so urgent have been the appeals, taken in connection with the allegations contained in them, that my misgivings were somewhat aroused about this matter before I heard its merits discussed; and knowing sa I do the appeals which have been made in the name of humanity and in the name of generosity, I cannot but think that if the honorable Senator from Maine would sit down and look over these papers, even as far as I have looked them over, which I admit is not very far, in place of relying upon statements made in the House of Representatives, which it turns out were made in error, he would modify somewhat the judgment which he gave to us, upon which, if we follow it, we are in this case, to be sure, to pay but a single claim, but I fear to set an example as to the responsibilities which we take from the claims commission and from the committee of this body whose business it is to explore affairs of this sort and in other respects involved in this legislation, which will come home to plague us and to plague those who come after us, when perhaps my honorable friend from Maine and others not as wise and conscientious as he may not be here, familiar with all this history and able with the same safety to dispense with those rules which we have laid down and to which I humbly conceive we must adhere or we shall drift and drift still further in this regard.

I wish to add a single remark. I omitted to say, indeed I did not know one thing which as a fact I think ought to be contributed to this debate. It has been alleged that McKee, this agent, was upon bad terms with his father-in-law, or with General Bailey. I am informed now by a member of the committee that the evidence shows that he, as the agent of the Confederate States, in purchasing this cotton from General Bailey, paid to him two cents a pound more than the price which he paid to others; and I state it as bearing upon the question of duress and also as bearing upon this furious internecine war which we are asked to believe was raging at the same time between the claimant and his son-in-law.

THE CURRENCY—FREE BANKING.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask leave now to submit a report from the committee of conference on the currency bill. I do not ask its consideration at this time unless there be unanimous consent, but I ask that it be read and printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest that it lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MORTON. I hope it will be read.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all of the amendment after "that," in the first line, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, shall be hereafter known as "the national-bank act."

SEC. 2. That section 31 of "the national-bank act" be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever, by reason of the amount of their respective circulations; but the moneys required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits in all respects, as provided for in the said section.

SEC 3. That every association organized, or to be organized, under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts amendatory thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of such circulation; which sum shall be counted as a part of its lawful reserve, as provided in section 2 of this act; and when the circulating notes of any such associations, assorted or unassorted, shall be presented for redemption in sums of $1,000 or any multiple thereof, to the Treasurer of the United States, the same shall be redeemed in United States notes. All notes so redeemed shall be charged by the Treasurer of the United States to the respective associations issuing the same, and he shall notify them severally on the first day of each month, or oftener at his discretion, of the amount of such redemptions; and whenever such redemptions for any association shall amount to the sum of $500, such association so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed. And all notes of national banks, worn, defaced, mutilated, or otherwise unfit for circulation shall, when received by any assistant treasurer or at any designated depository of the United States, be forwarded to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption as provided herein. And when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the respective associations by which they were issued; but if any of such notes are worn, mutilated, defaced, or rendered otherwise unfit for use, they shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency and destroyed and replaced as now provided by law: Provided, That each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the charges for transportation and the costs for assorting such notes; and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving such plates as shall be ordered by each association respectively; and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer; And provided further, That so much of section 32 of said national-bank act requiring or permitting the redemption of its circulating notes elsewhere than at its own counter, except as provided for in this section, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That any association organized under this act, or any of the acts of which this is an amendment, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, in whole or in part, may, upon the deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $9,000, take up the bonds which said association has on deposit with the Treasurer for the security of such circulating notes; which bonds shall be assigned to the bank in the manner specified in the nineteenth section of the national-bank act; and the outstanding notes of said association, to an amount equal to the legal-tender notes deposited, shall be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States, and destroyed as now provided by law: Provided, That the amount of the bonds on deposit for circulation shall not be reduced below $50,000.

SEC. 5. That the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, cause the charter numbers of the association to be printed upon all national-bank notes which may be hereafter issued by him.

SEC. 6. That the amount of United States notes outstanding and to be used as a part of the circulating medium shall not exceed the sum of $382,000,000, which said sum shall appear in each monthly statement of the public debt, and no part thereof shall be held or used as a reserve.

SEC. 7. That so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates, and for an increase of national-bank notes," as provides that no circulation shall be withdrawn, under the provisions of section 6 of said act, until after the fifty-four millions granted in section 1 of said act shall have been taken up, is hereby repealed; and it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to proceed forthwitth, and he is hereby authorized and required, from time to time, as applications shall be duly made therefor, and until the full amount of $54,000,000 shall be withdrawn, to make requisitions upon each of the national banks described in said section, and in the manner therein provided, organized in States having an excess of circulation, to withdraw and return so much of their circulation as by said act may be apportioned to be withdrawn from them, or, in lieu thereof, to deposit in the Treasury of the United States lawful money sufficient to redeem such circulation, and upon the return of the circulation required, or the deposit of lawful money, as herein provided, a proportionate amount of the bonds held to secure the circulation of such association as shall make such return or deposit shall be surrendered to it.

SEC. 8. That upon the failure of the national banks upon which requisition for circulation shall be made, or of any of them, to return the amount required, or to deposit in the Treasury lawful money to redeem the circulation required, within thirty days, the Comptroller of the Currency shall at once sell, as provided in section 49 of the national-currency act, approved June 3, 1864, bonds held to secure the redemption of the circulation of the association or associations which shall so fail, to an amount sufficient to redeem the circulation required of such association or associations, and with the proceeds, which shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, so much of the circulation of such association or associations shall be redeemed as will equal the amount required and not returned; and if there be an excess of proceeds over the amount required for such redemption, it shall be returned to the association or associations whose bonds shall have been sold. And it shall be the duty of the Treasurer, assistant treasurers, designated depositaries, and national-bank depositaries of the United States, who shall be kept informed by the Comptroller of the Currency of such associations as shall fail to return circulation as required, to assort and return to the Treasury for redemption the notes of such associations as shall come into their hands until the amount required shall be redeemed, and in like manner to assort and return to the Treasury, for redemption, the notes of such national banks as have failed, or gone into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of winding up their affairs, and of such as shall hereafter so fail or go into liquidation.

SEC. 9. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the Comptroller of the Currency, and he is hereby required, to issue circulating notes, without delay, as applications therefor are made, not to exceed the sum of $55,000,000, to associations organized, or to be organized, in those States and Territories having less than their proportion of circulation, under an apportionment made on the basis of population and of wealth, as shown by the returns of the census of 1870; and every association hereafter organized shall be subject to, and be governed by the rules, restrictions, and limitations, and possess the rights, privileges, and franchises, now or hereafter to be prescribed by law as to national banking associations, with the same power to amend, alter, and repeal provided by "the national-bank act:" Provided, That the whole amount of circulation withdrawn and redeemed from banks transacting business shall not exceed $55,000,000, and that such circulation shall be withdrawn and redeemed as it shall be necessary to supply the circulation previously issued to the banks in those States having less than their apportionment: And provided further, That not more than $30,000,000 shall be withdrawn and redeemed as contemplated during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

And that the title be amended so as to read as follows:

An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national-bank currency, and for other purposes.

GEO. G. WRIGHT,
T. W. FERRY,
J. W. STEVENSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. L. DAWES,
GEO. W. McCRARY,
S. S. MARSHALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only desire to say that that report has the concurrence of every member of the committee of both Houses. I move that the report be printed. I do not ask for its consideration at this time, of course, but give notice that I shall seek to call it up to-morrow morning immediately on the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator say that the report is signed by every member of the committee in each House?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir; it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3171) to amend the customs-revenue laws and to repeal moieties.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3479) in relation to parties in the Court of Claims; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE CLAIMS COMMISSIONERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I simply wish to say a word or two in reply to the Senator from New York. When I rose to address the Senate a while ago I thought I should commend myself to the Senate at least for my modesty, if not for the soundness of the suggestions that I made. It certainly was in no self-confident spirit; and if I should so far forget myself as to talk about "my judgment" and "the judgment of a court" in the sense which should take the Senate off their feet and arrest their judgments and force them to a conclusion of mind without due opportunity for reason on their part, I should be very sorry for it. That is all I can say.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator did not say anything about his judgment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; but my honorable friend in concluding referred to the Senator from Maine having formed a judgment which he was very apprehensive of.

Mr. CONKLING. That may be; but the judgment which I spoke of was the name which the Senator bestowed upon the statement.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not misunderstand my honorable friend, nor will I misrepresent him. Now as to the sense in which I talked of a judgment, I said distinctly that I likened it unto a judgment, and it was only by way of illustration that I called it a judgment, as my honorable friend, if he had been sufficiently attentive, would have seen. I knew this commission was not a court, and yet I knew very well that we invested it with the prerogatives of a court to a general intent. It is a commission, but its functions are judicial. It has a right to examine testimony, swear witnesses, make a conclusion. That is all I said or ventured to say. I said in concluding that I likened this proceeding to one that had been res adjudicata, and that there was an attempt to reopen it, and on that I held that there should not be suspicion merely, but probable cause.

Mr. President, I said in the beginning that I had not examined this question in detail; that I had only looked at certain principal facts; and from those principal facts I was not satisfied at all, the burden of proof being that way, of the necessity of returning this case to the commission again. That is all I said; that is all I say now; but after all my honorable friend from New York has said and after all the references he has made to the supplementary report of the commission, as he is disposed to regard it, I am not at all shaken in the impression with which I started out.

Let us look at this case for a moment. I do not care to repeat myself, but I insist upon it that these men did undertake to judge of this claim as a court. Call it a commission or whatever you please, they did undertake to examine this man's claim, and they either went out of their way or in their way. As an honest court, in the performance of a high duty, they did ascertain an important fact, and they use very emphatic and very strong language. They say they have made a very thorough examination into the identical question now before us, and in concluding, as if they intended to pile up this question and emphasize this man's loyality, after having said that they had taken particular pains on that subject, they say—I am now speaking of what was their decision, not to call it a judgment:

The cases of loyalty among the large landed proprietors of the South were so very rare, that were felt it to be our duty to investigate this case thoroughly—

And having investigated it thoroughly what did they say—

And after doing so we feel fully justified in reporting this claimant as loyal.

Have they ever taken that back?

Mr. CONKLING. What is the date of that?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no date to it, but it is whatever date the judgment or decision was. I do not know what that was. Have they ever taken that back?

Mr. CONKLING. Expressly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Never.

Mr. CONKLING. May I read to the Senator?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; not now.

Mr. CONKLING. I say they have taken it back in terms.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I insist they have never taken it back. In the first place, they have never re-examined it. It is not competent for them to take it back. They say in the beginning of the paper which has been read that they cannot re-examine it, and for that reason they make an unofficial statement. I do not set the one off against the other by any means, nor can it be done by either law or logic. One is in court, one is in the exercise of an official position; one is affirming solemnly in court or in the exercise of their official functions, the other is extra-official, not to say extra-judicial. But that is not the worst of it. They flatly contradict themselves. They flatly show that either judicially they were careless, indifferent, heedless, or that they are a little swift now. One of these horns they must take. Now I will read. I am a little instructed by what my honorable friend has said and by what he has referred to. Let us see if they have taken this back. What do they say? They say:

It would seem—

What "would seem?" A court talking about "it would seem!" They did not speak in that way when they were talking as a court exercising judicial functions. They said "this man's loyalty is proven." Now, when they undertake to certify something unofficial, they talk about what "would seem!" How does it seem, and what seems to these men who are now acting unofficially?

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained that General Bailey, on the 14th of November, 1862, sold voluntarily—

Is that a new fact? Why, sir, they had that fact before them, and they certified in their record that they had that fact, and it was a principal fact. The sale of this very five hundred bales that they here talk about it would seem was before the commission, and they examined it as a principal fact touching the man's loyalty. Let us go a little further:

sold voluntarily five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton to the confederate government—

My comment upon that is, they did gratuitously certify a fact which they were in law bound to find in that judgment, or else they are a little swift on this occasion. Let us go a little further:

that he was the first leading planter to sell his cotton.

That is what they find. That is the finding of this extra-official statement out of court. Now put that against the other and see how the two things will read:

The cases of loyalty among the large landed proprietors of the South were so very rare that we felt it to be our duty to investigate this case thoroughly, and after doing so—

That is, after investigating the case, and after finding that this man had sold five hundred bales of cotton, they were delighted, notwithstanding all the evidence in the case controlling the fact, to certify to his loyalty; and now, out of court, without the sanctions which accompany the court-room, what do they say? I do not mean to say anything offensive; but they stultify themselves by saying that he was the first leading planter to sell his cotton, and they say that, reciting the identical fact that they had examined into in 1872 and reported upon. That is not calculated to weaken my impression very much. On the other hand, I should be inclined to say:

I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.

I am very glad that my honorable friend from New York has been solicited in some way, to some end, that his attention had been called to this particular fact, and that he brought it to my attention and emphasized it with all that power and eloquence for which he is so distinguished, that he got it through my head at last that there really was very little in this new disclaimer.

Mr. President, I attach no importance at all to the fact of this being a "judgment," although my honorable friend seemed to attach great importance to the fact that I had in some sense called this a court, and that we were concluded, we were estopped, and could not reopen this question. All I meant to say was that when a great fact is res adjudicata, and particularly when this great Government selects its own tribunal, and that tribunal settles the facts in its own way and reports its judgment here, it does not become us to throw discredit over that judgment or decision on mere suspicion. That is precisely the ground I rested upon before. That is just what I rest upon now.

One word more in this line. My honorable friend says this is not a judgment in any sense, and he protests that the Senate of the United States shall not be concluded by my asseverating that this is a judgment. It is no judgment at all. Now, sir, there are some eleven hundred of these claims. Am I right about that?

Mr. SCOTT. Nearly eleven hundred.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Nearly eleven hundred of these claims. What are these? Are they judgments? No; my honorable friend says they are not judgments. Are they decisions? Probably, yes. They carry with them so much sanction and so much authority, that my honorable friend himself was disposed to take them without reading. I asked to have them read; but somebody said he guessed it was not worth while, and I thought it was my honorable friend from New York, for I hardly know any other man on the floor who could have controlled me on that subject. If I did not submit to him, it must have been to somebody. I supposed he made that proposition. At any rate I was a little disposed that the whole bill should be read; but it was said "no; it is not necessary to read it." Why? The cases have all come from the commission; they are the judgment of a court; they are entitled to our confidence; they have been considered and they are entitled to our confidence; you need not read them at all. If it has not that significance what on earth has it?

More than that, they had the action of another body, which my honorable friend reprimanded me for alluding to. I withdraw all I said about that and we will be quits on that.

Mr. President, I rose in the beginning, upon a cursory examination of what I considered to be the principal facts, to state to the Senate the impression that those facts had made upon me, that there was no particular necessity disclosed here for the return of this claim to the commissioners of claims. That is all I did say; that is all I say now, and the discussion so far as it has gone rather strengthens that impression.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, with the eloquence and the facetiousness of the honorable Senator from Maine, I am too prudent to attempt to cope. With his statement of facts, I want for one moment to deal. The Senator from Maine cannot offset the second report against the first report of this commission which he has come to the conclusion is not a report and does not render a judgment, and the chief reason is that the second report had not those sanctifying influences of the court-room, as he said in one place, and those solemnities which pertain to acts performed by official persons acting officially. Owing mainly to these discrepancies, the honorable Senator from Maine is not able to repose as he would like to do upon the second report of the commissioners in order that he may be assisted in doing justice. In the hope of relieving some of the anxiety and trouble of the Senator from Maine, I wish to call his attention to this second report. I really think I can satisfy him that in place of the commissioners being swift, he has been a little swift himself. Here is the second report dated thus: "Office of the commissioners of claims, Washington, D. C., March 26, 1874." This report is signed by "A. O. Aldis, J. B. Howell, O. Ferriss, commissioners of claims."

So it had the sanctity of the court-room. All of the influences which pervade that place surrounded the incubation and inception of this document. It was made and signed by these men officially, all of them acting as commissioners. What, then, is the particular absence that the Senator from Maine so piteously laments? He says the case was not before them. How was that? A case is never before them upon a hearing, although he thinks this is so much like a court, and no counsel ever appears on the one or the other. On the contrary, this is a self-sustaining, self-moving, if not automatic machine. They proceed, as the Senator from Maine and his committee proceed with an appropriation bill, to take it up and read it and investigate it themselves of their own mere motion. There is no day when it is in court rather than any other day. Therefore this case was before the commission in respect of everything save one technical thing. What was that? That they had already handed over their statement which the Senator from Maine has read in part again. Although he said he did not wish to repeat it, he did read it again.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I had not read that before.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend may not have read it, but the Senator from California read it yesterday and so did other Senators, and although they did not read it as fluently, with anything like the emphasis and solemnity which my friend gave us, nevertheless it was ponderously and repeatedly proclaimed to the Senate and sunk deep into my soul, as I presume it did into the soul of every other member of the body.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I had not heard it, though.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend was at that time revolving in his mind some of these broad and expansive definitions which he applies to this case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was in my committee-room.

Mr. CONKLING. In this second report we have these men acting officially, acting as a body, acting in their court-room, acting upon this case, and saying what? Not stultifying themselves, if my honorable friend will pardon me. With a somewhat intimate acquaintance with all three of these men, Judge Aldis and his two associates, I say they did not stultify themselves in this instance; but on the contrary, if there be three men who in my belief may safely challenge comparison with any others in the employment of the Government for the zeal, the fidelity, the discernment, and the candid discrimination with which they apply themselves to their duties, it is these three gentlemen who my honorable friend thinks have gone far toward making a farce of themselves and their business. What do they say?

The records of the trans-Mississippi cotton bureau, purchased by the Government since the report was made in the case of William Bailey, No. 980, show the facts which we deem it our duty to report to your committee.

Do they stultify themselves because they did not know anything about this before? But the honorable Senator from Maine, proceeding to read and passing over half this document, falls pell-mell upon this, and impales these men upon the glittering cimeter of his wit, not to speak of his logic; the Senator says they say "it would seem," and Denmark's wayward prince never wrung the changes upon that word, as rendered by the great master, as my honorable friend did: "it would seem," and as he echoed himself we might suppose that these men, referring to nothing, speaking of their own consciousness and conviction, were uttering something. Why, Mr. President, we need to refer to the context in order to rescue this board from the heavy censure of my honorable friend. They go on to say:

It clearly appears that General Bailey sold to the confederate government, &c.

Then they say this was the cotton to which the questions and answers related; they set out those questions and answers; they set the facts; and then what? They venture to bestow a comment upon this. Like a referee who is to hear and report, reporting so much of this newly discovered evidence as they deemed germane and essential and referring to that, they comment thus:

It would seem to be clearly established—

"Clearly established" how? By the evidence discovered among the rebel archives, a perusal of which they here set forth.

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That what?

Mr. CONKLING. I will come to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Do not forget it.

Mr. CONKLING. Certain as you live, I will come to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is what I want.

Mr. CONKLING. I will come to that pivot, that universal joint on which my honorable friend swings round and round, when he says that these men stultified themselves because they repeated the very fact upon which they had found the reverse.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Exactly, that is so.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend has the courage now, although in a low tone of voice, to repeat that that is so. I am going to see whether it is or not.

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained that General Bailey, on the 14th of November, 1862, sold, voluntarily—

I wish I could pronounce that word as the Senator pronounced the word "seem." How I would wait and vex the drowsy ear of the Senate, not to speak of all the other departments of the Government, if I could give the penetrating and clarion-like sound to that word which was emitted by my honorable friend from Maine when he accused these men of employing the term "it would seem" so and so. But now it appears that he sold "voluntarily." Does the Senator mean to say that that fact was before the commission and reported by the commission?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator——

Mr. CONKLING. I will always let the Senator from Maine tell what he thinks on a subject. I will let him tell me now; I shall be glad to hear it now; but first let me tell the Senator from Maine what I think I heard him say to-day. I think I heard him say in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the point on which the case turned before the commission on the question of loyalty, was the allegation of duress.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I agree to that.

Mr. CONKLING. That what this man did he did under duress. Well, "in the name of all the gods at once," does a man do voluntarily what he submits to under duress? Somebody has said "necessity knows no law." That is duress. When a foot-pad presents a pistol at the breast of my friend and asks for his watch and he gives up his watch and gives up his will, to save his life, that is duress; that is what the law calls vis major; and beggars among others are not choosers. But, Mr. President, he who decides for himself whether he will sell a commodity or not, he who picks and chooses whether he will or will not do a thing, is not acting under duress. He is rather of those of whom a great poet said that they walked,

In maiden meditation, fancy-free.

He is the freest man on earth, he is as free as my honorable friend from Maine was in his elocution when he said that these commissioners said "it would seem."

What further? It appears that he voluntarily sold cotton for what? For something to pay his taxes with, so that you could say there was a kind of duress of the pocket, a certain something pinching at the groin which amounted to duress? O, no; that "will not wash." On the contrary he sold cotton among other things for "$20,000 of confederate bonds," lasting securities based upon a bet against the life of the Republic. Every confederate bond was a bet and wager that the Republic would die. If the Republic should die the bond would live; but if the Republic should successfully assert its right to be, then the bond was not to be worth the paper which had been defiled by the engraving upon it. That bond to the sum of $20,000 was never taken by a man for the purpose of paying taxes. That will not do.

But, Mr. President, I wander a little from the point. These men in the first place found that the claimant was loyal because that which he did was done under duress. When the rebel archives were discovered and laid before them, they recall that and they say that from these papers it seems clear—I do not stop to pronounce the word "seem," I merely use it—it seems clear that he did voluntarily do that which before it was supposed he had done under duress. Now what becomes of all the distinctions of the honorable Senator from Maine? I submit to him that they come to one single point, namely: that these men having handed over their schedule of claims, of which this was one, were technically and manually divested of the possession of the claim, and therefore they say that if Congress retains possession that does not authorize them further, they cannot go on, but speaking as a board and a commission in their court-room, upon their oaths, and signing this report officially, they feel bound to serve notice upon Congress that here is newly-discovered evidence which not only changes the case but takes from it that one thing, that sine qua non upon which they rested their first report, and that turning out to be a fallacy the logic is that the whole thing falls to the ground.

But my honorable friend says they have stultified themselves. He says in the first place they had it not before them, and that they ought to have been in their court-room. It turns out that they were. He says they ought to have acted officially. It turns out that they did. He says they ought to have acted in reference to this case specially. It turns out that they did. And on the whole he says they have stultified themselves because they had before them originally the fact that this man had sold cotton and having that fact before them what more could they want to know? And although one rise from the dead and make new revelations, or although we are able to gather from the archives of the confederacy that testimony which shows that as to the very hinge on which they suppose the case turns the truth swings the other way the Senator says, "O no; they have passed upon this once; they did it in their court-room; they had no witnesses before them that we know anything about except those that appear here in the testimony; they had no counsel to represent either party; they were going on investigating for themselves; and now investigating in the same way they have suddenly discovered that which startles them with the knowledge that they made a mistake and been led into an error; they send it here and certify it." The Senator from Maine says it amounts to nothing, and he refuses to offset the one thing against the other. All I can say is that I not only offset the one thing against the other, but upon my mind it has the same influence morally and the same influence legally that it would have if a jury should come into court with a verdict and before they were discharged from the jury-box after having rendered it should discover that they had fallen into an error of calculation or that they had made some other blunder, and called attention to it on the spot. It has the same influence upon me that it would if a court or a referee or any other tribunal should come in and say: "I rendered that judgment; I made that finding; I did it in ignorance of this fact; and here is evidence which, had it been before me, would seem to mkae it clear that the finding should have been the other way."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, and Mr. SCOTT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, there are many things that I would wish to say, some that I ought to say, perhaps, in reply both to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from New York in reference to the action of the committee upon this whole bill; but we have now been engaged upon it since yesterday, spending the greater part of both days on the discussion of this case; and although these things ought to be said, perhaps, and attention called to some details which have been omitted, if we can have a vote on this bill—and I appeal to the Senate to give us one—I will forbear saying anything more on it. I do not wish to cut off my friend from Maine, for I see he is waiting to reply to the Senator from New York, but having the floor I do make an appeal to the Senate. Can we not now have a vote on the question?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will not occupy more than five minutes and we can then vote I shall not claim the floor again. I shall ask for a vote, and hope we shall succeed in having a vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I know that not the slightest importance will be attached by the Senate to the estimate which the Senator from New York puts on one fact and the different estimate which I put upon the same fact. His point is that this letter of these commissioners is of equally binding force with the judgment or decision rendered. My impression is that it is coram non judice anyhow, and they oust themselves in the first sentence they utter in the letter, saying that they did not have any jurisdiction of it and did not intend to take any jurisdiction of it. After reciting the fact that they have discovered certain evidence they say:

> The case having been reported by us to Congress, we do not feel at liberty to make any further investigation of it.

Then what? If they are not authorized to make any further investigation into it, is not there an end of their jurisdiction over it? Certainly. Then what is this? They put this in by way of dissertation, I suppose, by way of advice, by way of suggestion. They have been looking over the records, and some things have fallen under their observation that had not fallen before, and although they pass no judicial judgment upon it whatever and say they have no power to investigate and do not undertake to investigate it, they make a suggestion. Does that make a judgment? I submit not.

My honorable friend was a little adroit in quoting from these persons when they say "it seems" that this man had voluntarily sold cotton. They refer to one fact, as he will see; that is the fact of the five hundred bales sold in November, 1862. That is the fact they refer to when they say "it seems." My comment on that is what I have already said: it did not so seem at all when this commission examined that fact, and they say they did examine it most thoroughly, and they find it was not a voluntary thing. What has changed their minds? Two additional facts which have come in here, and not one of them touches that point at all. Here are the papers which they call additional facts, and not one of them touches that point, which is the principal point in this case. Let me call the attention of the Senator to this. Here is one of the letters which are relied upon to throw suspicion on this man's loyalty. Let me read it, and see what honorable Senators will say it is entitled to. There is no objection, says one of these agents addressing the other—not addressing this man—but the first cotton was sold in November, 1862, and almost all these papers are a year later; and in 1863 one agent says to another:

> There is no objection to purchase his (Bailey's) or your brother's cotton; and if you can pick up enough to pay all expenses in this wise, it is all right. I would—

Now here is the point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator—

> I would not advise—

He advises him to buy, but—

> I would not advise any alliances, however, with General Bailey.

Here are two confederate agents trading with this man to get his cotton, forcing him to sell it—that is the legitimate inference from the first finding of this court—and one says to the other: "Do not you trust him at all as a confederate; make no alliances with him whatever; he is not reliable; the Unionists have confidence in him." That is the style of new evidence which has been discovered, upon the suggestion of which we are asked to send this case back to these commissioners. I therefore rise to affirm and repeat what I stated in the beginning, that at any rate it does not impress me that it carries with it that probable presumption of disloyalty which necessarily forces us to any such conclusion. It is little more or less than a suspicion resting in the minds of these men, and they make that communication for what it is worth. I do not mean to say any more about it.

Mr. ALCORN. I regret very much that I shall have to trespass on the impatience of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania. If he is weary I beg him not to charge it to my account, but rather to the account of those who have made three and four speeches of an hour or more in length in order to express their views upon this question.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no impatience on this subject, but I would call the Senator's attention to the fact that every hour of delay imperils the interests of Mississippi and every other State that has appropriations in this bill. He can go on.

Mr. ALCORN. The Senator's statement is true; but "let justice be done though the heavens fall." I cannot permit this discussion to go by without saying something upon this case. I owe it to the people I represent to express myself upon this subject. I am not acquainted with General Bailey. I have never seen him in my life that I know of; and I am sure I never heard of him until I heard of this case of his. I know nothing of his family of my own knowledge. I know not whether he was a Union or disunion man, so far as my own knowledge goes. But with regard to the claims commission I desire to say that had I been here in my place when the law of Congress creating it was passed I should have voted against it. It would have been well for the people of Mississippi and the people of all the Southern States had that law never been passed.

The Government at the close of the war improvised a claims commission, for what purpose? The people who were in the Southern States within the rebellious districts, were presumed to have been rebellious during the war; but after its close the Government out of tender regard for those people, and not to do them injury, held out an inducement to the people in the rebel States to come here to prove that while the war went on they were loyal to the Government of the United States. The Government here laid an inducement for perjury that has been felt and that I have seen working itself in the Southern States. Of course the people there were under the presumption of rebellion against this Government; they could not have avowed Union sentiments and remained in that country during the war, for the confederate government tolerated no disloyalty to it there, as there was no disloyalty to the United States Government tolerated here. You invite a man who for four long years in the South under the sound of the cannon's roar saw the battle go on and stood with his fellow, to come forward with his witnesses and prove that he was a loyal man to the Government of the United States. There were certain loyal men down there who stood this test, and I believe from all the testimony I have at my disposal that this claimant was one of them. I can say, however, that many of those who have made proof of loyalty to this Government were certainly guilty of acts of more disloyalty to the Government than this man seems to be charged with. This man's case has been tried, and he has been tried by a tribunal that was set up by you and that has, whether it was intended so or not, acted the part of an inquisitorial tribunal for the purpose of probing the heart of every person who came before that board, to see whether they could not nose out some evidence of disloyalty.

An honorable friend near me asks me to let the Senate vote. I repeat to him, for I believe he was not present when I made my opening remark, that the impatience which the Senator from Pennsylvania manifests on this occasion, I trust, will not be charged to me. I owe courtesy to my fellow-Senators, and I will never while I occupy a seat in this body speak against time; I will never speak to annoy any one; but I will, in discharging my duty to my constituents, address the body and claim to be heard when I feel that it is proper for me to speak.

I say that this commission passed upon this man's case. They examined and scrutinized his witnesses. That was done by this inquisitorial board who make publication to the country of the fact that they do not allow more than about 10 or 15 per cent. upon the claims presented before them for adjudication. When people have come up from the South claiming that the Government owes them money, that here is a demand of $1,000, for instance, they proclaim "here is what we have permitted him to have, ten cents on the dollar." That is what they publish. The claimants are all glad to get what they can. They have had to bring their witnesses here from the Southern States, and so far as the South is concerned it has been made poorer by this claims commission than it was when it began. The lawyers around this city—a very reputable class of lawyers, I admit—have fattened and grown rich on the claims commission, but the people have in truth been made poorer by it.

But the court probed this case. They examined it closely. They scrutinized it. They examined the charges; they took the proof; and they found this man Bailey to have been loyal throughout, and they sent their judgment and adjudication here. Now after the adjudication has been had they send in a protocol, a sort of codicil to their will; they grab for this man. Having stripped him before the court of everything that it was possible they could carry away from him, they run their arms into the doors of the Senate Chamber and say to the Senate, "Give us back Bailey once more that we may put him through." I do not want to let them have Bailey any more. They have had him once, and I am for keeping him away from them now.

But what do they say? They come here with the plea that they have discovered new testimony. I will take these statements as if they were in the form of affidavits to sustain a plea, and I enter my demurrer to the plea. Admitting the facts as set forth, I claim that they are not sufficient in law to bar the right of Bailey in his action here before the Senate for this money. Was it disloyal to sell cotton to the confederate government? In what did the disloyalty consist? Here was Bailey in the State of Louisiana. The rebellion had established itself; the armies of the Government of the United States were a thousand miles away; the gun-boats were at Charleston, and the fight went on. The Government of the United States had blockaded the ports. The commodity that Bailey had raised, cotton, he had no means of sending abroad. He was forbidden by the confederate government to send it into the lines of the Federal Army; he was forbidden to send it to Liverpool for sale. What should he do with it? He had it. It was necessary that he should convert the cotton into something that would enable his family, while the war was going on, to subsist. Who else was a purchaser but the government of the Confederate States? Nobody else. There was no other purchaser. Was it disloyal for Bailey under such circumstances to sell to the confederate government his cotton? Where was the disloyalty? Had the Government of the United States declared at the time that this was an act of disloyalty? Where is the proclamation of your Government declaring that an act like that was disloyal? There is no such statute; there is no such proclamation; there is no such military order. It was no act of disloyalty in Bailey to sell his cotton to the confederate government.

The Government of the United States through its President sent agents to the Southern States to buy cotton. Was it disloyal for the President of the United States to send agents to the Confederate States to purchase cotton and say to those agents, "You may buy the cotton from the confederate government, you may buy it from Jeff Davis himself?" The President of the United States used language like this: he said that we must have cotton. Why did he say so? Because the necessities of the Government of the United States compelled it to purchase cotton from the Confederate States or the people of the Confederate States. Bailey sold to the Confederate States because his necessities compelled him to sell his cotton to the Confederate States for the purpose of obtaining the means of subsistence for himself and his family. Would a court of justice anywhere hold it to be an act of disloyalty for him to have sold cotton to the confederate government or anybody else in order to procure a subsistence for his family? Why did he take confederate bonds? He took them because the confederate bonds he knew would be good for something while the war went on. He knew the cotton was within the grasp of the confederate government; he could not take it away; it was in the power of the confederate government. The confederate government held it. He could not sell it to anybody else. And yet the Senator from New York says there was no duress here; he was free as air; he could have sold or not sold. There was nobody else he could sell to, there was no one a purchaser of cotton but the confederate government. Was it not duress? Yes, sir, duress present and menacing at the time. There was nobody there to say "You shall sell this or I will take your life," but there was the menace and there was that standing before him which showed him that if this cotton was not sold by him, perhaps the torch would be set to it, perhaps the government might say they would not pay for it but take it; and in the frugal way that a man has a right to do he said "Yes, I will take it."

But "O," says the Senator from New York—and so important was that discovery that he had to ask the Senate to listen to him a second time that he might make his point—"I have discovered that the man McKee, who was Bailey's son-in-law, absolutely gave him two cents a pound more for his cotton than he gave anybody else." What does that prove? The Senator from New York adduces the testimony to prove one fact, and I use it to prove another. It shows that Bailey was less inclined to sell his cotton, and that he was more difficult to deal with by two cents a pound than any other man in that country around him. It shows that Bailey was not ready to sell his cotton; it shows that Bailey did not run out to meet the purchaser; it shows that Bailey had to be dealt with, and they had to give him two cents a pound more for cotton than they gave anybody else before he would come to terms and make the trade; and now because he thus stood out, because with the necessity surrounding him he stood out and refused to capitulate until the inducement was offered him, it is here urged as testimony against him!

Mr. WEST. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will at the same time not lose sight of the fact that another Senator said that they did not buy cotton from anybody else but Bailey; they went to him and got it.

Mr. ALCORN. They bought it from everybody. That is a historical fact that the Senate judicially knows, that the confederate government bought cotton from every one. The philosophy of all that was this: the confederate government simply refused to allow cotton to go outside their lines; their ports were blockaded; they refused to pass it into the Federal lines; and then to allay the clamor of the people the government itself became a purchaser and a purchaser at a price to satisfy the wants of the people at the time.

But, sir, it is said that Bailey showed disloyalty in this, and yet he swore that he had been guilty of no disloyal act. I claim that you cannot convict him of having borne false testimony on the mere fact that he did sell cotton to the confederate government. I have made my argument on that point. But suppose that Bailey had denied that fact which stood out and existed at the time; suppose when he was before this inquisitorial commission he had concealed the fact from them that he had sold these bales of cotton, will you condemn him for that? Considering the weakness of human nature, can you condemn him for that? Go back to sacred history; look at an example which I venture to bring before the Senate, the case of the great and good Peter, no common man. He had left the presence of his blessed Redeemer but some ten hours before; he had seen Him perform His miracles; he knew He was the Son of the living God and that He had come to save the world from death and from eternal damnation; but when Peter was surrounded by his enemies, when his life was in danger, he denied the fact that he knew Christ or that he belonged to the soldiers that marched under his banner. Did the good Lord on this account discard Peter? Did He say that he was not to be trusted? Did He say that on account of that act of disloyalty He would not recognize him as having been true to His standard? O, no; but he said: Peter you have but exemplified the weakness of mankind; come now stand by me, under my banner, blessed still of the Lord; you shall go forward in the way that good people all move.

I am now supposing that Bailey, when before this court, may have concealed the fact. Bailey, whose property had been swept away from him; a man of fortune, with all his slaves surrounding him, had been stripped of all these; and now, bending down with age, poor and penniless, he makes his way up to the capital, and before this claims commission, almost from the very house of starvation, he comes before this inquisitorial court, and most piteously he begs that the Government will do him the courtesy of giving him a pittance that his old days may be soothed with the reflection that he has something upon which he can subsist until he can make his journey to

> The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
> No traveler returns.

He conceals the fact that he has sold these six hundred and eighty bales of cotton, and now, having purchased these records from the confederate government, you discover that he concealed the fact. Admitting, I say, that he did conceal the fact, it does not show that he was guilty in concealing that fact of any disloyalty to the Government of the United States. It does not show that old man Bailey was guilty of any wrong to the Government of the United States at the time the act was committed. He knew perhaps the weight that would be given to that act by this claims commission, and it was this which caused him to conceal the fact, if in truth he did conceal it. If in truth the fact existed, it was these circumstances which led the old man Bailey to conceal the fact.

Sir, I say again that here was duress existing, present and menacing, and that he could not sell his cotton to any other purchaser than the confederate government. Now, when you say it was wrong for him to sell cotton to the confederate government and that it was an act of disloyalty, I produce here the fact that the President of the United States sent officers to the South to buy cotton from the citizens and from the confederate government, giving protection to that cotton through the lines; that the Government of the United States exchanged for cotton clothes and blankets and meat and bread, and they were sent through the confederate lines and exchanged for cotton; and not only those articles, but Colts pistols, powder, and ball were sent to the South in exchange for cotton by officers of the Government of the United States.

What caused the United States to do this? The necessities of the Government. The cotton was necessary for the Government of the United States. They could not get along without it; and the Secretary of the Treasury in 1869 said this with regard to it, and I refer to it now to show the necessities that existed:

> The great staples of the South have for many years constituted a large portion of our exports. But for the cotton held in that section at the close of the rebellion the foreign exchanges would have been so largely against the United States that a commercial convulsion would have been imminent if not unavoidable. Even in the deplorable condition of those States, last year more than two-thirds of our exports consisted of their productions; and which is the crop of the present year, small though it may be, that is to save us from ruinous indebtedness to Europe.

Such were the straitened circumstances of the Government of the United States that its credit was threatened; it had to have cotton, and every means was used to get cotton. When General Bailey saw the Government of the United States trading with the confederate government, buying its cotton, giving provisions in exchange, when there was no law existing to forbid it, is he to be held as disloyal, because, forsooth, in the hour of his trial, in the day of his necessity he sold to the confederate government cotton that he could not dispose of in any other way, sold his cotton and then escaped into the Federal lines? The proof shows that he came into the Federal lines.

Mr. SCOTT. The Federal lines came to him.

Mr. ALCORN. It was all the same. They came to him. But I can tell you that if Bailey had kept his cotton and had refused to sell it to the confederate government, when the United States Army got there the cotton would have been missing, the flames would have already devoured the cotton; but the confederate government bought the cotton and removed it away, and afterward the cotton was brought back to the Federal Government and became valuable to the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator say that the proceeds of this cotton came into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. ALCORN. We cannot trace the cotton; I know nothing of this particular cotton. I know nothing of this case except what has been stated here and what I see in the testimony. This man's loyalty is attested by General Sherman; and remember that General Sherman had no recent acquaintance with Bailey; remember that General Sherman had resided in that district of country. General Sherman, I believe, was in the South at the time the secession ordinance was passed. He immediately went away. Bailey was acquainted with him and knew General Sherman's sentiments, and General Sherman, I presume, knew Bailey's. He testifies to his loyalty, and says that during the whole period while the war went on he was loyal. Ten thousand hearts in the South were loyal; yes, ten times ten thousand were loyal to the Government of the United States. They were not responsible for the revolution. But the armies gathered round them. Do you tell me that they did not act under duress? Yes; thousands and thousands of men who to-day would suffer themselves to be impaled before they would confess the fact; thousands and tens of thousands of them went into the confederate cause under duress. This man Bailey stood there under duress all the time; he sold his cotton under duress.

To prove that he sold it under duress allow me to state a fact. That cotton was worth in Liverpool twenty cents a pound in gold, when it could be taken to Liverpool for less than two cents a pound. Would Bailey, if he had not been under duress, have sold it to the confederate government for ten or twelve cents a pound in confederate bonds, the value of which depended upon the result of the war? The very sale that he made, the funds that he obtained, the manner of the sale, all show very conclusively that the man was under duress, and it was "sell here or sell not at all."

Suppose now, sir, that I had come to you telling you that I had left my plantation or my home in Mississippi, that I had sold to the confederate government my horses, that they were valuable for the cavalry; that I had sold my cattle, that I had divested myself of everything I could, and had escaped into your lines; would the fact that I had sold these things to the confederate government have been taken as an act of disloyalty? Would I have been reproved by a single man in all the broad land of having been guilty of an act of disloyalty in selling my property before I left the rebellious States? Certainly not. Why? Because there was no one else to whom I could sell it; no other power, no other authority, and I must have some means of subsistence. Under the necessities of the case, for subsistence' sake, Bailey sold his cotton. It was liable to be burned up any night. He knew that he was held to be a Union man, and he knew that the surroundings were such as to endanger his cotton. He sold it for money and bonds, knowing that the bonds had a value in Liverpool at that time, and even though he might have to escape into the Federal lines he could send his bonds there and realize something upon them by which to subsist his family. And yet you say that this was an act of disloyalty on the part of Bailey. Where is the evidence of disloyalty? Show me the taint of disloyalty that shall touch a man because in the hour of his trial, in the hour of his tribulation, in the hour of his necessity, he sold that which he had to dispose of in order that he might find a subsistence for himself and family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLAYTON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Claims striking out the appropriation for the claim of William Bailey.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOWE, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER.] If he were here he would vote against the amendment, and I should vote for it.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that Senators THURMAN and STEWART are paired on this motion to strike out; one of them would vote "yea," and the other "nay," [laughter,] which one I do not know.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Buckingham, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Ingalls, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Scott, Sherman, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, West, and Windom—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Cameron, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Logan, Morton, Spencer, Stewart, Thurman, and Tipton—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was on page 22, line 535, to strike out—

To Letitia Elsey and Maria H. Turpin, each $3,563.48.

Mr. SCOTT. As the Senate has voted in the manner in which it has done, I now wish to make a very brief statement in regard to this case to see how far this principle is to be carried. This case involves the same principle. Letitia Elsey and Maria H. Turpin are two of the nieces of a man named Whitty M. Sasser. Whitty M. Sasser lived in the same parish of Louisiana, the parish of Rapides, where General Bailey lived. He is now dead. The report of the commissioners in this case finds that he was disloyal. They find, however, who his relatives are, his brothers and sisters, and they find that these two of his nieces were loyal women, and they gave to them the two-fifths of one-half, finding that the other brother or sister, whichever it was, was disloyal also. These two loyal women, deriving their title through a disloyal source, are brought into this report. The only thing that Sasser's disloyalty was based upon was the sale of three hundred and thirty-one bales of the cotton; for he is proven to have been at the same Union meeting that General Bailey presided at in the same parish. The motion is to strike this out also. Of course, after this statement, the majority of the Senate, to be consistent with itself, ought to keep this clause in.

Mr. CONKLING. This man has the advantage of having two nieces, besides.

Mr. SARGENT. I concur entirely with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate, to be consistent, ought to keep this in, and I think it is perfectly proper to keep it in, provided the only point against this man is that he sold some bales of cotton. The court say, in the case of Bailey, that he admits that he sold five hundred bales, and they nevertheless report that he was loyal; and now they report another person, who, as I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania, was similarly situated was disloyal. It looks like inconsistency on the part of the commission.

Mr. SCOTT. Permit me to correct my friend——

Mr. SARGENT. With pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. General Bailey was examined and swore before the commission that he sold by compulsion. Mr. Sasser is dead, and his representatives are the claimants. The commission found him disloyal on the sale of the cotton.

Mr. SARGENT. Which seems to me, as I was stating, an inconsistent thing. The Senate, of course, will be consistent. I do not wish to go over the debate again, but I think these persons were in a very unhappy region of country at this time, subject to a severe pressure. If the commission could find that a person who stated he had sold five hundred bales was loyal, they ought not to hold that a person who sold thirty bales was disloyal. But the persons who are benefited by this little provision are unquestionably loyal and are women. I think that is an additional reason why we should concur with the previous action of the Senate and keep them in. I trust the Senate will not commit the inconsistency of striking out this item.

Mr. DAVIS. This case is rather a peculiar one and unlike the Bailey case. The commission awarded two-fifths of one-half to the two ladies named in the clause of the bill, leaving of course eight-tenths yet to be acted upon, the cases of the claimants for which were not properly presented before the commission as I understand. While the facts in regard to the cotton of the two men may have been the same in both cases, yet the surroundings of the two men might have been very different and probably were very different. I looked through this case as a member of the committee, and I think it ought to be referred back to the commission. Therefore I hope the amendment will be agreed to and the committee sustained. I believe the committee was unanimous on this claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the item.

The question being put, there were on division—ayes 28, noes 13.

Mr. ALCORN. I call for the yeas and nays. ["No!" "no!"]

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope we shall not have the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALCORN. I defer to the will of the Senate. I will not insist on it, but I do trust this section will not be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The ayes have it on a division, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask for another vote. ["Too late."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, line 741, the Committee on Claims propose to strike out "Feltz" and insert "Felts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 850, to strike out "Ryon" and insert "Ryons."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. The next amendment, from line 1367 to line 1371, was a proposition to strike out. I desire to offer a substitute for that, and I will make this explanation of it. That is an award made to the estate of John Fox, deceased, of Virginia. John Fox made a will about the year 1859, in which he provided for his slaves, providing that the land in Virginia was to be sold and land purchased with the proceeds in Ohio for the use of his slaves. The estate has never been settled, and is now in the hands of an administrator de bonis non, and allegations were made that he refused to recognize properly the proper rights of these colored legatees, now freemen. On that allegation the House committee struck out the name of the administrator de bonis non and put in the name of John A. Seaton, claiming to be an attorney in fact for these colored legatees. John A. Seaton is the large, almost giantlike colored Capitol policeman that we see about here. He produced a power of attorney signed with the mark of some eighty or ninety legatees, and very informally executed and acknowledged. There are other parties who allege that they are attorneys in fact for some of the legatees. There are certificates here showing that some of the negroes have been paid in full their share of the legacy. For the purpose of obviating a difficulty on both sides, with the agreement of the counsel for the administrator and those who claim to represent the negroes, I offer an amendment, that this money shall go to the estate of John Fox, deceased, to be paid to John T. Burns, receiver of the circuit court of Fauquier County, Virginia, to be by him reported to said court and distributed according to the will of John Fox, deceased. This receiver is a bonded officer, and this will make it the interest of both administrator and legatees to get it out of court as soon as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out on page 56, commencing in line 1367, the following clause:

To John A. Seaton, attorney in fact for the colored legatees of John Fox, deceased, $7,545: Provided, That said Seaton shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury proper evidence of his authority to receive said sum.

And in lieu thereof insert:

To the estate of John Fox, deceased, to be paid to John T. Burns, receiver of the circuit court of Fauquier County, Virginia, to be by him reported to said court to be distributed according to the will of John Fox, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was of the Committee on Claims, to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. That the case of William Bailey, the case of Whitty M. Sasser, which was reported allowed by the commissioners of claims to the extent of the interest therein of Letitia Elsey and Maria H. Turpin, and the case of John Campbell, administrator of the estate of Stephen S. Springer, deceased, be, and they are hereby, referred to the commissioners of claims for re-examination and report; and the said commissioners of claims are hereby authorized to reopen, examine, and consider the said cases, and to make report thereon to Congress.

Mr. DAVIS. I take it the Senator from Pennsylvania will ask to strike out the Bailey case from that amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. The name of William Bailey occurs there. The amendment striking out that case in the body of the bill has been voted down. While I do not think the claim ought to be struck out of the section, of course it ought to conform to the action of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to strike out the words "the case of William Bailey."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 482) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Salem, in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 716) for the better government of the Navy of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge;

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill—House bill No. 3168.

Mr. KELLY. I move to amend that by——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the motion is not in order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is about half an hour before we adjourn. In that time the bill which I called the attention of the Senate to this morning can be disposed of. It is a bill that if amended as it ought to be must be sent back to the House, and I think we had better take that up. I hope this motion will be voted down, and that then we shall take up the bill for the enforcement of the laws in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope we shall go on with the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division ayes 34, noes not counted.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan to give way and see if we cannot pass the bill relating to the District of Columbia to-night.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to laying this aside informally, leaving it the unfinished business, and allowing the Senator from Iowa to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the river and harbor bill will be considered as laid aside informally, and the Senate will proceed to consider the District bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the bill subject to call by any Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is subject to call by any Senator at any time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not like to object, and yet I do not think that is exactly the right way to present the order of business. The Senator from Michigan opposes the bill which I am instructed to present, and which is of importance, and then gives way to another. I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey calls for the regular order, which is the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. There are some matters upon your table, sir, of an executive character, which ought to be referred to the proper committees this day. Those committees will meet probably to-morrow morning for the last time. They are important. I therefore move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion, with the permission of the Senate the Chair will dispose of the business on his table.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

PUBLIC MARINE SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 176) to encourage the establishment of public marine schools, which was to substitute for the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy, to promote nautical education, is hereby authorized and empowered to furnish, upon the application of the governor of a State, a suitable vessel of the Navy, with all her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation, provided the same can be spared without detriment to the naval service, to be used for the benefit of any nautical school, or school or college having a nautical branch, established at each or any of the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and San Francisco, upon the condition that there shall be maintained at such port or school or branch of a school for the instruction of youths in navigation, seamanship, marine enginery, and all matters pertaining to the proper construction, equipment, and sailing of vessels, or any particular branch thereof; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized, when in his opinion the same can be done without detriment to the public service, to detail proper officers of the Navy as superintendents of, or instructors in, such schools: Provided, That if any such school shall be discontinued, or the good of the service shall require, such vessel shall be immediately restored to the Secretary of the Navy and the officers so detailed recalled: And provided further, That no person shall be sentenced to or received at such schools as a punishment or commutation of punishment for crime.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND DISTRICT IN MONTANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 3740) to create the Bozman land district in the Territory of Montana.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senate will pass the bill at once.

Mr. KELLY. I trust it will be acted on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KELLY. It is a House bill similar to one reported by our Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is recommended by our Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3745) to remove the disabilities of James Howard, of Baltimore, Maryland, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 2834) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Arkansas Valley Railway Company was read twice by its title.

Mr. BOGY. I ask that the bill be put on its passage. ["No!" "No!"] There will be no objection. I will state in one word that I am perfectly satisfied the bill will pass. It is recommended as an absolute necessity to enable the road to be built. It only gives a right of way of one hundred feet on each side of the road and no appropriation, and nobody will object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to this mode of doing business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be referred.

Mr. BOGY. We have reported the same bill already. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (H. R. No. 3479) in relation to parties in the Court of Claims was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 3747) to amend the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States in Covington, Kentucky," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to give notice to the Senate that I shall ask to-morrow that we have a night session for the purpose of disposing of the pension bill. It is a bill of great importance. If the gratitude of the country was ever due to anybody, it seems to me to be due to the soldiers of the war of 1812, very few of whom now survive. This is an act of justice to them, and I hope to-morrow night will be set apart for that purpose. I will submit my motion to-morrow morning.

THE DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the immediate consideration of that bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think that ought to be done. The last bills that come here pass first.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a very important bill, and unless it is early disposed of it will be impossible to pass it at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia object?

Mr. ALLISON. The bill has passed the House almost unanimously. I do not desire to debate it. It is well understood by the Senate, and I think it will occupy but a brief moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be read.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to discharge my duty and then the responsibility my go somewhere else. Our session, I think, is limited in its extent. I therefore must insist on my motion to go into executive session.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the motion will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture now to make the suggestion to all Senators that although the order is to adjourn at six o'clock, the Senate can extend the session.

Mr. THURMAN. There is no order.

Mr. CONKLING. Such an order was made; but my suggestion is that it is within the control of the Senate. Any Senator can move when six o'clock comes to extend the time for half an hour or an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator that no such motion is necessary. The order of yesterday was that the Senate should sit from eleven until six, but not that it should adjourn at six.

Mr. CONKLING. And therefore the time can be extended without any difficulty.

Mr. THURMAN. It does not require any motion to extend the time.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say that this bill is the result of the careful deliberations of the joint select committee, that it meets the approval of that committee, and has passed the House of Representatives by an almost unanimous vote. The committee have no amendments to offer to the bill, and therefore, unless some amendments are offered, I ask for the vote.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer the following as an additional section:

That the sum of $250,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the workingmen employed on public improvements on the streets and excavations of Washington, under the board of public works of the District of Columbia, or the contractors of the same, or any or all of them; and the board of public works is hereby authorized and ordered to retain, from the several contractors who are indebted to the workingmen, and whose accounts have not been settled by the board of public works, the several sums due the workingmen; and that an amount equal to the amount appropriated by this act shall be deducted from any future appropriations made by the United States for public improvements in the District of Columbia, and the same be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is that amendment in order to this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say to the Senator from Minnesota that in the report made by the joint committee we have recommended an appropriation of not less than a million dollars, which appropriation shall be used first to pay the interest due July, 1, 1874, and afterward to pay the employés and laborers of the District government; and the committee have recommended that to the Committee on Appropriations, to be inserted in the miscellaneous appropriation bill. Therefore it would be well not to incumber this bill with any appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. I was not aware that any such recommendation had been made. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following amendment:

In line 4, section 2, strike out the word "who" and insert "and to designate one of these as the presiding officer thereof, to be styled the governor, which said commission."

Section 2 provides—

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three persons, who shall, until otherwise provided by law, exercise all the power and authority now lawfully vested in the governor or board of public works of said District.

Now I propose that the President shall designate one of these persons as presiding officer of the board, and that this person shall be styled the governor, which gives him no additional power, does not vary his powers, simply makes him presiding officer. The necessity for the amendment is that the governor ex officio is a member of quite a large number of boards, as for instance the school board, the fire commissioners, &c., which are mutilated.

Mr. THURMAN. The ninth section provides for that.

Mr. SARGENT. Section 9 provides that the boards shall continue in his absence, and it mutilates all these boards. On some of these boards whatever governing power is left in these commissioners should be represented. Take the board of public schools, take the fire department. This is the common ligament between them and the District, the only representation, and in order that they may not be mutilated, it is necessary that some one be designated who can act upon these boards. If this amendment be adopted, I shall propose when we come to the ninth section to strike that out, as it will be unnecessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say by way of suggestion to the Senator from California that these three commissioners are intended only to be temporary; that we have provided, as the Senator very well knows, for the selection of a joint committee of both Houses with a view to prepare a plan for a permanent government, and the ninth section was inserted for the very purpose of providing that these boards should be independent of this commission, and in order that it might be the duty of this commission to supervise and control and direct these several boards. All the various boards provided for in the District are virtually under the control and direction and supervision of these three commissioners, so that they all now can exercise supervisory control over these boards.

Now, with reference to the public schools there are some four district school organizations in this District; there are forty-nine trustees who are managing the schools of the District of Columbia; and the laws relating to the public schools are the most imperfect laws of any that are on the statute-books in this District, and there is no greater necessity for the revision of any laws than of those relating to the public schools. That was one object we had in requiring this joint committee to revise the entire government here.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to the supervision. My amendment is not at all hostile to the idea of the bill as explained by the Senator. I do not oppose there being any such supervision over every department of the government by these commissioners. But the Senator says this is intended for a temporary purpose. That may be; but that is no reason why it should not be complete while it lasts. It may last six months, it may last a year; it may work so well that it may last longer than the committee now anticipate; probably they builded better than they knew. Certainly there must be a presiding officer of the board, and there is no reason why in addition to the general supervisory power of the commission the presiding officer of the commission ex officio should not have power to act on these separate boards as is now the case.

I do not want to take up the time of the Senate at this late hour in advocating the amendment; but I call attention to the fact that this does not increase the power of the commission or of any individual member of the commission. It simply provides in a proper and reasonable manner for a presiding officer of the commission.

Mr. THURMAN. The amendment itself, it is true, does not add to the power of the board or any member of it. It is simply the creation of a dignity. It is the creation of the word "governor," in this board of three plain, honest, active, intelligent men such as we hope will be appointed by the President of the United States. Sir, there is a county in the State of Ohio that has six times the area of the District of Columbia, and in that county is a city that has nearly three times the population of the city of Washington, and the affairs of that county are administered by three simple, honest men, called county commissioners; and three such men are capable of administering the affairs of this District without any such dignitaries as governor. There is no necessity whatever for this.

I do not say that this bill is perfect, but I do say that your committee, after four months of such toil as perhaps was never performed by any committee of Congress, have unanimously recommended the passage of this bill. There was not a dissenting voice; did it with full knowledge of the facts and after the most careful consideration, and as their report will show after a consideration of this subject in which there was not the slightest partisanship or politics whatever—I call upon every member of the committee to say if that statement is not true—they unanimously adopted this bill and recommended it to the two Houses. It has passed the House of Representatives with but twenty-three dissenting votes, two hundred and odd against twenty-three; and I do hope, Mr. President, unless there is some great and overruling necessity, the Senate will accept the bill as it passed the House.

I say again I do not pretend that the bill is perfect; but I do know that eight men never labored more honestly than did that committee to make a bill worthy of adoption by Congress, and I do know that temporary as it is, it is most likely to be beneficial in its effects; and the permanent form of government which will be provided by the joint committee that is to be appointed under this bill will be one, I have no doubt, that will be a blessing to the people of this District, and will be a benefit to the whole Union. The idea of this bill is that we shall do something to lift this bankrupt District out of its present distress. That is an immediate necessity. That is what in the French Assembly would necessitate a vote of urgency, that we shall do something to lift this bankrupt District out of its distress, and for that purpose appoint a temporary government, a board of audit to audit the accounts of this District, which for three years, ever since this present government was formed, have never seen the face of an auditor, have never been audited at all, the books of no department compared with the books of the other departments. It is to arrive at the very truth of the matter that this temporary government becomes a necessity, and then we may safely trust to a committee of Congress framing in the recess, and the presentation to Congress at the next session of a permanent form of government for the District, simple, economical, without dignitary, without governor, without titles, of simple, honest, economical men, who will have some respect for the interests of this people, and discharge their duty in simplicity and with economy. That is the idea of this bill.

I know very well that there are difficulties in this subject, and you cannot take a step without meeting with a difficulty. We have long pondered over those difficulties and have arrived at the best solution of them that we could. And now I venture once more to express the hope that this bill will be passed as it came from the House. I again disclaim any pretense that this bill is perfection. Nothing is perfection that comes from the human mind. All I can say is that it is the result of the labors of eight men, intent upon nothing but to discharge their duties faithfully to benefit this people and also to take care of the interests, the honor, and the reputation of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One or two Senators having in the debate alluded to the vote by which this bill passed the House of Representatives, the Chair thinks that is out of order.

Mr. SARGENT. I should have made the same remark, but it is not necessary for me to repeat it. I do not think that the fact which I certainly cheerfully conceded to——

Mr. THURMAN. Allow me one word more in respect to these boards. The governor never ought to have been a member of one of them. Does the Senator from California know that at this very moment there is scarcely an officer in all this District, unless he were appointed by the President of the United States, who is not removable by the governor? The very associates on some of these boards with the governor are removable by him. Talk of that being an independent board, when he can set his fellows in that board aside by a wave of his hand! There never was any necessity for his being a member of any of these boards.

Mr. SARGENT. That consideration has no weight; for whether he was on the board or not, he had the same power. The fact that he was a member of the board gave him neither more nor less power, and he could remove any of them if he desired to do so, and it made no difference whether it was in their presence or anywhere else. That is not of any consequence.

I cheerfully concede that this committee have labored diligently and patiently, and that they have done the Senate very great service. I remember that I resisted all solicitations made to me to undergo these great labors, believing that they were enough to break down any Senator and that I could not afford the time. I thank the gentlemen who have worked on this committee so faithfully and diligently for having given up to it time which I did not think I could afford to give myself.

But with reference to the proposition I make, it is simply to provide a presiding officer for this board. It makes no difference whether you call him president of the board, which is a higher title, or governor, which is a lower title. Take the case of county commissioners of which the Senator speaks. I have no doubt in every county of his State, as it is in my own State, these officers are elected alternately for three years, one going out every year, and the oldest member of the board is the presiding officer, and he may be called by this or that title. So it is with the judges of the courts in my State and in many other States. In our State the judge who holds the longest term under the elective system is chief justice. Now you propose to appoint a board without any head. They are all appointed simultaneously and all go out together; so that there is no opportunity for this relative arrangement among them. There is no one who can call them to order, no one who can preside, no one who can direct the deliberations of the board; and I simply provide a method by which this may be done. It is an innocent proposition. The only objection that is made to it is that under it somebody or other, we do not know who, I trust an honest and energetic man, will be styled the president or governor of the board. I do not think that is a very atrocious thing, or an un-American, or unrepublican or an undemocratic title. I simply ask to have a vote on the amendment, and shall not take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say just one word. I concede to this committee all that they claim to have done, that they have acted faithfully, and that their bill is on the whole an excellent bill. There is, however, one provision in it which I should like to see amended. I shall not offer any amendment. I think there ought to have been some qualification in relation to the funding of the floating debt that is not found there. I think if any individual in this District could present the evidence to the board that he had been obliged to pay dollar for dollar for the indebtedness which he held in his possession, he should have it funded at what it actually cost him. But let that pass.

It is suggested that this may be temporary. It is so designed. The bill provides for the appointment of a commission or committee who shall prepare a bill and present it at the next session of Congress. Now, Mr. President, you and I and we all know that there is no assurance, no man can give an assurance, no man can know what will be the action of Congress at its next short session. What is called a temporary organization of this government may be one that is pretty long for a thing that is temporary, and being so, subject to being elongated, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from California is most appropriate. I have no sympathy with dignity or dignitaries; but I do think that that board ought to have a presiding officer, and I think the law ought to provide for that presiding officer. If it is offensive to my friend from Ohio that he should be called governor, call him president of the board, or chancellor, or anything else, so that when strangers come here they may know who is the executive officer of this government temporarily, for that temporary period of time, but which may run into years. I think it would be wise to adopt that amendment, and I shall therefore vote for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Clayton, Conover, Hamlin, Johnston, Kelly, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Patterson, Sargent, and Windom—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, McCreery, Merrimon, Pease, Pratt, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Washburn—36.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Davis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer another amendment as a substitute for section 6. To save the Clerk the trouble of reading it, as it is quite long, I will state that I have retained nearly the whole of the original section, changing only a few lines, making in fact but two small amendments in the section; but for convenience, to make one amendment of it, I offer it as a substitute. I will read the part I have changed, and then the whole amendment may be reported at the desk if Senators desire it.

The section in the original print reads:

That it shall be the duty of the First Comptroller of the Treasury and the Second Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, who are hereby constituted a board of audit to examine and audit for settlement, &c.

The First Comptroller and Second Comptroller of the Treasury, as is very well known, are Mr. Tayler and Mr. Brodhead, two of the hardest-working men in the Treasury Department; one of them in feeble health, and both overwhelmed. Or course it is impossible that they can discharge the multiform duties which you proceed to lay upon them. They are to examine into all these matters, both matters growing out of damage and matters growing out of contract, and to audit everything. To show that the committee did not expect them to do it, they provide further along in this section that they may appoint accountants and assistants, &c., to examine books and papers; and then they say, it seems to me with a peculiar forgetfulness of the kind of duties they had previously laid on these parties, that these assistants—we do not know who—shall "discharge their other duties under this act." If Senators will look at this section they will find how grave these duties are. Some unknown persons may be appointed to discharge these duties. The First and Second Comptrollers are to discharge the duties under this act, and then they are to go on and appoint these assistants and pay them anything they see fit. There is no limit. There may be a bill coming in here under this section of two, three, or five hundred thousand dollars.

Instead of saying that the First Comptroller and Second Comptroller shall constitute a board of audit, I propose to place this matter under the charge of the Secretary of the Treasury whom we have just confirmed, I am not allowed to say under the rules, I suppose, unanimously; but I can say I think that Senators from all parts of the country, and especially from his own State, who know him best, have the very highest confidence in him, and I believe it is well deserved. I propose therefore to insert these words at the beginning of the section:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate three of his subordinates who shall constitute a board of audit, &c.

He may appoint the First and Second Comptrollers, if he sees fit, or any other of his subordinates, he being responsible to the Congress of the United States for the appointment of proper officers; and they can be selected with due regard to the amount of other public duties they have on hand. Then instead of the First and Second Comptrollers devolving these duties, which are merely nominally put into their hands by appointing a miscellaneous lot of assistants without any restriction as to their number or pay, I provide:

That such assistants shall be appointed by this board, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as they may deem necessary to make examination of such books, vouchers, and papers, and may inspect or procure the inspection of such bank-boo ks and papers pertaining to the affairs of the District as may be necessary; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for the services of such assistants such sums as he may deem proper.

I simply strike out that portion of the section which gives these extraordinary powers to somebody who may be appointed by the First and Second Comptrollers. I strike out from the section that portion of it which makes their compensation unlimited except by the discretion of the First and Second Comptrollers, and require that the number of these assistants shall be supervised by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, sir, unless it is determined as a stolid fact, not to be controverted, that no amendments shall be made in the bill, or no change whatever, I ask a decent consideration for the proposition which I have advanced. I ask that it may be voted upon on its merits; but if the policy is determined upon that there shall be no amendment whatever, notwithstanding it is shown that there are in the bill features which will not carry out the wise and beneficent intentions of the committee which reported it, then of course what I say can have no effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say one word in reply to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California. The committee carefully considered the very question which he raises with reference to this board of audit. The First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury are the proper officers of the United States to supervise all the accounts of the United States. Now the Government proposes, in a measure, to take charge of this debt of the District of Columbia. We pledge the faith of the United States to the payment of the interest of this debt and to the payment of the principal at maturity.

Again, we place no limitation upon the amount of this debt. We do not say that it shall be five million or six million or three million dollars; but we say that whatever it is, when these two accounting officers of the Government, who have shown by their acts hitherto that they are faithful accounting officers, put their signatures to these accounts, these accounts shall go to the sinking-fund commissioners, and there and then be converted into a bond of the District, the faith of the United States being pledged for the principal and interest.

Therefore it is that we want some responsible officers of the United States, known to Congress and to the Government, whose duty it shall be to audit these accounts. We expect of course that they will do it with fidelity and by means of supervision in a large degree, but that they must themselves be satisfied of the correctness of these accounts. That is all I have to say with reference to the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator does not answer the point which I make. If the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury could attend to this matter, if there is any reason to hope that they will attend to the matter and make this supervision, then that provision of the bill would be all right. Let me read the words which I propose to strike out. After laying down their duties, the section provides that they may—

Employ one or more skillful and impartial accountants, non-residents of the District of Columbia—

That is a slur on the District of Columbia entirely unnecessary, for there must be in this District of Columbia many skillful and impartial accountants, and this clause presumes there are none—and such other assistants as they may deem necessary, to make examination of said books, vouchers, and papers—

That would be all right if it stopped there, but it goes on—and discharge their other duties under this act, and shall procure inspection, &c.

So that the very theory of the bill is that these two officers you have named are not to do this work. Then there are these other duties, high judicial duties, accounting duties, auditing duties, to be performed by you do not know whom, by Tom, Dick, or Harry, picked up in the streets, who may be acting under prejudice, who may be entirely incompetent. That is what you propose. On the contrary, what I propose is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint three men, under his supervision, whom he has confidence in, and we have confidence in him, to perform these duties, and he is to limit the compensation and the number of those who shall be employed. It is not limited in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] to the sixth section of the bill.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 4, noes not counted.

Mr. SARGENT. I now move to strike out the words which I last read. If the First and Second Comptrollers are to have these duties confided to them, let them perform them. Sir, I speak here under my right as a Senator of the United States. I point to these difficulties, I point to the fact that you are about to confide to somebody, you do not know whom, all the important duties provided in this act, and I raise my voice of warning on this matter. I move to strike out that provision which allows a miscellaneous crowd, you do not know who, to come in and discharge all the duties required to be performed under this act.

Mr. THURMAN. I have one word to say. The Senator entirely misconstrues the bill. It is not to provide that these subordinates shall discharge the duties of their principals at all, but only that these Comptrollers may appoint as many assistants as are necessary to enable them to make the examination and to enable them—these Comptrollers—to discharge their duties.

Mr. SARGENT. Has the Senator any objection to striking out the words "and discharge their other duties under this act?"

Mr. THURMAN. The meaning of the bill is sufficiently clear to enable them to discharge their duties.

Mr. SARGENT. If that is the meaning of the bill, then two and two make six and black is white. The language is, "and discharge their other duties under this act."

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me one moment. The object of that provision is simply that these skillful accountants shall be non-residents of the District of Columbia, and I will say the chief object of having these skillful accountants is to examine the accounts of the treasurer of the board of public works; and that is all there is in it. I would have no material objection to striking that out if it were not for the fact that it would compel the bill to go back to the House. I do not consider it very material. I trust the Senator will not press the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I certainly do press the amendment to strike out the words "and discharge their other duties under this act," and the Senator confesses it is correct. If the bill simply required these persons to examine the books, that would be all right; but that is not it. The accountants and assistants are all mixed together, and they are to discharge all the duties imposed upon the First and Second Comptrollers. If any Senator believes that is right, let him vote against the amendment. If any Senator believes we are at a stage of the session where we cannot listen to reason, let him vote me down. I do not believe any such thing. We can sit here all summer if it is necessary. We have ample time between now and the 22d to dispose of this bill, and of all the legitimate business before Congress. There is no necessity for undue haste, and there is no necessity for putting this important judicial power in the hands of a rabble, you do not know who, and whom you do not name in your bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. HAMLIN. I will not give way to anybody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

POLITICAL DISABILITIES OF THOMAS CLAIBORNE.

Mr. COOPER. While the doors are being closed, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3417.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3417) to relieve Thomas Claiborne, of Tennessee, of political disabilities imposed upon him by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present agreeing thereto.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I insist on proceeding to the consideration of executive business. I object to doing any legislative business in executive session.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 595) for the relief of Benjamin Cooley and James W. Boswell.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 784) authorizing the transfer of gold mint bars from the bullion fund of the assay office, New York, to the assistant treasurer at New York, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

The message also returned, in compliance with the request of the Senate, the bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of Joseph Montanari, and for other purposes.

JOHN W. NORTON.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) authorizing the Postmaster-General to perfect title to certain real estate obtained from John W. Norton, a defaulter to the postal money-order bureau.

The preamble recites that John W. Norton, a clerk in the money-order division of the post office at New York, known and styled as superintendent of the money-order department of that post-office, did, on or about the 3d of August, 1871, acknowledge himself to have embezzled and appropriated to his own use certain moneys of the United States, being money-order funds, amounting to $115,428.71, more or less; that John W. Norton, and Marian O. Norton, his wife, did, by deed dated August 4, 1871, convey to Abram Wakeman, of the city of New York, certain real estate situated in and near the city of Plainfield, in the State of New Jersey, with the intent and object that the same should be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of this indebtedness; that Abram Wakeman, and Mary H. Wakeman, his wife, did, by deed dated May 12, 1873, convey the same real estate in trust to Patrick H. Jones, of the city of New York, which trust is expressed in the following words:

In trust, nevertheless, and to and for the following uses and purposes, to wit: To take possession of and control of said premises, and without delay and with all reasonable diligence to sell the same at public auction or private sale for the most moneys that can be reasonably gotten therefor, and with and from the proceeds of such sale, after payment of all lawful costs, charges, and expenses in and about said trust, to pay to Hon. John A. J. Creswell, as Postmaster-General of the United States of America, or to his successor or successors in office, all indebtedness of said party of the second part to said United States, incurred by him as late deputy postmaster of the United States at the city of New York, by reason of any and all defalcations of said John W. Norton as such superintendent as aforesaid, so far as such moneys will pay the same.

The resolution, in order to confirm and make valid the sale or sales of the real estate made or thereafter to be made in pursuance of the trust, authorizes the Postmaster-General to join Patrick H. Jones in the conveyance or conveyances of the real estate in pursuance of the trust, retaining the liability of Jones and of his sureties upon his official bonds as postmaster at New York by reason of the defalcation, except so far as the amount may be diminished by the amount received by the United States from the real estate.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads move to amend the joint resolution by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That whenever any such sales under such trust shall be made, the Attorney-General of the United States may, upon the written agreement of the said Jones and his sureties and the sureties of said Norton, that the same may be done without discharging or in any wise affecting their respective liabilities in the premises, discharge the purchaser of any of said property under such sales from any obligation to see to the application of the purchase-money thereof.

Mr. DAVIS. How much is involved?

Mr. RAMSEY. One hundred and fifteen thousand dollars. This bill is to secure it to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know how we shall get back that amount by this bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will tell the Senator. This is a House bill; it is not a new bill of our own, but it is approved by the committee. The subject has been examined by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] who is absent, and everybody knows how eminently critical that Senator is.

Mr. DAVIS. Had we not better let it lay aside until the Senator from Vermont comes back?

Mr. RAMSEY. That Senator approved and drew up the substitute. It is the only way you can get back the money.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not yet understood how we are to get the money back.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will tell the Senator. The Senator from Vermont is absent and the Senator from West Virginia has taken his place in being critical. This man Norton was the money-order clerk in the post-office in the city of New York. He became a defaulter for the amount of about $115,000. He had sureties of course which he gave to the postmaster of New York. He conveyed this property to his sureties and they in turn conveyed it to the postmaster of New York, General Jones. General Jones now has an opportunity of selling the property conveyed to him in trust and realizing money out of it so as to save the United States. The purchasers say, "Unless you make it secure that this money will go to the United States, we will not take the property." The bill and amendment are to provide for that. That is all.

Mr. DAVIS. As the Senator has put me in the place of the Senator from Vermont, let me ask, did the Senator from Vermont examine the bill and approve it?

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir; he drew the substitute which the committee reported. By no possible means can the United States lose money, and the securities will not be released till the Government is indemnified.

Mr. DAVIS. What committee does it come from?

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. DAVIS. How did the Senator from Vermont come to be connected with it?

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator from Vermont is a very critical gentleman, and for fear that he might make objection to the language of the resolution, I submitted the matter to him and he gave it his approval.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the Senator from Vermont approved it?

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes, sir.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. JONES.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 2701.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2701) to relieve William G. Jones, of Alabama, of political disabilities was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. PEASE. I move to take up House bill No. 3332. It is a simple bill to fix the time for holding the election of Congressmen.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3332) to fix the time for the election of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress from the State of Mississippi was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the election for Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress from the State of Mississippi shall be holden on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1875, anything in the constitution or laws of that State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and fifty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 18, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday; when,

On motion of Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, the further reading was dispensed with.

JAMES HOWARD.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I move that the rules be suspended and that a bill to remove the disabilities of James Howard, of Baltimore, Maryland, be passed.

The bill was read. It removes all political disabilities imposed upon James Howard, of Baltimore, Maryland, by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States by reason of participation in the rebellion.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting therefor,) and the bill (H. R. No. 3745) was passed.

BURLINGTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer a resolution asking for information from one of the Departments, which I think will not require a suspension of the rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the House copies of all decisions, correspondence, and other papers on file in his Department relating to the claim of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company for lands outside of the limits of the grant of lands made by the nineteenth section of the act of July 2, 1864, to aid in the extension of their road in Nebraska from the Missouri River to a junction with the Union Pacific Railroad at Fort Kearney, and to inform the House how many acres of land, if any, lying at a greater distance than twenty miles from the line of said road on each side thereof, have been patented to said company.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.

Mr. ARTHUR. I move that the rules be suspended, and that a bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States, in Covington, Kentucky," be passed.

The bill was read. It amends the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States in Covington, Kentucky," approved February 18, 1873, so that the sum of money authorized to be expended in the construction of said building shall be fixed at $250,000. The bill further repeals all restrictions as to the material of which said building shall be composed.

The second section provides that any sum of money in excess of the amount named in the act shall be expended in the construction of said building, and repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions thereof.

Mr. ARTHUR. I send to the desk a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, and ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not consent to that unless debate can be allowed. I object to the reading of the letter.

Mr. ARTHUR. I have no objection to debate being allowed. I ask that the paragraph of the letter which is marked in the margin may be read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1874.

Hon. JAMES H. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives:

The act authorizing the erection of a public building at Covington, Kentucky, limits its cost to $100,000, and requires it to be constructed of brick. I desire to call the attention of your committee to the fact that the brick manufactured in the vicinity of Cincinnati are not suitable for the facing of such a building, and that the facing brick of all important public buildings and private residences of that city are procured in other cities and transported thereto at a great cost. I also desire to inform your committee that an excellent quality of freestone can be furnished at much lower rates than facing brick. I would therefore most earnestly recommend the repeal of the restriction in regard to the material, and the increase of the appropriation to $250,000, which is in my opinion the least sum for which a suitable building can be erected.

WM. A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

The question was on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the division to be taken by tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. WILLARD, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. ARTHUR.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 70.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not ask for further count on the motion to suspend the rules.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken; there were—ayes 74, noes 39; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered under the rule; and Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. ARTHUR were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not ask for a further count by tellers, but call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 27.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill (H. R. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I would ask the gentleman why he does not state in the resolution the amount to be paid?

Mr. ARCHER. The amount is six dollars a day.

Mr. NIBLACK. I think that ought to be stated in the resolution. However, I make no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PARTIES IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3753) for the relief of Robert L. McConnaughy, of Morgantown, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to renew the request that I made last evening, having been requested to do so by many gentlemen, that to-morrow evening, if not desired by the Committee on Appropriations, be set apart for general debate, no business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I must object unless an exception be made in favor of the business of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the request subject to the business of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. There is one motion to suspend the rules already pending.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 23, page 35 of the bill, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "six," and in the same line strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four;" and strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 25, (same page,) down to and including the word "dollars" in line 26; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute in lieu of said amendment the following: After the word Department, in line 18, page 37 of the bill, insert the words "in the city of Washington;" and strike out the words "Ordnance and Adjutant-General's Office" from said amendment, and after the word "duties," line 21, same page, insert the following:

Provided, That the Adjutant-General is authorized to retain during the next fiscal year, and no longer, such portion of his force of employés now on duty in his office, as may be actually necessary for the service thereof; but no new enlistments shall be made into the general service; and nothing in this act shall be so construed as to increase the aggregate force now employed in any office of the War Department.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "fifteen" substitute "ten," and after the word "dollars," in line 14, page 55 of the bill, add the following: "That it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, and of the heads of the respective Bureaus therein, in the interests of the public service, to require of all clerks of class one and above, and of chiefs of divisions, such hours of labor as may be deemed necessary for the proper dispatch of the public business, not exceeding, however, the time for which said Departments are by law required to be open for business, any usage to the contrary notwithstanding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments numbered 135, 136, and 137, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after striking out of the text of the bill all after the word "Treasury," in line 20, page 56, down to and including the word "each," in line 22, that has not already been stricken out by said amendment, the following: "two principal clerks, at $2,800 each; two assistant clerks at $2,400 each;" and strike out "3,503" and insert "3,409;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "six" and insert "nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "28,008" and insert "14,007;" and in line 9, page 57 of the bill, strike out "60" and insert "80;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment numbered 145, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate the words "this provision shall not apply," in line 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "This provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, light-houses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress and this provision shall not apply;" after the word "Congress," in line 14, insert the following: "with his annual estimates;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES A. GARFIELD,
S. W. KELLOGG,
SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

LOT M. MORRILL,
A. A. SARGENT,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will make a brief statement, and then if there are any questions to be asked I will yield for them. There were one hundred and ten differences between the Senate and the House, when the conference committee met. On twenty-one of those the Senate recedes absolutely; on forty-four the House recedes; on forty-five the two Houses meet by concurring with amendments, and I believe on the whole a pretty fair result has been reached.

The Senate, it will be remembered, was very strongly opposed to the reduction of clerical force in the Executive Departments to the extent to which the House carried it, and in some instances the House committee was satisfied that they had perhaps cut too deep, and where we were satisfied of that fact we gave way cheerfully. The bill as we now bring it into the House under the conference report appropriates $117,320 less than it did when it went into the conference; that is to say, we have made that much difference in favor of reduction by insisting on the views of the House. That makes the bill as it stands reported by the committee appropriate $21,003,474.80, being an increase above what it was when it went out of the House of a little more than half a million dollars; but almost a quarter of a million of that amount is for official postage, which is rather a matter of book-keeping than of actual expense. Aside from the postage the bill has about $250,000 more in it as it now stands and as it will become a law if the report is agreed to than it had when it left the House; but it also, as I have said, appropriates $117,000 less than it did when it passed the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. Of course we cannot understand from the reading of the report of the committee of conference without a bill, and I am not able to obtain a copy, what is the effect of this report. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] to two points. The report recommends in regard to the one hundred and ninth amendment of the Senate the adoption of the following proviso:

Provided, That the Adjutant-General is authorized to retain during the next fiscal year, and no longer, such portion of his force of employés now on duty in his office, as may be actually necessary for the service thereof; but no new enlistments shall be made into the general service; and nothing in this act shall be so construed as to increase the aggregate force now employed in any office of the War Department.

Now, with my understanding of that proviso, it would prevent any increase in the Signal Service Corps.

Mr. KELLOGG. The signal service is excepted in the body of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that that is so; I have not the bill before me. I wish to have it understood whether this proviso will prevent the increase of new signal stations and observers in the Signal Service Corps.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all. The whole subject of enlarging the signal service is in the sundry civil appropriation bill. This only relates to the clerical force in the city of Washington.

Mr. CONGER. This says that there shall be no increase in any office in the War Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Department here in Washington.

Mr. CONGER. Then in regard to the last amendment. The recommendation is that the House recede from their amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 147 and agree to same with an amendment as follows:

This provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, light-houses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress and this provision shall not apply.

I desire to know whether those appropriations mentioned will be absolutely excluded from the operation of the general provision restoring unexpended balances to the Treasury?

Mr. GARFIELD. They will absolutely.

Mr. STORM. I desire to inquire whether the committee of conference in regard to the twenty-third amendment of the Senate, in relation to the Public Printer, did not feel themselves bound to obey the unanimous vote of the House and non-concur in the Senate amendment? The vote of the House was unanimous to non-concur in the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is aware that there are two Houses of Congress, and they are peers. If one votes one way all the time and one another way there never would be an agreement. According to the old Shakespearean doctrine, when two ride the same horse one must ride behind. We did not surrender all that the House wanted, nor did the Senate surrender all that the Senate wanted. The House had resolved to abolish the office of Congressional Printer and re-establish the office of Public Printer, and by their action they legislated the Congressional Printer out of office. To that the Senate objected, particularly to legislating an individual out of office. We therefore agreed that the office of Public Printer should be created, and that when the first vacancy occurred in the office of Congressional Printer, then the law as the House passed it should thereafter be in force; but that it should not go into effect until a vacancy occurred. The House has succeeded in changing the law, but the Senate has delayed the operation of the law until the occurrence of a vacancy.

Mr. STORM. Then it will be impossible ever to get the Congressional Printer out of office.

Mr. DONNAN. As I understand the present law, the term of the present Congressional Printer expires with this Congress; he is elected by the Senate at the commencement of each Congress. I cannot now turn to the enactment.

Mr. STORM. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. DONNAN. I think not. That being so, the Congressional Printer's term will expire with the expiration of the present Congress.

Mr. STORM. Was he re-elected at the commencement of this Congress?

Mr. DONNAN. I think he has been elected at the commencement of each Congress. If that be so, I am satisfied with the action of the committee of conference. If he holds indefinitely, then I hope the House will stand by its former action.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know how that is.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been no re-election of the Congressional Printer since he was first elected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know how that is. I will say to the House that the conferees on the part of the House held out just as long as we were satisfied there was any use in holding out. The Senate were very reluctant to change the law at all any way.

Mr. STORM. Of course they were.

Mr. GARFIELD. And it was with a great deal of difficulty that any change was effected. But it seemed to us to be a measure of justice not to legislate a man out of office.

Mr. STORM. You legislated the whole District government out of office yesterday.

Mr. GARFIELD. If he should be legislated out of office the President could instantly reappoint him, and it would probably work no practical difference. The whole theoretical difference of having him a public officer instead of an officer of the Senate is gained by this report.

Mr. STORM. If I had been upon that conference committee I would have forced the issue upon the very fate of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think we should have done that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would ask the gentleman if the result of the action of the committee of conference has not been to nullify the action of the House in regard to the number of employés, and to restore the old number of employés?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Senate nullified pretty much all that the House had done in regard to cutting down the force in the War Department, by saying that there should be an exception made of the Ordnance Office and Adjutant-General's Office. The question having gone to the conference, the Adjutant-General stated that he had not understood that the whole reduction of force was to be made at once; that if he had so understood he would have opposed it as cutting too deeply into the force of his office. He showed us, furthermore, that there has been, under recent laws, a large increase of the pension business, and that every pension claim, before being acted on by the Pension Office, must be sent to his office, where the rolls are gone over, the case carefully examined, and a report made thereon. This is one reason of so large a number of clerks being required.

We finally made a compromise by striking out the Ordnance Office altogether and allowing the Adjutant-General to keep his force of enlisted men from the general service during the current year and no longer, provided that there shall be no increase whatever in the force.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then for the present fiscal year the force of employés with their increased salaries remains substantially unchanged.

Mr. GARFIELD. In that one office; in no other office of the War Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the increased salaries voted by the House and the Senate were retained.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe they were.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the twenty-third amendment, with reference to the Congressional Printer, will be read, that the House may vote distinctly whether it considers it consistent with its honor that the printing of Congress should be any longer under the control of a single branch of the legislative department.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I wish to put a single question to the chairman of the committee, [Mr. GARFIELD.] What has been done by the conference committee in regard to the hours of labor in the Departments?

Mr. GARFIELD. That subject is left in this way: The Secretaries or heads of the various Departments, whenever the public business requires it, are to work their clerks longer than they now work them, provided that the hours of labor do not exceed the limits of the law. In other words, they are required to extend the hours of labor within the limits of the present law sufficiently to do the business of the Departments. Furthermore, it is required that they shall reduce the force in any Department or Bureau whenever the proper performance of the public business will allow it.

Mr. KELLOGG. My colleague [Mr. STARKWEATHER] will notice that the provision with reference to requiring work in the Departments longer than six hours applies only to clerks of class one and above that grade, not to other employés. It does not apply to counters, copyists, and other employés of that kind. Many of the clerks are now occupied more than six hours when the business of the Department requires it, and we do not change the law at all on that point. I never should have consented to any report requiring counters of currency in the Treasury Department, or copyists in the Departments, to work more hours than they now do; for I believe that kind of work is hard enough with the present salary and the present regulations as to the hours of service.

One word in regard to the point suggested by my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in regard to the Adjutant-General's Office and the Ordnance Department. The majority of the committee were satisfied that the Ordnance Office should have twelve or thirteen more men, though that is left out in the report; because thereby not a dollar would be added to the expense of the service; the enlisted force in the Ordnance Department would not be increased at all; the only effect would be that twelve or thirteen men not needed elsewhere would be assigned to duty in Washington when they are needed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it was not necessary that there should be any increase of salaries.

Mr. KELLOGG. The salaries are not changed or increased at all. We do not provide for one dollar's increase of salary. The law provides for the separate enlistment of four hundred and twenty-five men for the Ordnance Department, and a few of these men are needed in Washington, and ought to have been included in the report of our committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. What has been done in regard to the salaries of chief clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury? Are they not increased?

Mr. KELLOGG. They are not increased a dollar. We have cut down the salaries of those men $200 below what they have been for years past, except the clerk of estimates and appropriations; and I think it a mistake to cut them down.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the amount now fixed is an increase.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all; because there has been a fund out of which a portion of their salaries has been paid ever since the war, a fund appropriated for the express purpose of paying these salaries, and my friend has been here years before I came here, when this was being done every year. The pay of fourth-class clerks was fixed years ago, long before the war. I say to my friend from Indiana that no competent men can be found to fill the important positions in the Treasury Department at a salary of $1,800 a year. We ought not to ask it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DONNAN,] chairman of the Committee on Printing, to explain in reference to the status of the Congressional Printer.

Mr. DONNAN. In regard to the question as to the term for which the Congressional Printer holds his office I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read section 3821 of the Revised Code.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3821. The Congressional Printer shall hold his office for the term of two years, commencing with the first day of each Congress; shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000a year, and shall give bond, for the faithful discharge of his duties, in the penal sum $80,000, with two sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DONNAN. I understand that to be the law now and I think it ought to be satisfactory to gentlemen.

Mr. GARFIELD. According to that, then, he goes out at the end of this Congress.

Mr. STORM. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to that.

Mr. POLAND. The gentleman from Iowa is entirely mistaken as to the law.

Mr. DONNAN. I supposed the revision furnished us was correct.

Mr. POLAND. That is not the revision the committee furnished. It is the revision the commissioners made. There is no provision in the law about the term of two years.

Mr. STORM. Then the gentleman did not read from the Revised Statutes?

Mr. POLAND. The Revised Statutes read as follows:

The Congressional Printer shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 a year, and shall give bond for the faithful discharge of his duty in the penal sum of $80,000, with two sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The term of two years found in that section as reported by the commissioners was struck out as it was not the law. That was the original term of the Congressional Printer, but when he was made an officer of the Senate that portion of the law was repealed. The commissioners made an error in putting that in their revision and it is one of the errors uncorrected.

Mr. DONNAN. If the revision as put upon our tables is incorrect, then the point remains, and the Senate insist on retaining their provision. Therefore, sir, I shall stand by my original position, and hope the House will agree to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] and insist upon a further conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. As one of the conferees, I merely wish to say in reference to this question of the Congressional Printer that the Senate is not entirely to blame. The act of the 22d of February, 1867, which makes provision for the election of the Congressional Printer by the Senate, was agreed to by this House. It could not now be the law if the House had not consented to it. The House yielded up the question at that time to the Senate absolutely, the object being to strike a blow at the then President of the United States, Andrew Johnson, and strip him of this and all other patronage. As will be seen, this action now returns to plague its inventors.

I wish only to say, so far as I am concerned, I dissented from the beginning to the end from the Senate proposition and was for adhering to the proposition of the House, but after five days and more of struggle it became manifest the Senate never would yield entirely at this time, and some compromise was therefore necessary to pass the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The question recurred on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 120, noes 32.

So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commission to certain officers of the Army.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles without amendment:

An act (H. R. No. 1206) for the relief of Charles J. Sands, of Brooklyn, New York;

An act (H. R. No. 3586) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin;

An act (S. No. 526) for the relief of James De Long;

An act (H. R. No. 2398) granting a medal to John Horn, jr., for his heroic exploits in rescuing men, women, and children from drowning in Detroit River;

An act (H. R. No. 2292) for the relief of William Walker;

An act (H. R. No. 2898) for the relief of J. & W. R. Wing, of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 775) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Salem, in the State of Oregon.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 899) to constitute Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery; and

An act (H. R. No. 3522) to extend the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board.

PUBLIC BUILDING, COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. ARTHUR,] being an act to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States in the city of Covington, Kentucky," on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ARTHUR. I ask to have the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The yeas and nays have been ordered. I object to debate.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 154, nays 65, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 3747) was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. CROOKE. I move that the rules be suspended and that a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, and the cost of the same, be passed. This bill involves no expenditure of money whatever.

The bill which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress at the beginning of its next next session whether the present needs of the Government require the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, and the estimated cost of the same, including the site.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this erection of palatial buildings in cities by the Government ought to cease.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question being taken on suspending the rules, there were—ayes 110, noes 46.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 3748) was passed.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. CROUNSE. I move that the rules be suspended, and that a bill to provide for the reapportionment of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory be passed.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and requires the governor of the Territory of Idaho to make an apportionment among the several counties or districts for the election of a council and house of representatives in the ratio of qualified voters as nearly as may be for the eighth session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory; such ratio of voters to be ascertained from the returns of the last election for Delegate to Congress, which said apportionment the governor shall announce in a public proclamation on or before the 1st day of August, 1874; provided that in case council districts are made up of two or more counties, such counties shall be contiguous, and no county shall be divided for such purpose. And provided further, that each county shall be entitled to at least one member in the house of representatives. And provided further, that the governor of said Territory shall continue to make the apportionment as above directed for each election hereafter until the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall make such apportionment by law.

Mr. CROUNSE. This bill comes unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Territories. It should be passed at this time or it will be of no avail for the fall election.

The motion to suspend the rolls was seconded; the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill (H. R. No. 3749) was passed.

DATE OF COMMISSION OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I rise to a privileged question. I present the report of the committee of conference on the bill to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

First. That the House of Representatives concur in the Senate amendment numbered one.

Second. That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered two.

CHARLES ALBRIGHT,
JAMES W. NESMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE E. SPENCER,
J. R WEST,
MATT W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. ALBRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL IRON-MOLDERS' UNION.

Mr. FIELD. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3521) to incorporate the National Iron-molders' Union, and that it be passed. This bill is reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. STORM. I do not understand that the Committee on Education and Labor have authorized this bill to be reported.

Mr. FIELD. They have.

Mr. STORM. On the contrary a sub-committee of that committee reported against it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has seen during this session more disputes on the question of fact as to a bill being the report of a committee than he has done during his experience in Congress for ten years before. Such a question should never be brought upon the floor at all.

Mr. FIELD. This is a report from the Committee on Education and Labor. We recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. A conflict of this kind is an unseemly thing ever to appear on the floor of the House.

Mr. STORM. No gentleman should misrepresent facts.

The SPEAKER. It is clearly a question of fact.

Mr. FIELD. It is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] who is now misrepresenting the fact.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That William Saffin, of Cincinnati, Ohio; James Carroll, of New York City, New York; Thomas Casey, of Montgomery, Alabama; Nathan Ports, of Washington, District of Columbia; William Gibson, of Toronto, Ontario; E. B. Osler, of Sacramento, California; John F. Leahy, of Little Falls, New York; Peter J. Meaney, of Brooklyn, New York; John Daly, of Albany, New York; Thomas Kelley, of Chicago, Illinois; James Cummings, of Troy, New York; Charles N. Patrick, of Chelsea, Massachusetts; W. H. Hathaway, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island; David Neagle, of Bridgeport, Connecticut; Samuel R. Baldwin, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Samuel McFarland, of Baltimore, Maryland; George H. Kemball, of Jersey City, New Jersey; Walker Cunningham, of Wheeling, West Virginia; F. H. Mercer, of Evansville, Indiana; James Gorman, of Chicago, Illinois; Conrad Meyers, of Saint Louis, Missouri; James W. Kendler, of Richmond, Virginia; John Kerrigan, of Louisville, Kentucky; Andrew Bevan, of Memphis, Tennessee; Philip Dillon, of Savannah, Georgia; R. B. Wesson, of Water Valley, Mississippi; George J. SEC. 2. SEC. 6. That the headquarters of the Iron-molders' National Union shall be located in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That is a bill which ought not to pass.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that there are Canadians in the list of the parties who are to be incorporated.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. This is a corporation for the District of Columbia, and they are authorized to have branches in the different States with the consent of the States. The persons incorporated are mainly resident here.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is an extraordinary idea to incorporate foreigners by act of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The name of William Gibson, of Toronto, Ontario, is included in the list.

Mr. FIELD. I will allow that name to be stricken from the bill.

The SPEAKER. That modification will be made.

Mr. POTTER. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right so to modify the bill.

Mr. FIELD. I call for a vote.

The question was on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the division to be taken by tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FIELD.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 36, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask the attention of the House for one moment. In the first place, there is upon the Speaker's table the civil-rights bill from the Senate. It stands in the way now of all legislation. It is evident that it cannot be taken from its place by a vote of two-thirds of the House. The Committee on the Judiciary would not have power to report it at any time if it were referred to them; and in order that we may get it out of the way of legislation I ask unanimous consent that it be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman add "not to be brought back this session?"

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It will not be reported at this session.

Mr. BECK. I desire that that shall be a part of the order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I object; I think we can get a two-thirds vote to take it up.

Mr. NIBLACK. The committee have the right to report the House civil-rights bill at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I was about to say further that I do mean to bring up the civil-rights bill of the Committee on the Judiciary of this House under my right to report at any time.

Mr. NIBLACK. Would not the right of the Committee on the Judiciary to report at any time attach to the Senate bill as well as to the House bill—the whole subject?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I object to the proposition in regard to the Senate bill.

SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now ask unanimous consent that there may be a session for debate only to-morrow evening, subject to the wants of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire that the Committee on War Claims may also have leave to make reports.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; I cannot yield for that.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It will not take them twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman is for a session for debate only.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to add "and for reports from the Committee on War Claims."

The SPEAKER. It is not amendable; it is a matter for consent or not. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes an exception in favor of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that to-morrow evening be assigned for general debate, no business whatever to be transacted, unless the Committee on Appropriations need the evening for their business.

Mr. GARFIELD. That means that if we have any bills ready to report, or any conference reports to make, we may report them that evening.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would that give the Committee on Appropriations the right to report any bills they choose?

Mr. GARFIELD. Only our regular work.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would it give the committee any rights they have not now?

Mr. GARFIELD. None but what we have now.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I object to the proposition.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to suspend the rules and make that order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose later on in the day.

FORMER SLAVES OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

Mr. SHANKS. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill to appoint a commission to establish the rights of the former slaves in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country and their descendants, and submit the same to Congress. I will say that the bill is the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill was read. It provides that a commission, to consist of three persons, shall be appointed, one by the President of the United States, one by the Choctaw council, and one by the Chickasaw council, which commission shall when so appointed or a majority of them have power to act and whose duty it shall be if possible to enter into an agreement in writing upon the part of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw people respectively, establishing a just and equitable settlement of the rights and privileges among the Choctaw and Chickasaw people of those persons of color formerly slaves in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country and the descendants of such persons of color. The agreement and all the proceedings entered into and had by the commission are to be submitted to Congress at its next session for its ratification or rejection, and are to be invalid without ratification by Congress.

Mr. SHANKS. The bill is all right and I hope it will pass.

The question was put on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, and 41 members voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SHANKS. I ask unanimous consent to say one word about this bill.

No objection was made.

Mr. SHANKS. It is for the purpose of settling the rights of the colored people in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country. The colored people there were slaves prior to 1866.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. SHANKS. Allow me to explain this matter first. Up to 1866 there were a large number of slaves in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country. By the treaty of 1866 they were set free, but they are free there without anything else but their freedom. It was intended by a provision in the treaty of 1866 that these colored people should have the benefit of forty acres of land, or else the benefit of a certain fund arising from the sale of a piece of land. The time has expired without their receiving that benefit, and now they have nothing but the privilege of remaining in that country. This is a proposition by which, if carried out, there will be I have no doubt an amicable arrangement of the matter, and these colored people will get equal rights with the Indians in that country. The best Indians there desire that this shall be done, and I have no doubt the matter can be arranged in that way. If it is not done, then there may be difficulties, for there is already engendered a bad feeling between the colored people and the Indians, provoked by white men and others who are interfering in their matters.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does this go any further?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have no objection to the gentleman making any statement necessary to explain the purpose of the bill, if it shall take one hour; but I do object to any discussion by other gentlemen.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. My question is in good faith. It is whether this proposition goes any further than to settle the rights of the colored people who were formerly slaves.

Mr. SHANKS. To settle their rights and the rights of their descendants. It proposes to have the matter referred to Congress at its next session for their decision.

Mr. RAINEY. I should like to have the consent of the House to make a short statement.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object to any further discussion.

Mr. SHANKS. A moment. I have been asked whether this does or does not interfere with the Choctaw matter which we had before the House the other day. It has no more to do with that than it has with the rising of the sun this morning.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does it not apply the same principle to other Indian nations which is applied in the case of the Choctaws?

Mr. SHANKS. There are no other Indian tribes that have colored people who have not provided for them. The Cherokees, Seminoles, and the Creeks provided for their former slaves, making them citizens of their country. But the Chickasaws and Choctaws have not done so, and this proposition is to enable them to do so.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Can they not do so without the consent of Congress?

Mr. SHANKS. The agreement is to be submitted to Congress and to be invalid without the indorsement of Congress.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose they can make them citizens if they see fit without the consent of Congress?

Mr. SHANKS. They have not done so.

Tellers were ordered on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and Mr. SHANKS and Mr. O'BRIEN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 106, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and upon a division there were—ayes 81, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHANKS and Mr. O'BRIEN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 112, noes 42.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill (H. R. No. 3756) was passed.

SESSION FOR FRIDAY EVENING.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended so as to give the session of to-morrow evening for general debate, subject only to such matters as may be reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] will be granted. I further suggest that the remarks of the gentleman shall be published in the RECORD the next morning.

Mr. CONGER. And that his time be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I ask that nobody shall come here who does not want to hear me. Does anybody else have any request to make?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. As I objected before, I desire to state now that I withdraw my objection.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; upon a division, ayes 113, noes not counted.

The rules were then suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the order was made.

SAN JOSÉ RESERVATION, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CESSNA. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of passing a bill (H. R. No. 1718) relating to the equitable and legal rights of parties in possession of certain lands and improvements thereon in California, and to provide jurisdiction to determine those rights. I desire to say that this bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary some two months ago.

Mr. COBURN. And I will say that this matter was reported against unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs of the last Congress. It involves $500,000.

Mr. CESSNA. It involves nothing but the payment of a just debt on the part of the United States for the property of Mrs. General Frémont, Mrs. General Heiskell, and others, taken from them by order of the Government.

Mr. SPEER. How much is the property worth?

Mr. CESSNA. From $200,000 to $250,000.

The bill with the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was read, as follows:

Whereas by the act of Congress of July 1, 1870, relinquishing the right and title of the United States to the military reservation at Point San José, except the portion thereof now held as such reservation, the lands thereby relinquished were restored to parties who had been misled by the action of the Government in withdrawing its appeal from the decree of the board of land commissioners of the United States confirming the title of the city of San Francisco to lands embracing said reservation, and were in the bona fide possession thereof when the military authorities went into the occupancy thereof; and whereas the persons dispossessed by the military authorities of the portion so excepted in said act had, in every respect, the same equitable claims to the lands formerly occupied by them, and were excluded from the relief granted by said act solely because the said lands are required for military purposes; and whereas the buildings and improvements erected by the former occupants of the lands within the present limits of said reservation are useful for the purposes of the Government, and their existence has saved considerable expense to the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the several persons, their heirs, grantees, assigns, or legal representatives, who, when the military authorities of the United States took possession and entered into the occupation of the lands above high-water mark within the present limits of the military reservation at Point Saint José, in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, were in the bona fide possession of portions thereof, by themselves, their tenants, or agents, shall be compensated by the United States for the lands and the improvements thereon, of which they were respectively deprived when said lands and improvements were taken possession of by the military authorities of the United States; which compensation shall be the value of said lands and the value of the improvements thereon at the time when the military occupation of said lands commenced, without interest. And the Court of Claims is hereby directed to ascertain and determine the said values, and render judgment for compensation therefor in favor of the several persons respectively who were as aforesaid in the possession of said premises, or any part thereof, their heirs, grantees, assigns, or legal representatives; and any and all judgments so rendered by said court shall be paid out of moneys appropriated, or hereafter to be appropriated, to pay judgments rendered by said court: Provided, That no suit shall be brought by virtue of the provisions of this act unless the same be instituted within six months from the passage hereof.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to enable the city of San Francisco, or any corporation or individual, to recover compensation for or by reason of the taking or appropriation of any public square or public street in said city by the military authorities of the United States.

SEC. 3. That no money shall be paid upon any judgment which may be rendered or recovered by virtue of the provisions of this act until the plaintiff or claimant therein shall have filed in the Court of Claims, or with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, a full and complete release of and for all damages, injuries, losses, interest, rents, and all other or future compensation on any and every account whatever, by reason of the taking, occupying, and retaining, by the military authorities of the United States, of the premises for which compensation is claimed.

Mr. POTTER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] to bring the bill before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The bill certainly presents some debatable questions.

Mr. CESSNA. I have no objection at all to allowing a reasonable time on each side for debate, if that proposition can be agreed to. My object in making the motion to pass the bill was to avoid delay, which I thought not necessary, for the reason that this bill has been twice considered by Senate committees and reported unanimously by both; has been passed by the Senate; has been passed by the House, and has been three times reported favorably by committees of the House, no adverse report having been made in any case except that made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

A MEMBER. What amount of property does the bill involve?

Mr. CESSNA. The property in this case is believed by the committee to be worth between $200,000 and $250,000. This subject was thoroughly investigated by the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-first Congress, and a unanimous report was then presented by Mr. Kerr, of Indiana.

Mr. POTTER. I am always unwilling to have the House act on measures of this sort without discussion. I hope therefore that some little time will be allowed for debate. I believe that this measure commends itself to the justice of the Government. My feeling in favor of it is as strong as for any measure I was ever called to pass upon.

Mr. CESSNA. If it be the desire of the House I will change my motion so as merely to bring the bill before the House. I will then call the previous question at once, and yield a few minutes to those opposing the bill and a few minutes to my friend from New York, [Mr. POTTER.] I shall then ask a vote.

Mr. SPEER. And then a majority can pass the bill.

Mr. CESSNA. I move to suspend the rules so as to bring the bill before the House for consideration.

The question being taken on seconding the motion, there were—ayes 31, noes 54; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CESSNA and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 59, noes not counted.

So the motion of Mr. CESSNA was not seconded.

MONUMENT AT LEXINGTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. GOOCH. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 3163) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain ordnance to the municipal authorities of Lexington, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to deliver to the municipal authorities of Lexington, Massachusetts, ten pieces of condemned cannon, to be used for monumental purposes in commemoration of the battle of Lexington, on the 19th day of April, 1775.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to have an amendment added to this bill.

Mr. GOOCH. I must decline to yield for any amendment.

The motion of Mr. GOOCH, being seconded, was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

Mr. COOK. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States in Atlanta, Georgia."

The bill was read. It provides that the act named in the title be so amended that the sum authorized to be expended in the construction of the building be fixed at $250,000; and that no sum in excess thereof shall be expended upon said building.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 56, noes 56; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COOK, and Mr. SMITH of Ohio, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 36.

So the motion was seconded.

The question then recurring on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill,

Mr. GARFIELD called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 148, nays 79, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barry, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Burleigh, Benjamin F. So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the bill was not passed.

STATUE TO GENERAL GEORGE G. MEADE.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 3757) to transfer twenty condemned bronze cannon for a statue to the late General George G. Meade.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to transfer to the Fairmount Park Association (a corporation created by the laws of Pennsylvania) twenty condemned bronze cannon to be used by the said association for the erection of a bronze equestrian statue to the late Major-General George Gordon Meade, within the limits of the city of Philadelphia.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

CONTINENTAL AGENCY AND EXPRESS COMPANY.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for reference a bill (H. R. No. 3758) to incorporate the Continental General Agency and Express Company.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object, if it is not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3758) to incorporate the Continental General Agency and Express Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

BENJAMIN COOLEY AND JAMES W. BOSWELL.

Mr. LOWNDES. Mr. Speaker, I move to supend the rules and pass the bill (S. No. 595) for the relief of Benjamin Cooley and James W. Boswell.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to examine, adjust, and settle the claims of Benjamin Cooley and James W. Boswell for carrying the mails from Washington, District of Columbia, to Poolesville, Maryland, being routes No. 3293 and No. 3304, from July 1, 1860, to June 30, 1864, and to award them such compensation for carrying the increased bulk of mail matter as he may deem just and proper, not exceeding the sum of $1,200 to either of said contractors.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have reported a similar bill for the relief of Benjamin Cooley and James W. Boswell, and I hope there will be no objection to the passage of this Senate bill. These contractors ran the mail from here to Poolesville, in Maryland. They took the contract for a small sum of money. Immediately afterward a large force of troops was placed in that vicinity and the mail became very heavy, the receipts running up from thirty or forty dollars to seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars.

Mr. BECK. Is it not better to send this to the Court of Claims?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. It cannot be done.

Mr. BECK. Congress can do it.

Mr. LOWNDES. This bill passed the Senate after a careful consideration, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads think it is right, and this money should be paid.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to this bill, but I do object to the Postmaster-General having power to adjust anything.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINING RESOURCES.

Mr. LOWE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 2032) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872.

The bill, which was read, provides that the fifth section of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so that where a person or company may run a tunnel for the purpose of developing a lode or lodes, owned by said person or company, the money so expended in said tunnel shall be taken and considered as expended on said lode or lodes, whether located prior to or since the passage of said act; and such person or company shall not be required to perform work on the surface of said lode or lodes in order to hold the same, as required by said act.

Mr. LOWE. By the act of 1872 each claimant is compelled to do $100 worth of work per annum until he takes out a patent for his claim. The Commissioner of the General Land Office holds that it must be done upon the lode itself, and that the work upon a tunnel to reach the lode would not save these mining claims. This provides that work upon a tunnel to reach the lode shall have the same effect of saving the claims as work done upon the lode itself. This is unanimously desired by the Delegates and Members from the mining States.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

TROOPS ON THE TEXAS BORDER.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the rules be suspended and that a joint resolution to place certain troops on the border of Texas be passed.

The joint resolution was read. It directs the Secretary of War to remove all infantry and cavalry troops now in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky, to the frontier of Texas, to aid the State troops called into the field by the Legislature of the said State in protecting the citizens of that frontier against marauding bands of Indians and Mexicans.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that I may have a few minutes to make an explanation.

Mr. RAINEY. I object to any debate.

Mr. MILLS. I have not had the floor more than two or three times this session, and I have never made objection to any other gentleman. This is a matter of material interest to my people, and I ask to be permitted to explain the joint resolution.

Mr. RAINEY. I object.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 62, noes 91.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

HEIRS OF JAMES B. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the rules be suspended, that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2700) amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and next of kin of James B. Armstrong, deceased," approved March 3, 1873, and that it be passed. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Edward S. Armstrong, of Ralls County, Missouri, the sum of $1,673.14, being his aliquot share of the sum of $13,385.09 as one of the brothers and next of kin of the said James B. Armstrong, deceased, appropriated by the said act for the relief of the heirs and next of kin of said James B. Armstrong, deceased.

The second section repeals the proviso of said act requiring satisfactory proof to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury that said heirs at law and next of kin, or such thereof as shall demand their aliquot shares under and by virtue of said act, remained loyal adherents to the cause and Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion,

Mr. DUNNELL. This bill had the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Claims. I hope it will be passed.

Mr. KASSON. It has reference only to the question of loyalty of one of the heirs. That is all.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let the last section of the bill be again read.

The second section was again read.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose there is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. There is. If the gentleman desires an explanation I shall be happy to give it.

Mr. KASSON. The money has already been appropriated.

Mr. BUCKNER. This money was appropriated during last session of Congress to satisfy a judgment of the Court of Claims in 1858. The money was appropriated for the whole amount. One of these heirs was in the confederate army and could not draw his share. The others have proved their loyalty and got their money.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is right to repeal that provision of the law in this particular case, why should it not be repealed entirely in such cases?

Mr. KASSON. That can be done by another bill.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the House do now adjourn.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. COBURN. I ask that there be a sesssion of the House this evening under the order which I send to the desk, and which I ask may be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That there be a session of the House this evening, commencing at half-past seven o'clock p. m., for reports from committees, no action to be taken thereon; the call of committees to begin with the list of the committees after the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SENER. Does the gentleman agree that no adverse reports shall come in?

Mr. COBURN. I do not agree to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the business will be confined to references alone.

Mr. COBURN. The object is merely to have bills referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. That should be stated in the order.

Mr. COBURN. That is all that is intended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall insist that all reports shall go on the Calendar, adverse reports as well as others.

Mr. SENER. Adverse reports do not go on the Calendar unless some gentleman requests it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. They can be made to go on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SENER. Let it be understood, then, that all reports, adverse and others, shall go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. All reports will be for reference. With that understanding, the Chair hears no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] and the order is made.

NEVADA COUNTY NARROW-GAUGE RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. ORR. I move that the rules be suspended to enable the Committee on the Public Lands to report and the House to pass the bill (H. R. No. 3309) granting to the Nevada County Narrow-gauge Railroad Company a right of way through the public lands for a railroad.

The bill was read. It grants the right of way through the public lands to the Nevada County Narrow-gauge Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, and having its principal place of business in Grass Valley, Nevada County, State of California, its successor and assigns, for a railroad from Colfax to Nevada City, by the most direct, practicable route, being a distance of about twenty miles. Said right of way is granted to said railroad to the extent of fifty feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass through the public domain, including the right to take, from the public lands adjacent, materials of earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction thereof; also including grounds for station-buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations, to an amount not exceeding ten acres not mineral lands for each station, which stations shall not occur oftener than one in five miles; provided that the grant thereby made shall not take effect on any lands to which any bona fide pre-emption or homestead claim has attached before the definite location of the line of road, and the designation of the lands to be appropriated under this law; provided further that within six months from the passage of the act the Nevada County Narrow-Gauge Railroad Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map, to be approved by him, exhibiting the line of the railroad of said company as the same has been located and the ground to be occupied at the several stations; and provided further that the said railroad shall be completed within four years from the passage of the act.

The second section provides that in case the right of way granted by the act extends through any cañon, pass, or defile, any other railroad corporation shall not be excluded from a passage through the same or over and upon the track of the constructed road upon equitable terms; and in case of disagreement, upon application of either of the parties, the same shall be adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior, after hearing upon reasonable notice to the parties, whose decision may be enforced by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. ORR. I am directed by the committee to report the amendment which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 2 the following:

Provided, That this act shall not prevent other railroads from crossing the same at grade: And provided further, That the right of Congress to at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. ORR. I include that amendment in the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the last section of the bill may be again read.

The last section was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to suggest two amendments to that bill, so as to make it conform to similar bills already passed. One is to strike out the word "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make it read "which stations shall not occur oftener than one in ten miles," &c. That is in conformity with the practice for the last two years on bills of this sort.

Mr. ORR. This bill conforms to the bills already passed for the reason that they are allowed only half the number of acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. The number of acres is ten acres of land in each ten miles.

Mr. ORR. Well, the practice has been to give twenty acres in each ten miles; but this only gives ten acres in each five miles.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last bill of this kind that we passed gave ten acres of land to each ten miles. I think that ought not to be done, but inasmuch as it has been the practice heretofore, I am willing to concede that.

Mr. ORR. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the practice.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill passed by the House yesterday or the day before in relation to Colorado contained this same provision. The other amendment I have to suggest is, to strike out the word "timber" where it occurs in the bill. I see no reason why we should deprive the ultimate settlers on these lands of the timber to which they would otherwise be entitled.

Mr. ORR. It has been customary to allow the company to take timber in all such cases. However, I will accept those amendments as modifications of my bill.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, as modified, was passed.

TRANSFER OF GOLD BARS.

Mr. HOOPER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 784) authorizing the transfer of gold mint bars from the bullion fund of the assay office, New York, to the assistant treasurer at New York.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time to transfer to the office of the assistant treasurer at New York from the bullion fund of the assay office at New York refined gold bars bearing the United States stamp of fineness, weight, and value, or bars from any melt of foreign gold coin or bullion of standard equal to or above that of the United States, or an exchange from gold coins at not less than par, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the words "coin at," in line 8, the words "market value."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JAMES BARNETT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of the heirs of James Barnett, deceased, be passed. I will state that it is the unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of James Barnett, deceased, who was a lieutenant in the Second Virginia Regiment on continental establishment during the revolutionary war, and who, by reason of the loss of an eye in the service, was retired in 1779, in accordance with a provision of an act of the Continental Congress, the amount of pay of a first lieutenant of said regiment for five years, in accordance with the provisions of an act approved March 27, 1783.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This is a claim about a hundred years old.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The claim is a just one, and I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. There ought to be no objection to the bill, and I hope it will pass.

The question was put on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were ayes 78, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only ten members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. I desire the attention of the House for a moment. A very considerable number of gentlemen are anxious to go to business on the Speaker's table. There is nothing on the Speaker's table in which I have any special interest, but there is so large an amount of business there that I think we ought to take it up and dispose of it. I desire, therefore, to make a proposition on the subject which I think will be entirely acceptable to gentlemen on both sides of the House.

It is well known that an effort yesterday to go to the Speaker's table met with opposition on account of the civil-rights bill. Now I desire to say that I am a friend of the civil-rights bill; I have always voted for it. In the last Congress I had charge of it and made every sort of endeavor to get it passed without avail. We all understand that the position of it is such that it cannot be passed except by a two-thirds vote, and two or three unsuccessful efforts have been made to get a two-thirds vote. It has been fully ascertained that it cannot be obtained, and therefore I think the friends of that measure have no need to struggle longer to obtain what they know they cannot obtain. I propose that when the civil-rights bill is reached it shall be referred to the Judiciary Committee with no right to report it back except by asking a suspension of the rules, so that they would need a two-thirds vote to carry it, just as they would need a two-thirds vote to carry it in its present position.

Mr. WOOD. Or any other bill on that subject.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary now have in their possession a House bill upon that subject which they have the right to report at any time. But the difficulty is that if they report that bill and the House passes it, it must then go to the Senate and take its turn there. Now, in reference to the civil-rights bill, I propose to leave all sides precisely as they are now; that there shall be no change in the rights of parties in reference to that bill. I make this proposition in order to take that bill out of the way of other business. I have put my proposition in writing, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Move to suspend the rules so as to proceed to business on the Speaker's table; that five minutes be allowed to explain each bill and five minutes in opposition thereto; and the only motion in order shall be to put each bill on its passage or to refer the same; that when the civil-rights bill is reached it shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary without any right to report it back except under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Allow me to inquire of the gentleman if his proposed arrangement does not deprive the civil-rights bill of a very important advantage? While a majority of the House are known to be in favor of that bill, no other business on the Speaker's table can be disposed of unless that bill shall take its chance with the others. That is a very important advantage in the way of obtaining a vote upon the civil-rights bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Allow me to make a suggestion in that connection.

Mr. POLAND. Let me answer this suggestion first.

Mr. TREMAIN. There are one or two bills of the House with Senate amendments. It seems to me that this proposition would not allow a motion to concur in those amendments or concur in them with amendments.

Mr. POLAND. Yes, it would. I have been quite as sincere and earnest a friend of the civil-rights bill as the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I do not question that. What I question is the effect of your arrangement in that bill.

Mr. POLAND. In order to get at business on the Speaker's table you must now obtain a two-thirds vote. We understand very well that as long as that two-thirds vote shall be required we can never get to business on the Speaker's table. I do not propose to surrender any right or privilege that we have in regard to the civil-rights bill, but I understand that the bill standing in the position it now does it is impossible for us to secure a two-thirds vote in any way to pass the bill. I do not think we should allow the civil-rights bill to stand so much in the way as to prevent our attending to any other business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I do not understand that the majority of this House, consisting of republicans and embracing two-thirds of the members of this House, are so much opposed to the civil-rights bill that they will not allow a vote of the House to be taken upon it and the bill disposed of by a majority vote. I do not understand that they are so opposed to it as to be willing to stop the whole business of the country rather than to allow a constitutional majority of this House to deal with that bill. As the bill is, at its present stage, every gentleman who persists in voting against proceeding to business on the Speaker's table, says not merely that he is opposed to the civil-rights bill, but that he will not allow a constitutional majority of the Representatives of the American people to act upon that measure, and rather than do so will stop all public business.

Mr. SPEER. I object to further debate.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that so far as I am concerned I will stop all legislation rather than allow the civil-rights bill to be passed.

Mr. COBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry as to the effect of the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.] It is whether or not, under that proposition, bills upon the Speaker's table would be subject to the point of order that they contain appropriations and must first be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would consider that this order, if made, would put the whole matter subject to a majority vote. As the bills were reached they would have to be referred to committees, passed, or left on the table. It would leave it in the control of a majority of the House.

Mr. POLAND. If there is any use at all in going to the Speaker's table, it should be under the plan I propose.

Mr. COBURN. We should not set aside all points of order.

Mr. BECK. I want to ask the gentleman from Vermont one question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] objects to debate.

Mr. SPEER. I objected to an attempt to dragoon this side of the House into allowing a vote on the civil-rights bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. If the civil-rights bill should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as proposed by the gentleman from Vermont, would not that committee be prevented from reporting it at any time except under a suspension of the rules, which would require a two-thirds vote?

Mr. POLAND. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] has put an impossible case.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary when called upon for reports can report whatever matters they have before them.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Suppose that the Committee on the Judiciary does not report this bill until the next session of Congress; under this order could it be reported then except under a suspension of the rules, requiring a two-thirds vote?

Mr. POLAND. I do not understand that this order would have any effect at the next session.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Why not? If the bill is sent to the committee under this order, it must remain there until brought out of the committee by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the order proposed by the gentleman from Vermont be agreed to, could not a majority of the House pass the election bill which was yesterday defeated on a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that that bill is on the Speaker's table; he thinks it is not. This order would apply only to bills on the Speaker's table.

Mr. POLAND. I call for a vote.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I call attention to the fact that under this proposition the civil-rights bill may be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee may never have any power to report it back except under a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. POLAND. So many gentlemen are troubled for fear that this proposition is going to have some effect at the next session of Congress that I will modify the motion by inserting the words "during this session of Congress" after the clause with reference to reporting back the civil-rights bill.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to put a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion be adopted will there be any right to make an objection which will carry to the Committee of the Whole any bill appropriating money or property?

The SPEAKER. That right will not exist; but every bill will be subject to the disposition of the majority of the House, either to be passed, to be referred, or to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the House adjourn. I do not think we are prepared to adopt any such proposition as this.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 84, noes 75.

Mr. POLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I rise to submit a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

To the collector of the district of New York, $12,000.

To the collectors of the districts of Boston and Charlestown, Massachusetts, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, each $8,000.

And the Senate agree to the same.

ELLIS H. ROBERTS,
L. A. SHELDON,
FERNANDO WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SCOTT,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POLAND. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The rules require, even during the pendency of a motion to adjourn, the reception of a conference report, but the rule must be construed only to have the report come in and not to have it considered. The House will now determine whether it will adjourn or not.

Mr. KASSON. I hope there will be no objection to the motion being again submitted to the House without tellers and without the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BECK. Does the gentleman only propose to take a vote on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not propose to do more than demand the previous question and take the vote, unless some gentleman may wish to ask a question in regard to the effect of the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BECK. I only propose to say while there are many things here I am opposed to, yet I think it is the best thing we can get.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN W. REYNOLDS.

Mr. HERNDON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first amendment of the Senate to the said bill, and agree to the second amendment with an amendment, namely: Strike out of said second amendment the word "fifteen" and in lieu thereof insert the word "sixty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. S. HERNDON,
N. B. BRADLEY,
J. ORR,
Managers on the part of the House.
T. J. ROBERTSON,
D. D. PRATT,
T. M. NORWOOD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HERNDON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. HERNDON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn the Chair thinks is not in order, as one motion already has been made to adjourn pending the motion for a suspension of the rules to go to the business on the Speaker's table, and under the rule only one motion to adjourn is in order pending a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. POLAND. And that motion was voted down.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to adjourn is not in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman's motion to suspend the rules must have been by construction postponed while the report of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] from the committee of conference, was being acted on. It is not possible for the House to act on two things at once.

Mr. POLAND. We do it, though. It seems to me it is clear that this is no new proceeding. The conference report was interjected.

The SPEAKER. There has been a rather peculiar series of events, but the Chair will show how it happened: Under the practice of the House reports of conference committees are received at any time, even during the pendency of a motion to adjourn or a motion to adjourn over. Therefore the Chair had no election but to receive the reports of conference committees. Rule 161 says:

Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House do now adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced, he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

Mr. POTTER. But, Mr. Speaker, pending the motion to adjourn the conference report came in. As I now understand the Chair, the House was bound, even if objection should be made, to consider the conference report. But some gentleman did make the objection and the Speaker put the motion to adjourn. But we all understood that was a motion merely——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York does not apprehend the statement made by the Chair. The Chair has heretofore ruled that the highest privilege given to a conference report merely goes to its being read, not to its being debated; and as soon as the conference report was read the Chair rose and stated that the vote on the motion to adjourn, on a division, was 84 ayes and 75 noes. It was then for the House to determine whether they would certify that vote. There was an expression of opinion that it should be again submitted. The Chair submitted it, and by a large negative vote the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The conference report was voted on after the motion to adjourn was disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; but if the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is still pending——

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Will the Chair allow me a moment to complete my statement upon this point?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The conference report was voted upon. There was a little debate with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and the previous question was seconded on agreeing to the report. There was a debate and a vote. Now if that action was had in regard to one conference report, it might be had in regard to two or three or more.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; in regard to a hundred.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Does the Chair then rule that after a motion to suspend the rules has been made and a motion to adjourn has been voted down, ten successive conference reports may come in, be read, debated, have the previous question ordered on them and be voted on, and that the House cannot adjourn without disposing of that motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. What is suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] does not present the slightest difficulty; because the House, if it wants to adjourn, need not second the motion to suspend the rules. It does not embarrass the House at all.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The House may not want to vote against the suspension of the rules, but may desire to adjourn and postpone the question as to the suspension of the rules till next day.

The SPEAKER. This is a question which never before arose. But the Chair is always willing to rule in favor of an adjournment, although he believes that in doing so he rules against the literal meaning of the rule. The Chair will submit the question on the motion to adjourn in consideration of the fact that some misunderstanding has arisen in the minds of various members as to the true position of the pending question.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, that the House adjourn, there were—ayes 83, noes 92.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 73.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 88, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bromberg, Buffinton, Burchard, Burrows, Benjamin F. Thomas, Waddell, Walls, John M. S. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—66.

So the motion was agreed to.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

The SPEAKER said: The Chair does not regard the point as of much practical importance, but he desires to say, in order that it may go into the RECORD, that in submitting this motion it was his judgment that it was not in order. He submitted it rather than insist on his own construction of the rule, because there seemed to be a misunderstanding in the House in regard to it.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that this motion may be regarded as one for a recess instead of an adjournment so as to save the session for this evening.

Mr. SPEER. I object.

The House (at three o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) then adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of workingmen in Marietta Furnace, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, for the restoration of the 10 per cent. duty on iron and steel, and for free banking, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the remonstrance of merchants, bankers, and business men of Lancaster City and County, Pennsylvania, against the imposition of a tax of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on sales of bullion, coin, stocks, bonds, and other securities, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: The petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Weaver, of Owl Run, Fauquier County, Virginia, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky: The petition of G. H. Wornok, John Doty, C. Culbertson, B. L. Biggs, David Williams, John Kidd, Charles Boss, William J. Wilson, and a large number of other workingmen in the Buffalo and Laurel Furnace Works in Greenup County, Kentucky, for the restoration of 10 per cent. of duties on iron, steel, &c., for free banking, and for such protection by Congress as will relieve the distressed condition of the workingmen of the country, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 19, 1874.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NEVADA COUNTY NARROW-GAUGE RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 3309) granting to the Nevada County Narrow-Gauge Railroad Company a right of way through the public lands for a railroad.

Mr. SARGENT. That same bill was reported favorably as a Senate bill by the Committee on Railroads of the Senate and has been on the Calendar for some time. It is a local road, twenty miles long only, in my own county. I ask that the bill may be passed by unanimous consent.

The bill was read three times, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask leave to call up a House bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. WASHBURN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of the abolition of the law concerning compulsory pilotage at Hell Gate; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOGY presented five petitions of merchants, importers, bankers, and business men of Saint Louis, Missouri, protesting against the passage of the twenty-ninth section of the tariff bill which imposes a tax of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SCHURZ presented the petition of Rob. zum Hagen, M. D., of Saint Louis, Missouri, praying an amendment to the homestead law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask unanimous consent to consider a bill——

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise with a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in the nature of an objection. If there be no further petitions, reports of committees are in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution of the Legislature of West Virginia in favor of a geological survey of West Virginia by the Government of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORT ON CUSTOMS AND TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print copies of the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, have instructed me to report back the same with an amendment. The amended resolution strikes out all copies for the use of Congress and limits it to one thousand for the use of the Department.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was considered.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out "five thousand copies, three thousand for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the Senate and," and strike out the words "and distribution by;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed of the special report of Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, on customs and tariff legislation of the United States, with the appendices, including the tariff acts approved respectively May 1, 1872, and June 6, 1872, and a tabular statement of the rates of duties under said acts and other statutes now in force, one thousand bound copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the same committee to report back the resolution for printing the Coast Survey report. In accordance with the expressed wish of the Senate, we have left out all copies for the use of the House and Senate; and as this Coast Survey report is a matter of very great importance, and the establishment is maintained at considerable expense and is of comparatively little use unless ship-owners, navigators, and others can see the charts, we have not reduced the number, but have left it at three thousand, a very moderate number, to be distributed by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey. If Senators think that is too much they can move to reduce it.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1873, three thousand extra copies for the use of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator if these are to be stamped to go through the mail?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are to be disposed of just like any other documents. I was not able to keep the run of the provisions in the bill on that subject which was acted on the other day, being engaged in my committee-room in an investigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Departments now use stamps on documents and frank them in that way.

Mr. ANTHONY. This resolution makes no provision on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the law now the Departments can frank the documents printed for them by putting on a stamp. That ought to be corrected.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can we correct it in this resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should have moved first that this report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey be printed. I make that motion now.

The motion was agreed to.

CRETACEOUS FLORA OF THE WEST.

Mr. ANTHONY. I reported the other day a resolution from the Committee on Printing to print the report of Professor Hayden on the Cretaceous Flora of the West, the expense of which has all been incurred except the very trifling cost of printing the letter-press, about $600. There is no provision for any distribution to members of Congress. I hope that resolution may be now taken up and passed. I understand there is no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following House resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed and bound twenty-five hundred copies in quarto (uniform of the series) of Professor Hayden's report on the Cretaceous Flora of the West, one thousand copies for the Department of the Interior, one thousand copies for the Smithsonian Institution, and five hundred copies for the office of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories.

The resolution was concurred in.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. OGLESBY. The RECORD of yesterday morning shows that the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] "from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3668) for the relief of Smith & Matthews, of Illinois, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely," but the evidence upon which the claim was based was not before the committee when they made the report. The claim is only for three or four hundred dollars. I therefore move now to reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

No. 884) to amend sections 245, 246, 247, 251, and 253 of an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department, approved June 8, 1872, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 692) for the relief of William Chester, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of J. E. D. Couzins, praying compensation for the arrest and detention of counterfeiters of United States notes, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 958) for the relief of J. E. D. Couzins, of Saint Louis, Missouri.

The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3188) granting a pension to Letta Bagley, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3621) to abolish the western district of Arkansas, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2695) for the relief of Ely Cameron, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FENTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3023) for the relief of Andrew Mason, to report it back with a slight amendment. I desire to put this bill upon its passage. It is but seven lines in all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, and insist on the regular order.

Mr. KELLY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 721) for the restoration of public lands in Fort Sedgwick reservation, in Colorado and Nebraska, to settlement and entry, to report it back without amendment, and I should like to have it put on its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object. I merely wish to say in explanation of my evidently very bad conduct that my object is that when we get through with resolutions I may ask the Senate to go to the Calendar of unobjected cases, so that we may go through with all those bills with which everybody is satisfied, and thus we shall do more good than we can by snatching up a bill at a time now. That is my apology if I need to make one.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3584) to grant title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NORWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2900) granting a pension to Josephine D. Thomas, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 330) granting a pension to Mrs. Penelope C. Brown, of Tennessee, widow of Stephen C. Brown, late a private of Company C, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2673) to restore the name of Hannah B. Eaton, of Kingsville, Ohio, to the pension-roll, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1403) granting a pension to Jehu Baker, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the draught of a bill providing for the appointment of a commissioner to ascertain the rights of subjects of Great Britain to land in the territory which was the subject of the award of the Emperor of Germany under the treaties of 1846 and 1871 between the United States and Great Britain, and have instructed me to report the bill. The reference came to the committee through papers received from the State Department.

The bill (S. No. 959) providing for the appointment of a commissioner to ascertain the rights of subjects of Great Britain to lands in the territory which was the subject of the award of the Emperor of Germany under the treaties of 1846 and 1871 between the United States and Great Britain was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3339) relating to the disposition of certain lands to be reclaimed in sections 14, 23, and 26, in township 16 north, of range 20, in the county of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 904) to provide revenue from the sale of public lands, have directed me to report it back and recommend that it be indefinitely postponed. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar. I submit at the same time a minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar and the report printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 55) to authorize the construction of a public building at Topeka, Kansas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3177) for the relief of DeWitt C. Chipman, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 570) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for the better protection of the Indian tribes therein, and for other purposes, to submit a report, accompanied by the following resolution; and I give notice that I shall ask for the consideration of the resolution to-morrow at the expiration of the morning hour.

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be authorized to sit during the recess and to investigate as to the manner of the execution of the laws of the United States in the Indian Territory; also as to the wants and sentiments of the inhabitants of said Territory, and the advisability of creating a territorial form of government for said Indian country; said committee to have power to take testimony and send for persons and papers; and that the expenses attending this investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the said committee.

The report and resolution were ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE LEVEE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River to report the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River be authorized to sit during the recess and to investigate and report upon the condition of the levees of the Mississippi River, and also upon the propriety of the Government of the United States assuming charge and control of the same, with a view to their completion and maintenance; and that the expenses attending this investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the select committee aforesaid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very important subject, and I think it had better lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the Senator from Vermont object?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better lie over as it involves very important considerations.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire at the request of others who feel more interest in it than I do to correct, through the only medium through which it can be corrected, a statement which appears in most of the morning papers this morning. In the debate which occurred upon the moiety bill yesterday I am represented as saying that the moieties received by the officers at Philadelphia amounted in the last year to $30,000. It is not the fact that that amount was received, and I did not so state, as the record of our proceedings shows.

COTTON PERMITS.

Mr. ALCORN. I ask leave to call up the resolution I submitted on the 29th of May. It will take but a little time to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate with copies of all cotton permits issued by Presidents Lincoln and Johnson, also with the names of agents appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase cotton in the Southern States, with copies of the forms used by said purchasing agents, and with a copy of any instructions from time to time issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, or officers under him, to said purchasing agents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not insist upon taking that up for passage. If he wishes to have it referred to the Committee on Finance for inquiry into the expense of this matter and the necessities of the Government in respect to it before this order is made, I should have no objection; but if he wishes to take it up for consideration with a view to having it adopted without being referred to any committee whatever, I hope the Senate will not take it up, but will allow us to proceed with the regular order of the Calendar of unobjected cases in order to dispose of as much business as possible.

Mr. ALCORN. I do not think it is necessary to refer this resolution to the Committee on Finance, and if the Senate will take it up and pass upon it it will occupy but a little time. If the Senate after it has heard me for five minutes votes down the resolution I will say no more about it. I only want to present the case and the necessity for this resolution, and refer it to the judgment of the Senate as to whether we shall be entitled to have the information or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi an amendment, to call only for the papers not already printed. There have been several volumes on that subject.

Mr. ALCORN. Well, I am willing; "all that have not been printed." All that have been printed already I am willing as a matter of course should be excluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution is not up yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

Mr. ALCORN. An amendment is suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It cannot be amended until we conclude to consider it.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. ALCORN. I will add a proviso that nothing shall be reported that has heretofore been transmitted and printed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope that resolution will not be taken up at this stage of the session, for it involves matters of great consequence; but if it is taken up, I shall ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALCORN. It has been laid over for several days.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope it will not be taken up. We have other matters to attend to of more consequence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was not agreed to.

THE DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. MERRIMON. Is the morning business over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Resolutions are in order. [A pause.] There seems to be no further morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to proceed to the Calendar of unobjected cases.

Mr. BOREMAN. I have a resolution which I wish to offer, or rather a motion to make. It is to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was passed. I move to reconsider that vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the motion?

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir. I make this motion in order that I may understand a proposition in this bill which I regard as a very important one, if I apprehend it correctly. This bill had been reported but a very short time before action was taken upon it by this body. I admit that I had not read the bill when it came up for consideration yesterday. I listened to the reading of it by the Secretary, but in the hurried transaction of business here in the latter part of the session, of course it is very difficult to hear everything that is read at the desk. I find that in the fourth section of this bill it is provided—

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and maintaining the credit thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, there shall be levied upon all real estate in said District, except that belonging to the United States and to the District of Columbia, and that used for educational and charitable purposes, the following taxes, namely.

If I understand this provision correctly, it is intended to inaugurate in this District the taxation of a class of property which has never hitherto in this country, so far as I know, been taxed; that is, the property belonging to all the churches located within the District. If I had noticed this provision yesterday, I should have asked for a vote by yeas and nays on a motion to strike it out to see whether the Senate is prepared at this particular time and upon this particular bill to inaugurate a system of taxation which has never hitherto, so far as I know, been imposed in the United States.

I wish now to learn whether I give a correct construction to this provision in the bill. I trust that the chairman of the committee will explain to the Senate what the purpose of the committee is and whether the construction I give this clause, that it is intended to tax church property, is the correct one.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from West Virginia, I would say that it was the intention of the committee to exempt only real estate used for educational purposes and belonging to charitable institutions. The Congress of the United States three or four or perhaps five years ago passed an act exempting in this District all church property from taxation. The church property amounts to about one-fifteenth of the real estate in this District; and the vast improvements that have been made in this District have been made in and around church property at the expense of the property-holders living upon the street to a large degree and at the expense of the whole city, amounting in the aggregate to nearly $20,000,000.

The committee found themselves in a position where it became necessary to tax the property of this District to relieve it from its embarrassment. The council of the local Legislature in this District recommended that church property be taxed. The house of delegates have recommended that church property be taxed for this purpose. It is a temporary tax. It only applies to the year 1875. We have submitted it to a joint committee of the two Houses for the purpose of readjusting taxation in this District, as well as every other question involved in it; but we believe that all the real estate in this District should bear its proportion of the temporary burden required to lift up this District from its insolvency and embarrassment, and therefore we put in this provision, and I believe the Senator from West Virginia gives it the proper and correct construction.

Mr. STEWART. I hope no motion to reconsider this bill will be entertained. If it is opened once our work will be lost. I do not believe that on the whole it can be improved. All these matters were considered, and considered in great detail and at length; and I wish to say here that I have heard considerable complaint about this 3 per cent. tax. It is only on real estate; and this city has been vastly improved and the people have been largely benefited by these improvements. The tax is no more burdensome here than it is in many cities outside of Washington. It is for improvements that have enhanced the property of all the citizens here. It is an improvement tax. Other cities have not regarded such a tax as objectionable. If 3 per cent. alone were levied on their real estate they would not complain. The people of this District must not complain. They cannot have a beautiful city without bearing their proportion; and if they do that the people of the United States will say that Congress shall be liberal and shall bear its just proportion, we having laid the city out on a scale of magnificence that it is impossible for the people here to maintain alone. But when the people here have done their duty, and their full duty, they can call upon the people of the United States through Congress to contribute in a just proportion to make this the capital city. We have provided for an investigation of what shall be the just proportion; but in the mean time the people here must stand their fair share.

As to church property it is an open question whether it would not be better to have that property taxed as private property is. There is a difference of opinion among the churches on this question as a general proposition. But in this case when the churches own large quantities of real estate that they are not using for immediate purposes, and it has been largely enhanced in value by these improvements, this special tax should be paid by them with cheerfulness. I believe it will be. I do not believe any church will complain of this. It does not touch the general question whether church property should be taxed at all times or not; but it reaches the question whether church property held for speculative purposes, held for its enhancement in value, having been so enhanced by these improvements, shall pay its proportion of the cost of the improvements. That is the question. The committee considered it. It is no new question. We do not pass now upon the general question of whether church property shall be taxed; but we say in this special instance in Washington, it having been improved at large expense and enhanced largely in value, there is no way of meeting the expense except by taxing the whole property. We cannot exempt one-tenth of the property of the District from taxation and meet the expense by any appropriation that Congress will probably make in addition to the taxation that the people must pay. These questions have all been considered, and I hope the bill will not be reconsidered for any consideration.

Mr. SARGENT. I did what I could, as is known to the Senate, last evening to lead with courage a somewhat small minority. I made then all the fight I desire to make on the bill. I trust the bill will meet the expectations of the able committee who report it. I do not believe at this late hour we ought to reopen the question again, and I therefore desire to say only that I shall vote against the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BOREMAN. I do not propose to avoid the subject of taxation in this District. That is a matter that cannot be avoided, I apprehend. The debt of the District has to be paid either by taxation of the District or by appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, or in some other way that I am not advised of at this time. The only point I made was in regard to inaugurating a system of taxation of church property in this District, when it was not, so far as I knew, the practice in any of the States of the Union. If it is so I am not advised of it. I wish simply now to have a vote of the Senate upon the question of reconsideration. I do not know that the Senate will reconsider this vote; but I give notice that if they do I shall move to add to the exemption in the bill "property held for church purposes," so that the exemptions shall include not only property "belonging to the United States and to the District of Columbia and that used for educational and charitable purposes," but also "property held for church purposes." I should like to have the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have but a very few words to say, for I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate upon this matter.

This subject was fully considered in the committee, and nothing but the absolute necessity to raise a sufficient sum to meet the expenses of this District until a new frame of government can be established and the wishes, so far as we know, of the people of this District, certainly as manifested by the expression of their Legislature, to which allusion has been made by the Senator from Iowa, induced us to report the section to which attention has now been called, and we received not one single remonstrance against it. Although it was known that the bill contained that provision, although the bill has been read perhaps by nine-tenths of the people who can read in the city of Washington, and has been the subject of review in all the newspapers, and this particular subject of taxing church property has been brought to the attention of the public by a resolution of the District Legislature, not one single remonstrance has been received against that provision of the bill.

I think any one who will make himself acquainted with the amount of church property that is held in this city, a great portion of which is not used for church purposes at all, but great blocks that are vacant and that have been improved in every way in which property can be improved, by the amelioration of the streets, the construction of sewers, and everything of that kind, without paying a single cent of taxes—every one will say that under the peculiar circumstances of the case these institutions should come in and help to lift this burden off the people of the District. I think there is no complaint about that at all.

Now I wish to submit a question, and that is, whether a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table is in order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in order, and I hope the Senator will make it.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to say one word.

Mr. THURMAN. I would make it, but my friend from Indiana wishes to speak. I ask him will be renew the motion?

Mr. MORTON. I will yield the floor to you to do it.

Mr. President, I was not here yesterday when this bill passed. I have been called upon by several gentlemen, residents of this District, gentlemen who have not sympathized with this investigation, and who are friends of the existing government and of Governor Shepherd, who have made certain representations to me which I think were important and deserving of attention in regard to the tax levied by this bill. This bill provides for a tax of 3 per cent. upon real estate. I understand there is an existing tax of 2 per cent. that has not been paid also levied upon the same real estate to be collected upon the same assessment—an assessment made last year at a large valuation, in many cases larger than the property would sell for now in the present condition of the times and of the prices of property. They also represent that very many of the property-holders of the city have large assessments unpaid against them for street improvements, in some cases equal to half the value of the property, in other cases perhaps equal to the full value of the property. These gentlemen say that these two taxes, in all 5 per cent., together with the tax for the street improvements, will, in a great many cases, amount to the confiscation of the property; that the small property-holders, men in moderate circumstances, will not be able to pay. They think that great oppression, suffering, and distress will result from the provision in this bill in regard to taxation. They fully concur with the bill in other respects, that the present government ought to be abolished, and are satisfied with the general provisions of the bill, but they say that from their knowledge of the condition of the District, and of the indebtedness of the people and the general depression of the times, in their opinion this bill would amount to the confiscation of a large amount of property in this District.

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly, precisely such representations as have been so clearly stated by the Senator from Indiana have been made. They were made to the committee. They were considered by the committee. But what are the facts? Why, sir, in the city in which I live, which is the lightest taxed city in Ohio, we pay in round numbers 3 per cent. on all the personal as well as real property; in the city of Toledo they pay 4 per cent. on all the real and personal property. There is not a city in Ohio of any magnitude in which there is not a tax of about 3 per cent. upon the whole personal as well as real property. It is altogether a mistake to say that this is a tax which cannot be borne. Why, sir, this bill relieves these people of two millions of taxation already levied upon them at one sweep. It lifts off two millions of taxes at one single dash of the pen from these people, and it is quite useless to say that they cannot bear this tax.

Mr. MORTON. I will ask my friend what is the gross amount of unpaid taxes or unpaid assessments for street improvements?

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot tell exactly. It is distributed into five payments. I will ask the Senator from Iowa what is the amount of unpaid street assessments?

Mr. ALLISON. Including the sewer tax and the unpaid assessments for the streets, there are over $4,000,000 due.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the gross amount of the street assessments?

Mr. ALLISON. There are $2,400,000 of street assessments, to which ought to be added $1,050,000, which have already been disposed of, making over $3,000,000 for street assessments alone.

Mr. THURMAN. Only one-fifth of that fell due this year.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true.

Mr. THURMAN. But I do not wish to take up time. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not that carry the bill with it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; that has been decided over and over again.

Mr. THURMAN. It was decided by Mr. Colfax long ago that such a motion does not carry the bill with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. It does not carry the bill with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. The question is on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now renew the motion to proceed to the Calendar of unobjected cases under what is called the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Before we proceed to the Calendar I desire to make a motion. There are quite a number of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs action upon which would be a great relief, some to the Indians, and some to the settlers on these Indian lands. I will ask once more that the Senate give me an opportunity to present these bills so that they may be acted upon at some particular hour, and if no better hour is suggested I will name six o'clock this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that at six o'clock this afternoon the Senate will proceed to consider bills reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel obliged to object. The Judiciary Committee is in the same category, and if we can go through the Calendar of unobjected cases we shall dispose probably of a good many of the bills of the Indian Committee and a good many of ours, and of the bills of every other committee. It is impossible at this stage in the session justly to set aside any time to any particular committee. It does not do justice to the rest of the Calendar, in my opinion.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Other committees have had hours set apart for them since I first made this application.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a very bad practice indeed.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It may be a very bad practice, but I do not know how otherwise we are to secure the interests of those represented by this committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You would have got some of those bills passed by this time if you had let us go on with the Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the Senate to take up a bill which is No. 691 in the order of business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the first bill on the Calendar has been already called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar is before the Senate.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. STEVENSON. I gave notice yesterday that I should move today to take a recess until half past seven o'clock for the purpose of considering House bill No. 2190, the pension bill relating to the soldiers of the war of 1812, and I now make that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that motion in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought there was a later order which declared that we should have a continuous session from eleven to six o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The later order was that the Senate would sit from eleven to six o'clock. The Senator from Kentucky moves to take a recess from six until half past seven o'clock, which motion is in order under the former order of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I respectfully submit that the motion to take a recess under the former order must be a motion to take a recess at the time when the motion is made. But I do not care anything about that; the Senate is full, and I would as soon the question should be taken now. I waive any point of that kind for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule says "that during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess." The motion is strictly in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say, by unanimous consent, as I suppose this motion is not debatable, that to take a recess for the purpose of considering this evening the pension bill which the Senator refers to is to take a recess which when you come to the measure involves the expenditure of a great many millions of dollars for a purpose which will require a good deal of debate before I am convinced that it ought to be done. Therefore I hope at this stage of the session that the Senate will not take a recess for any such purpose. In fact I may say as a point of order that that would be equivalent to making a special order, and you cannot take a recess for that purpose. You may take the recess, and then the Senator must take his chance about getting up the bill if he can. I hope we shall not take such a recess.

Mr. STEVENSON. Admitting the proposition of the Senator from Vermont that this may be in the nature of a special order, I only want to give notice that if we do take the recess it will be for the purpose of taking up this pension bill at the evening session. It may require a good deal of money. I will not deny the proposition of the Senator from Vermont that it may require millions of money; but to what more praiseworthy object could money be given than to the relief of the poor widows whose husbands lost their lives in the defense of their country? Many of them are about passing away, and from every part of this country petitions come up that this bare act of justice to the widows of these brave men shall be done. We can build in this city of Washington a single building that will cost $6,000,000, which is about the proposed cost of the new Congressional Library; we can give millions of money for the improvement of this city, and yet when it comes to a bare meed of justice to these poor widows, gentlemen think it is too expensive. But I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate. I hope we shall have a full vote on the question whether we shall meet here at half past seven o'clock, and if we do meet I shall move to take up the pension bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question. I want to determine now whether the Senate on the last day but one of the session is going into the matter of paying pensions to a large body of our fellow-citizens in the South, whose last achievement was being engaged in the rebellion. I want to have it distinctly understood and find out what the majority of the Senate wish to do at this time. As the question is not open to debate, I do not care about speaking upon it.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. So do I.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending the regular order of business I suppose this motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is in order and the Secretary will call the roll.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 34, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Carpenter, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hitchcock, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, Washburn, West, and Wright—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones, Logan, Pease, Robertson, and Wadleigh—18.

So the motion of Mr. STEVENSON was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust the Senator from Michigan will consent to let us take up the conference report on the currency bill and have a vote upon it. I have no wish to say a word upon the subject and I do not suppose anybody else has.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that had better lie over a little while. I have not had time to examine it myself.

Mr. WRIGHT. All I want is to have the question disposed of as soon as possible. If it can be understood that it will be taken up in a short time hence——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will withdraw my objection at the end of an hour from this time; and beyond that I merely wish to give notice that to-morrow morning, if we are all here, I shall again ask the Senate to go to the Calendar of unobjected cases and shall insist upon the regular order from this time to then.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator from Michigan to give way to the Utah bill, laying aside his bill informally.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think we had better stick to the regular order.

TRANSFER OF GOLD BARS.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a Senate bill on the table which has been returned from the House of Representatives with a small amendment, upon which there is a necessity for immediate action. I therefore ask to have it taken up and acted upon now.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 784) authorizing the transfer of gold mint bars from the bullion fund of the assay office, New York, to the assistant treasurer at New York, which was to insert after the words "coin at," in line 8, the words "market value."
